serts that in the present case Gould, "without any authority whatsoever, intermingled the funds and the real property of Espinosa's general estate with the trust estate," and that subsequently the administrator of Espinosa's estate, "with the assistance and advice" of Gould, intermingled the trust property with "the general estate in probate" so that there was "no property, real or personal, left in the trust estate whereby plaintiff and appellant could enforce his claim for his compensation against the property of the trust, * * *" and that therefore he "was forced to file his claim against the general estate of Salvador Espinosa, deceased. * * *" But appellant has not pointed out, nor have we been able to find any evidence whatever to substantiate his assertion, that the property of the two estates was so intermingled, or that any part of the trust property was transferred to or included within the assets of the estate of Espinosa. It is true that the total number of acres conveyed by Gould to the beneficiaries was less than was called for in said trust instrument, but this is readily accounted for by the fact, as found in the partition proceeding, that Espinosa had mistakenly included in the trust estate 212.18 acres more than he owned; and this mistake was corrected by the decree in partition, which became final and conclusive in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

[2] Appellant's further contention that respondent's answer admits the estate's liability for the payment to the trustee's fees is also without merit, it being apparent that the denials set forth in the answer are legally sufficient to raise that issue. The objection appellant urges against the validity of the findings and decree in the partition proceeding, whereunder his purported appointment as trustee was declared of no effect and Gould was appointed as trustee, is not the proper subject of consideration here, because it constitutes a collateral attack upon a proceeding which in the absence of an appeal became final and conclusive; and even though it be held that the action of the court in the respect above mentioned was erroneous, the situation with reference to the source of payment of the fees appellant claims to be due him as trustee would not be altered thereby.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HARRIS. (Cr. 1538.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 20, 1929.

- 1. Embezzlement $\Rightarrow$ 44(1)—Evidence showing amount collected for freight charges by defendant cashier was never turned in held to sustain conviction of grand theft.

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence showing beyond reasonable doubt that amount collected by defendant as cashier of steamship company for freight charges was never turned in to company held sufficient to sustain conviction.

- 2. Embezzlement $\Rightarrow$ 23—Neither intent to restore nor actual restoration of money appropriated would constitute defense to charge of grand theft (Pen. Code, §§ 490a (added by St. 1927, p. 1047), 512, 513).

Where cashier in freight department of steamship company collected account, but failed to turn it in to company, neither intent to restore nor actual restoration of money would constitute defense to charge of grand theft, in view of Pen. Code, § 490a, added by St. 1927, p. 1047, and sections 512, 513, in substance providing that intent to restore property embezzled is no ground of defense or mitigation of punishment, and that voluntary restoration may be ground in mitigation of punishment.

- 3. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1170(4)—Error, if any, in not permitting defendant on cross-examination to ask whether check was cashed, when witness and defendant went to bank, held not prejudicial.

In prosecution for grand theft, refusing to allow defendant on cross-examination to ask witness, against objection, whether he understood that check appropriated by defendant was cashed by defendant at time witness and defendant went to bank together, was not prejudicial error, if any, where witness testified that he did not enter bank with defendant, and was permitted to relate fully conversation between them.

- 4. Embezzlement $\Rightarrow$ 44(5)—Entry of check in cashier's handwriting on company's books held sufficient to justify conclusion that cashier, charged with grand theft, received check.

In prosecution for grand theft by cashier, whose duty it was to accept payment of freight charges from various shippers, entry of amount of check alleged to be appropriated in cashier's handwriting on company's books was sufficient to justify jury in concluding that defendant received check.

- 5. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 400(8)—Testimony of bank auditor that check alleged to be taken in grand theft prosecution did not appear on deposit slips was not error.

In prosecution for grand theft by cashier of steamship company, authorized to collect freight charges, permitting auditor of bank with which company deposited funds to testify over objection that he had examined deposit slips covering period in question, and did not find amount of check alleged to be taken by cashier, was not error, since testimony was relevant to question whether check was ever deposited by cashier to credit of employer.

- 6. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 562—Although jury acquitted defendant on one charge and convicted on another, evidence was sufficient to support conviction, though transactions were similar.

Where cashier of steamship company was charged with two offenses, namely, theft of two sums of money, and was convicted on first charge and acquitted on second, though transactions were similar, evidence was sufficient to support conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

James W. Harris was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Boyd Oliver, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. An information was filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, charging the defendant with two offenses, namely, the theft of two sums of money from the Robert Dollar Company, which is a corporation engaged in carrying passengers and freight. He was convicted upon the first charge and acquitted on the second. The appeal is from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial.

It is contended that the verdict is unsupported, that the conduct of the trial judge was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant, and that the court erred in its rulings upon the admissibility of certain evidence.

The defendant was employed as a cashier in the freight department of the company at San Francisco. It was his duty to accept and account for payments of freight charges from the various shippers. The count in the information upon which he was convicted charged him with the theft of $954.98. The evidence shows that on February 7, 1928, this amount was due the company for freight from S. M. Archbald, and so charged upon its books; that on that day Archbald, who had received a statement of account from the company, brought to its office for the purpose of paying the account a cashier's check for $1,010.92, which had been issued and made payable to him by the American Trust Company of San Francisco. Defendant's assistant was present at the time; the defendant being temporarily absent. The check was indorsed and presented, but, being for more than the amount due, neither the assistant nor the defendant was authorized to pay the difference to Archbald. It was the duty of both under such circumstances to procure this amount from their superior officers, either in cash or in the form of a check payable to the debtor. On this occasion the assistant stamped the statement rendered as paid, but declined to accept the check. While the transaction was in progress, the defendant returned and the check was delivered to him. Thereupon, accompanied by Archbald, he went to the Pacific National Bank, whose office was situated on the first floor of the building. The defendant entered the bank, while Archbald remained at the door. Shortly thereafter the defendant returned with a sum in cash equal to the difference between the charge and the amount of the check, which upon their return to the office of the company the defendant paid to Archbald, who, according to his testimony, also received at that time the receipted statement. The evidence shows that the defendant did not cause the check to be cashed, but that the same was indorsed by him and deposited to his own account in the bank mentioned.

The evidence further discloses that on the same day a check for $1,019.14, payable to the company, was received from Mitsui & Co., Inc., in payment of certain freight charges entered against the Southern Pacific Company and Overland Freight Company, but in the payment of which it appears that the maker of the check was interested. The amount of this check was entered upon the books of the company in the handwriting of the defendant to the credit of two debit charges against Archbald, one being the charge above referred to for $954.98, the other being for $112.50, and no credit therefor was given either to Mitsui & Co., Inc., the Overland Freight Company, or the Southern Pacific Company. Defendant contends that the discrepancy shown might have been due to errors in bookkeeping, and, further, that it does not appear that the amount paid by Archbald was not received by the company.

[1, 2] That mistake was an element in the transaction was, in view of the circumstances, improbable. The question was one for the jury, and their conclusion to the contrary is sustained by the evidence. The testimony of an auditor employed by the company shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount Archbald paid was never turned in to the company. Moreover, no intent to restore nor an actual restoration would constitute a defense to the charge. Pen. Code, §§ 490a (added by St. 1927, p. 1047), 512, 513.

The record shows nothing which reasonably justifies the contention that the conduct of the trial court was prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, or that he was not given a fair and impartial trial.

[3] The witness Archbald was asked by the defendant on cross-examination whether he understood that his check was cashed by the defendant at the time they together visited the Pacific National Bank. An objection to the question, on the ground that it called for a conclusion of the witness, was sustained. The error, if any, was not prejudicial, as the witness, who testified that he did not enter the bank with the defendant, was permitted to relate fully the conversation between them on that occasion.

[4] Defendant also claims that the prosecution failed to show that he received the check from Mitsui & Co., Inc. The entry of the amount in his handwriting on the books of the company was sufficient to justify the conclusion of the jury in this respect.

[5] The auditor of a bank with which the company deposited its funds testified over objection that he had examined the deposit slips of the company, which he produced in court, covering a period which included and followed February 7, 1928, and that the amount of the Archbald charge, namely, $954.98, did not appear thereon. This testimony was relevant to the question whether the amount paid by Archbald was ever deposited by the defendant to the credit of the company, and was properly admitted.

[6] There is no merit in the further contention that, the jury having acquitted the defendant on the second charge, it follows that the evidence supporting the first—the transactions being similar—was insufficient. It is our conclusion, after a review of the whole record, that the findings of the jury are fully supported, and that no error is disclosed which can fairly be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇨10—Common law relating to criminal matters is in force, in absence of statutory provisions at variance therewith.

Common law relating to criminal matters is in force as law, in absence of statutory provisions at variance therewith.

2. Criminal law ⇨1216(6)—Sentence of misdemeanor convicted in municipal court held to commence from issuance and delivery of commitment, excluding detention pending appeal (Pen. Code, § 1470, and § 1461a as added by St. 1925, p. 943).

Where defendant convicted of misdemeanor in municipal court was sentenced to seven months in city jail, and pending appeal remained in custody, on affirmance of conviction defendant was not entitled to credit for time served while appeal was pending, but sentence commenced from time commitment was issued and delivered in accordance with Pen. Code, § 1470, since appeal operated by its own inherent force as a supersedeas of all proceedings on judgment and such rule was applicable to conviction in municipal court in view of Pen. Code, § 1461a, as added by St. 1925, p. 943.

Habeas corpus by Marshall Hudspeth, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles to secure release of petitioner from custody. Prisoner remanded.

M. H. Broyles, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Lloyd S. Nix, City Prosecutor, and Joe W. Matherly and F. W. Fellows, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On petition of the applicant a writ of habeas corpus was issued and served. Return was duly made and the matter is submitted for decision.

In the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles petitioner was convicted on a misdemeanor charge, and on January 18, 1929, was sentenced to a term of seven months in the city jail. Immediately he gave notice of appeal, and the court ordered that he be admitted to bail in the sum of $2,500. No undertaking of bail was filed, and the defendant remained in custody during the pendency of the appeal and has continuously been in custody of the chief of police and in the city jail since the 18th day of January. The judgment was affirmed, and a certified copy of the order of affirmance having been filed in the municipal court, a commitment was issued and delivered to the chief of police on the 11th day of March, 1929. This was in accordance with section 1470, Penal Code, except that the commitment went to the chief of police and not to the sheriff.

[1, 2] Petitioner claims that he has been imprisoned under the judgment since the 18th day of January, and that therefore his term of seven months' imprisonment has been completed. Respondent contends that said seven months' term did not begin until the commitment was issued as above stated. If the period of time while the appeal was pending is to be computed as part of the time of sentence served, the petitioner is entitled to his liberty; otherwise, he should be remanded to custody. It was the rule at common law that a writ of error operated by its own inherent force as a supersedeas of all proceedings on the judgment. 3 Cor. Jur. p. 1272. The common law is in force as law in this state in the absence of statutory provisions at variance with the common law. There does not appear to be any statutory provision in this state, either in the Penal Code or elsewhere, changing the common-law rule as to the effect of an appeal or writ of error upon the right of enforcement of a judgment of a justice's court or municipal court in a misdemeanor case. Accordingly it was held in People v. Treadwell, 66 Cal. 400, 5 P. 636, that an appeal from judgment of a justice's court operated as a suspension of the judgment of the lower court for all purposes, and that during the pendency of the appeal there was no judgment of the justice's court presently capable of being carried into effect. It is provided by section 1461a of the Penal Code (as added by St. 1925, p. 943) that the procedure to be followed in misdemeanor cases in the municipal courts shall be the same as is provided for in the chapter containing said section for proceedings in justices' and police courts, as specifically provided in certain numbered sections of said Code, and except where other provisions of law provide for different procedure.

The suggestion is made that under circumstances like those presented in this case it is unjust that a defendant who remains in custody during pendency of his appeal shall not be allowed credit for the time of his actual detention in jail while the appeal is pending. If so, that would be a proper subject for legislative consideration. It might be appropriately noted, however, that there may be circumstances under which an appealing defendant would claim full benefit of his right of appeal and insist that while detained in custody for want of bail, pending the appeal, he should not be held to be serving his sentence under the judgment. This may be illustrated by reference to section 1613 of the Penal Code, which provides that: "Persons confined in the county jail under a [final] judgment of imprisonment rendered in a criminal action or proceeding, may be required by an order of the board of supervisors to perform labor on the public works or ways in the county." This is a long-standing provision of the Code, except that the word "final" was inserted therein by the statutes of the present year. Amendment was so made probably in recognition of the law that such requirement as to labor on the public works might not be enforced against a defendant whose sentence had not become final. This would appear to be the correct rule in accordance with the principle that while the appeal is pending, the judgment is not enforceable against the defendant. A detention during pendency of the appeal (subject to his right to be admitted to bail) is of the same character as a detention on the charge made against him during the pendency of the action in the trial court down to the time of pronouncement or judgment and taking of the appeal.

The prisoner is remanded to custody.

Habeas corpus ⇨25(1)—Petitioner, put in contempt and financially able to pay alimony under court order, held not entitled to discharge by habeas corpus.

Where evidence in contempt proceeding for failure to pay alimony was sufficient to justify court in finding defendant was financially able to make payments required by court's order, petitioner was not entitled to discharge in habeas corpus proceeding.

Application by A. St. John for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, to secure release of petitioner from custody under commitment for failure to pay alimony. Petitioner remanded to custody.

PURDY v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 6542.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 22, 1929.

1. Costs ⇨2—"Costs" are incidental damages, authorized to reimburse successful party to action or proceeding.

"Costs" are allowances authorized to reimburse successful party to an action or proceeding, and are in nature of incidental damages to indemnify party against expense of successfully asserting his rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Costs.]

2. Appeal and error ⇨1199—Trial court is without power, on remand for modification after affirmance, in no manner affecting costs, to modify provisions of its own judgment awarding costs.

Where judgment carrying costs has been appealed from and affirmed, and certain modifications ordered, which in no manner concern or affect judgment for costs, trial court is without power or authority, when case is remanded for modification in accordance with decision of appellate court, to modify provisions of its own judgment awarding costs.

3. Costs ⇨237—Order awarding costs, which are incidental to judgment, falls with reversal of part of judgment on which it is based, and with modification casting balance on other side.

Costs on appeal are merely incidental to judgment appealed from, and order awarding costs falls with a reversal of that part of judgment on which it is based, there being no distinction between formal reversal of judgment and a modification of such judgment, which results in casting balance on other side, since judgment for trial costs necessarily rests on balance originally found in plaintiff's favor, and falls with reversal of judgment, or with what in effect is same thing, a modification, which results in a new judgment, showing a balance against plaintiff.

4. Judgment ⇨580—Judgment is not final determination of rights of parties pending appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049).

Judgment is not final determination of rights of parties pending an appeal, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that action is deemed to be pending at time of its commencement until final determination on appeal.

5. Costs ⇨230—Where, on recasting of trustee's account as directed, trustees were found to be prevailing parties, trial court was required to relieve trustees of costs, if trustees were blameless.

Where, on recasting of trustee's account as directed by Supreme Court on appeal, it was determined that trustees, instead of plaintiffs, were prevailing parties, court had power, and it was its duty, to relieve trustees, if they were without fault, of costs assessed against them, since successful party is never required to pay costs incurred by unsuccessful party.

6. Costs ⇨230—Trustees, against whom costs had been assessed, held entitled to be relieved therefrom, where they were later found to be prevailing parties, though not having filed cost bill (Code Civ. Proc. § 1033).

In action against trustees for accounting, where trustees, on recasting of account as directed by Supreme Court, were found to be prevailing parties, instead of plaintiff, trustees were entitled to be relieved of costs assessed against them, notwithstanding they had not complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, requiring filing of cost bill as condition precedent to recovery of costs.

7. Trusts ⇨309—Direction to allow interest against trustees, sued for accounting on balance due plaintiff, held intended to allow interest on annual intermediate balances.

Where, on trustee's appeal in action against them for accounting, Supreme Court directed that simple interest only be charged against trustees for amount found to be due plaintiff, plaintiff was entitled to interest on balance found to be due at end of accounting period, and on annual intermediate balances.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1207(3)—Trial court, on recasting trustee's account and finding trustees successful party, could consider on remand costs, where judgment had not become final.

Where Supreme Court, on appeal by trustees in accounting proceeding, directed that trustee's account be recast, which made trustees successful party, instead of plaintiff, and was equivalent to reversal, and judgment appealed from was not final determination of parties' rights until termination of appeal, nor until modified in accordance with remittitur issued out of Supreme Court, trial court, on remand, had authority to consider matter of costs.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Benito County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by Anita Christal Purdy against Robert F. Johnson and another, as trustees under the will of Alberto Trescony, deceased, to enforce a trust, and for an accounting. From an order modifying a judgment theretofore made and entered in accordance with the direction of the Supreme Court (248 P. 764), defendants appeal. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part, and remanded, with directions.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for appellants.

Houghton & Houghton and Edward T. Houghton, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is from an order modifying a judgment theretofore made and entered in accordance with the direction of this court (Purdy v. Johnson, 78 Cal. App. 310, 248 P. 764), and is the third appeal in this case.

Appellants urge two questions: The first has reference to the trial costs allowed plaintiff, amounting to $905.30, and the other to charging defendants with interest upon certain annual balances due plaintiff.

The action involves an accounting of a trust created by the last will and testament of Alberto Trescony, deceased. At the first trial a balance of $8,996.17 was found in favor of defendant trustees, but upon appeal by plaintiff this judgment was reversed. Purdy v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 521, 163 P. 893. At the second trial, a balance of $10,981.74 was found in favor of plaintiff, for which she was given judgment, including her costs of both trials, amounting to the sum of $905.30. Upon defendants' appeal, this judgment was modified, and the trial court was directed to cast a new account, to include items which had been rejected, and affecting interest charges against the trustees, and with this modification the judgment was affirmed. Upon the recasting of the account and allowing the rejected items, the trial court found a balance in favor of the defendants in the sum of $2,473.30. In view of this new balance being in favor of defendants, they moved the court to take up and rule on the matter of trial costs; that is to say, whether either party should recover costs or that the costs should be apportioned. The trial court denied this motion upon the ground that, under the decision of this court, it was without jurisdiction.

[1] Costs are allowances which are authorized to reimburse the successful party to an action or proceeding, and are in the nature of incidental damages to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully asserting his rights. "The theory upon which they are allowed to a plaintiff is that the default of the defendant made it necessary to sue him, and to a defendant, that the plaintiff sued him without cause. Thus the party to blame pays costs to the party without fault. * * * While costs are frequently allowed to both parties, or to many parties, payable out of a fund, 'the general rule is that the successful party, although he may be denied costs, never pays them.'" Stevens v. Central National Bank of Boston, 168 N. Y. 560, 61 N. E. 904, 906, 907.

Here, while this court directed the trial court to "strike a new account, in which the trustees be credited with the $2,500 item expended by them for the support and maintenance of the beneficiaries, that the trustees be allowed a reasonable sum for their compensation in accordance with equitable principles, and that simple interest only be charged against them for the amount, if any, found to be due the plaintiff. With this modification the judgment will stand affirmed"—upon the trial court recasting the account as directed, and finding that the balance was in favor of the appellant trustees, instead of in favor of respondent, the judgment in effect became a reversal of the former judgment, and, if a reversal, clearly appellants cannot be required to pay to respondent her costs.

[2] Respondent contends that a court of equity has not authority, once having exercised its discretion in the matter of awarding costs, to later amend its judgment, so as to withhold costs, and it must be held that, where a judgment carrying costs has been appealed from and affirmed, with certain modifications ordered, which in no manner concern or affect the judgment for costs, the trial court is without power or authority, when the case is remanded for modification in accordance with the decision of the appellate court, to modify the provisions of its own judgment awarding costs.

The precise point here presented appears to be one of first impression in this state. It is true that in Stevens v. Central National Bank of Boston, supra, it is said: "The plaintiffs, for instance, having recovered the costs of the last appeal to the general term by a judgment which has not been disturbed in that respect, cannot be deprived of their right to those costs; for the judgment is an adjudication that they were entitled to the costs of that court, and that the defendants were not. So long as the judgment stands, it is conclusive upon the question. An award of the same costs to the defendants would, in effect, deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of their judgment without their consent. * * * If a new trial had been granted by the federal court, or if there were no judgments for costs in favor of the plaintiffs, standing undisturbed by the action of the various appellate courts through which they have passed, a different question would be presented; but, with those judgments in force, we think the special term had no power to award the costs under consideration to the defendants."

There the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States made its opinion a part of the judgment, and, as said by the Court of Appeals of New York, "both the mandate and the opinion must be read together, in order to learn what the court did. When thus read, it is clear that the judgments of the state courts were left undisturbed in substance, and reversed or modified only to the extent of striking out the injunction and the order of reference, both of which were incidental to the main relief granted."

It is likewise true that in Gennert v. Butterick Pub. Co., Ltd., et al., 133 App. Div. 86, 117 N. Y. S. 801, 803, the court says: "The rule is very well settled that while the court, after judgment, may not alter its decision upon the merits, so as to affect the substantial rights of a party, yet it has a general and incidental power to grant an amendment which is in the line of correcting a mistake, or of supplying any omission obviously due to an oversight by the trial judge. * * * The order was erroneous, however, in so far as it struck out the award of costs to the plaintiff as against the Carey Printing Company. In an equitable action the costs are within the discretion of the trial court, and, when that court has once exercised its discretion by awarding costs, it cannot afterwards amend its decision and judgment by withholding them. Kiernan v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 3 App. Div. 26, 37 N. Y. S. 1070."

In that case the action was brought to restrain the operation of certain printing presses and for incidental damages. One of the court's findings of fact was that the actual damages sustained to plaintiff's freehold was $1,491.85, and judgment was awarded for actual damages in that sum, in addition to injunctive relief. At the same time the court found, at the request of defendant, "that on the resumption of the trial * * * (which had been suspended for certain experiments) the plaintiff waived any right to any damages." Instead of appealing, the plaintiff moved before the trial court to amend the decision and judgment, which motion was granted and a finding that the plaintiff had waived any damages was inserted in the former decision and the award of costs to plaintiff was stricken out. It will be seen that in neither of these cases were costs assessed against the prevailing party, or the party finally determined to be without fault, but against the party at fault; the modification of the judgments being merely incidental to the relief granted.

[3] In the present case, had a formal reversal been ordered upon the last appeal, there can be no question but that the matter of trial costs would have been set at large. Costs upon appeal are merely incidental to the judgment appealed from (McCallion v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 98 Cal. 442, 445, 33 P. 329), and an order awarding costs falls with a reversal of that part of the judgment upon which it is based (Taylor v. New York Life Ins. Co., 148 App. Div. 815, 133 N. Y. S. 746). With reference to the matter of trial costs, we fail to see wherein lies the difference between the formal reversal of a judgment, and a modification of such judgment which results in casting the balance on the other side. The judgment for trial costs necessarily rested upon the balance originally found in plaintiff's favor, and falls with a reversal of the judgment, or with what, in effect, is the same thing, a modification which results in a new judgment showing a balance against the plaintiff.

[4, 5] A judgment is not a final determination of the rights of the parties pending an appeal (Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539; People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, 37 L. R. A. [N. S.] 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148), and an action is deemed pending while an appeal from the judgment is pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049; Gillmore v. American C. I. Co., 65 Cal. 63, 2 P. 882), and we think, when it was made to appear upon a recasting of the account, as directed by this court, that defendants and not plaintiff were the prevailing parties, the court had the power, and it was its duty, to relieve defendants, if they were without fault, of the costs assessed against them, as the successful party is never required to pay the costs incurred by the unsuccessful party (Couch v. Millard, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 212, 215; Stevens v. Central National Bank of Boston, supra).

We find nothing in Whiting v. Squeglia, 70 Cal. App. 108, 232 P. 986, nor in Silva v. Angelo, 52 Cal. App. 75, 198 P. 56, cited by respondent, contrary to this conclusion. The Whiting Case was one in claim and delivery, brought to recover possession of an automobile. Defendant in the action answered the complaint and by stipulation filed a cross-complaint alleging fraud in the sale of the car on a conditional sales contract, and the judgment went for defendant on his cross-complaint. The court held that the trial court did not err in striking plaintiff's cost bill from the files and awarding costs to defendant, although the judgment, which was entered in favor of defendant, was to the effect that he was entitled to retain possession of the automobile until he was paid $3,500, with his costs; that, while the judgment apparently runs in favor of the plaintiff, the substantial result of the judgment was a victory for defendant. The Silva Case merely follows the section of the Code, holding that, as the judgment for plaintiff was for the sum of $538.85, such judgment carried costs as a matter "of course," which means as a matter of right.

[6] Respondent urges that appellants cannot recover costs, they not having filed a cost bill as required by section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure. While this is true, it may be said that appellants are not claiming that they are entitled to costs, but merely ask to be relieved of the costs assessed against them.

[7] The controversy over the question of interest involves but $60.30, being the aggregate of the following three interest items: "Nov. 30, 1894. Interest on $1,663.55, balance favor Anita Christal Purdy as of March 9, 1894, less $1,000—$663.35 for 8 months and 22 days, $33.81. Nov. 30, 1895. Interest on $1,179.63, balance favor Anita Christal Purdy as of Nov. 30, 1894, less $1,000 for 1 year, $12.57. Nov. 30, 1903. Interest on $1,198.79, balance favor Anita Christal Purdy as of Nov. 30, 1902, less $1,000 for 1 year, $13.92." The $1,000 for which interest was not allowed was an amount the court found the trustees were justified in retaining in their hands to meet current expenses. The remittitur issued out of this court directed "that simple interest only be charged against them [the trustees] for the amount, if any, found to be due the plaintiff."

Appellants contend that this language was intended to refer only to any balance found to be due the plaintiff at the end of the accounting period, January 1, 1909, that is, the final balance, and was not meant to apply to intermediate balances. We do not so interpret this language of the former opinion. Furthermore, as suggested by counsel for respondent, appellants' asserted interpretation of this clause of the former opinion would, if applied, deprive them of interest on the annual balances in the account as restated in their favor, aggregating $997.62, and which have been credited to them in that account.

[8] It is pointed out by appellants that this court in the former opinion stated that the $1,000, which was permitted to be retained by the trustees for current expenses, was "entirely inadequate for a number of years there is no question." This statement as to the original account is correct, but such is not the case with respect to the new account struck by the trial court in obedience to the remittitur. At no time during the entire period covered by this accounting do the disbursements exceed the receipts by the sum of

$1,000. The account, as recast for the years 1894, 1895, and 1902—the only years in which interest is charged against the trustees—shows that at only one time was that figure closely approached, and that in only one month during those three years did disbursements exceed receipts by more than $500. This demonstrates that the allowance of a deduction of $1,000 from the annual balances in favor of the beneficiary upon recasting the account was sufficient and adequate to cover current expenses, and that the court did not err in charging defendants interest upon the balances in excess thereof.

We are, however, of the opinion that as the recasting of the account, as directed by this court, changed the successful party in the litigation from the plaintiff to the defendants, and is, therefore, equivalent to a reversal, and as the judgment was not a final determination of the rights of the parties until the termination of the appeal, nor thereafter until it was modified in accordance with the remittitur issued out of this court, that the trial court had authority to consider the matter of costs.

The judgment appealed from must therefore be reversed, in so far as it awards costs to plaintiff, and otherwise affirmed, without costs in this court to either party, and the cause is remanded, with direction to the trial court to exercise its discretion in the allowance of costs as provided in the statute.

PEOPLE v. BOWLES. (Cr. 1824.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law —419, 420(12)—Introduction of memorandum attached to check when returned unpaid and allowing bank officer to testify in regard thereto, in prosecution for passing fictitious check, held not error.

In prosecution for passing fictitious check, permitting introduction of memorandum attached to check when returned from drawee bank unpaid and allowing assistant cashier to testify with regard thereto, memorandum being in usual form used by banks in returning checks and indicating thereon reason why check was returned, was not error.

2. False pretenses —44—Permitting testimony in prosecution for passing fictitious check showing check deposited was taken for collection only held not error.

In prosecution for passing fictitious check, overruling defendant's objection to testimony offered to show check deposited was taken for collection only was not error, since mere fact that defendant deposited check did not establish that amount on deposit to his credit.

3. Criminal law ☞1169(11)—Error, if any, in allowing evidence showing another check drawn on same day as alleged fictitious check was paid held harmless.

In prosecution for passing fictitious check, error, if any, in permitting evidence that another check drawn by defendant on same day as alleged fictitious check was paid by bank, held harmless.

4. Criminal law ☞1202(3)—Contention, in prosecution for passing fictitious check, that court erred in admitting copies of judgments of prior convictions, held without merit.

In prosecution for passing fictitious check, contention that trial court erred in permitting introduction in evidence of certified copies of judgments of prior convictions, which exhibits were in proper form and conformed to requirements of statute, held without merit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

M. V. Bowles, alias F. E. Nesbit, was convicted of passing a fictitious check, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred Duffy, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Albert Ford, Dist. Atty., and W. Earl Redwine, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Riverside, for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. The defendant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Riverside county with the crime commonly known as "issuing a bank check without sufficient funds." The information also charged the defendant with having suffered two prior convictions of felonies. A plea of not guilty was entered to the check charge. As to the charges of prior convictions, the defendant asserted that they were untrue.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty as to the check charge, and found that each of the prior convictions charged was true.

It appears without conflict that the defendant, on Saturday, August 11, 1928, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, entered the store of the Franzen Hardware Company in Riverside and negotiated for the purchase of certain merchandise. Before the sale was consummated, he made inquiry as to whether or not the store would accept a check which he had in the sum of $85, drawn upon a Los Angeles bank by one E. M. Burgwald, and made payable to F. E. Nesbit, the name under which the defendant was going in Riverside. Defendant stated that he had recently come to Riverside and had rented a house on St. Andrews boulevard, that his family would arrive a few days later, and that he wished to purchase certain articles for use in the house. He further stated that he had opened an account at the First National Bank of Riverside, to support which he displayed to the credit manager a passbook made out to F. E. Nesbit, which showed a deposit of $185. When the credit manager refused to take the $85 check drawn upon the Los Angeles bank, defendant asked him if he would take his check for a sum in excess of the amount of his proposed purchase, drawn on the First National Bank of Riverside; that, it being Saturday afternoon, he wanted some cash to enable him to make a trip to Idyllwild. The credit manager of the store finally agreed to accept his check for $60, and, when defendant had selected the articles he desired, which amounted to $37.50, the defendant was given $22.50 in cash. With regard to the time of delivery of the goods, defendant stated that he would be occupied for a while in shopping, but that he would be at the house about 4 o'clock, at which time it was agreed that the goods should be delivered. When the goods arrived at the house at the time agreed upon, the defendant was not there. The goods were left upon the porch.

One Clarence Brown, teller at the First National Bank of Riverside, testified that on Saturday morning, August 11th, the defendant opened an account at the bank, depositing $10 in cash and a check drawn by one E. M. Burgwald, dated August 9, 1928, for the sum of $75 payable at the main banking room of the Security Trust & Savings Bank, at Fifth and Spring streets, Los Angeles; that, when taking the deposit, he stated to the defendant that it would take several days for the $75 check to clear, and not to draw checks on it until it had time to clear, to which defendant replied that he had plenty of money and would not find it necessary to draw on his account until returns had been received. On Tuesday of the following week the $75 check was received back by the First National Bank of Riverside with the report that the drawer of the check had no account in the bank upon which it was drawn. Immediately the defendant's account at the First National Bank was charged with the $75 check, leaving but the $10 deposited in cash to his credit. When the $60 check, given by the defendant to the Franzen hardware store, was presented to the bank, it was returned because of insufficient funds to meet it. It also appears from the evidence that the defendant had never leased the house on St. Andrews boulevard, as represented by him to the credit manager of the Franzen hardware store. Evidence was also presented showing that the defendant had issued on the same Saturday two other checks, one for $10 and the other for $25, drawn on the First National Bank of Riverside. The $10 check was paid, but the $25 check was returned unpaid. The auditor of the Security Trust & Savings Bank testified that he had made an examination of the records of his bank in Los Angeles, and found that E. M. Burgwald did not have an account in that bank on August 9, 1928, or at any other time.

The defendant himself did not take the stand, but called as his only witness the assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Riverside, by whom he undertook to prove that, some five days after the issuance of the check in question, the bank had received $117 by Western Union telegraph from La Jolla, which was placed to the credit of defendant. This evidence was objected to by the district attorney and the objection sustained by the court.

[1] In urging a reversal of the judgment, appellant contends that the court erred, first, in permitting the assistant cashier of the bank to testify with regard to a certain memorandum, which was attached to the $75 check drawn on the Security Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, when the same was returned from the Los Angeles bank unpaid. This memorandum was in the usual form used by banks in returning checks. On it was indicated the reason why the check was returned. The memorandum in question was identified by the auditor of the bank on which the check was drawn, and he further testified that he had examined the record of the bank and that E. M. Burgwald had no account at that bank.

No error was committed by the court in overruling the defendant's objection to the introduction of the memorandum attached to the returned check, nor to the witness' testimony identifying it. In any event, the testimony of the bank's auditor that E. M. Burgwald had no account in the bank fully covered the point.

[2] The second point urged by appellant is that the court committed error in overruling his objection to certain testimony offered to the effect that the $75 check drawn on the Los Angeles bank was taken by the First National Bank of Riverside for collection only. In support of this contention, appellant cites People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127. The case cited does not support appellant in his contention. The Frey Case holds that the burden is upon the prosecution to prove that the defendant had not sufficient funds in the bank to meet the check at the time it was drawn. In the case at bar it clearly appears that defendant did not have sufficient funds to his credit in the First National Bank of Riverside to meet the $60 check. The fact that he had deposited on that day a check drawn on the Los Angeles bank for $75 did not establish that amount on deposit to his credit. The undisputed evidence was that the check was taken for collection only, and the evidence clearly shows that on August 11, the day on which he drew the $60 check in question, he had $10 and no more on deposit in the First National Bank of Riverside in the account on which he drew the check.

[3] It is next urged that the court erred in allowing evidence of the check drawn by the defendant on the same day payable to H. F. Grout & Co. for the sum of $10, which was paid by the bank. While we are unable to perceive any reason for the introduction of this check, it is not pointed out in what respect, if at all, its introduction was injurious to the defendant. We are satisfied the error, if any, was harmless.

[4] Appellant next urges that the court erred in permitting to be introduced in evidence certified copies of the judgments of convictions relating to the charges of prior convictions of the defendant set forth in the information. Admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit B is a certified copy of the judgment of conviction of the defendant in the superior court in and for the county of Orange, and a certified copy of his commitment to the penitentiary, and as Exhibit H a certified copy of the judgment of conviction in the superior court in and for the county of San Bernardino, wherein the defendant pleaded guilty to the crime of burglary. Both exhibits are in proper form and meet the requirements of the statute.

The remaining points urged by appellant as error relate to instructions, some given by the court and others that were refused. We have carefully examined each of the instructions referred to, and are satisfied that no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in the rulings complained of. We feel that nothing will be gained by extending at length in this opinion the instructions referred to.

As we find no error in the record, the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

FARIA v. FARIA et al. (Civ. 6756.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 30, 1929.

1. Fraudulent conveyance ⇨174(3)—Grantor, conveying premises in fraud of creditors, is not entitled to recover property conveyed.

Where purpose of deed was to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, law will not allow grantor to recover back such property, and as soon as fraudulent purpose of conveyance is disclosed by evidence, trial court will leave parties where it finds them.

2. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—Conflict in testimony must on appeal be resolved in support of conclusions reached thereon by trial court.

On appeal, all conflict in testimony must be resolved in support of conclusions reached thereon by trial court.

3. Deeds ⇨211(3, 4)—Evidence, in husband's action against wife and children to set aside deeds, held insufficient to establish undue influence or actionable fraud.

In action by husband against wife and children to set aside deeds, evidence held insufficient to establish, as against wife, undue influence or actionable fraud, although at time of execution of deed relationship between parties as husband and wife was one of confidence and trust.

4. Deeds ⇨211(4)—Mere relationship of husband and wife does not constitute prima facie evidence of undue influence against wife.

Mere relationship of husband and wife does not constitute prima facie evidence of undue influence against wife, in obtaining deeds to property from husband.

5. Deeds ⇨196(3)—Presumption does not exist that voluntary conveyance or gift from husband or wife is result of undue influence.

There is no presumption that a voluntary deed of conveyance or gift from husband or wife is result of undue influence.

6. Deeds ⇨196(3)—Undue influence of wife over husband is not presumed, unless it appears from transaction or proof that marital confidence was abused (Civ. Code, § 1575, subd. 1).

While it may be presumed that wife has influence over her husband, influence is not presumed to be undue, under Civ. Code, § 1575, subd. 1, unless it appears from face of transaction or from proof that marital confidence was used to take unfair advantage, or that confidence was subsequently violated.

7. Deeds ⇨211(3)—Evidence and circumstances in husband's action to set aside deeds held insufficient to sustain finding that wife's promises, inducing conveyance, were not made in good faith, or that marital confidence was abused.

In action by husband against wife and children to set aside deeds, evidence and circumstances showing cruel and inhuman treatment of wife, warranting her in leaving home, and constituting grounds on which wife obtained divorce, held insufficient to sustain finding that, at time wife made representations and promises which induced conveyance, she well knew that same were false and untrue, and were made with intent and purpose to defraud husband, since under circumstances wife was not morally or legally bound to continue marital relation, and her departure cannot be deemed in law a violation of marital confidence or breach of agreement on her part.

8. Deeds ⇨70(6)—Where confidential relations exist, it is not always necessary that confiding party must indispensably have had independent advice before transfer is valid.

It is not necessary in all cases of confidential relations, even where utmost good faith is required to be shown, that, before transfer can be shown to be valid and binding, confiding party must indispensably have had independent advice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Frank F. Faria against Adeline Faria and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

O. H. Speciale and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, for appellants.

E. H. Christian, of Oakland (E. S. Leslie, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment setting aside two deeds to a ranch in Alameda county.

The plaintiff, Frank F. Faria, and the defendant Adeline Faria were married in 1912, and in July, 1926, Mrs. Faria obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. The other two defendants are the minor children of that marriage. The ranch contains approximately 17 acres of land, and was purchased in 1915 for $15,200, title thereto being taken in plaintiff's name. An initial cash payment of $9,000 was made on the purchase price, and the balance of $6,200 was secured by a mortgage, which was paid off out of the ranch earnings prior to the commencement of the present controversy. The $9,000 in cash used in making the initial payment was part of $12,500 received by plaintiff from the sale of a dairy, which he owned prior to and at the time of his marriage. The Farias and their children lived on the ranch in question, and the same was impressed with a homestead.

On November 20, 1923, Faria was sued jointly with others as copartners by a man named Campbell for $50,000 damages, on account of the death of Campbell's wife, who was killed in a collision between a truck belonging to said copartners and Campbell's automobile, and approximately five months subsequent to the commencement of that action, to wit, on April 4, 1924, plaintiff conveyed the ranch to his wife by deed of gift, and the deed was immediately placed on record. The present controversy arises out of the circumstances attending the execution of that deed, it being alleged in the complaint and found by the trial court that said deed was obtained by Mrs. Faria by fraudulent means and as a result of undue influence. The second deed was one of gift, made by Mrs. Faria to the children following the divorce action, and was made without consideration. Upon the grounds mentioned, both deeds were set aside, subject only to the homestead rights, if any, of Mrs. Faria.

Appellant contends that heretofore, in an action brought against her husband and herself, it was judicially determined that her husband's purpose in conveying the ranch to her was to defraud his creditors, and that consequently he is precluded now from seeking to recover back that which he has fraudulently conveyed, and moreover, that the evidence in the present case, aside from showing the fraudulent purpose of her husband above mentioned, is wholly insufficient as a matter of law to prove that her activities in connection with the execution of said deed amounted either to a fraud against her husband or an undue influence over him.

It appears that, prior to the commencement of the present action, one Brandon, a judgment creditor of Faria's in the sum of $432.78, commenced an action (No. 93935) against Faria and his wife to set aside the deed of April 4, 1924, upon the ground that it was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors. In that action Faria defaulted, but Mrs. Faria contested the same. Faria became a witness for Brandon, and testified that he conveyed the property to his wife, so that it would not be lost to them as a possible result of the Campbell suit, and the trial court found, in conformity with the allegations of the complaint, that said deed was made for the purpose of defrauding creditors. At the time of answering, however, Mrs. Faria deposited in court the amount Brandon claimed was due him, and consequently the judgment in the action, which was entered on June 13, 1927, directed merely that the sum deposited in court be applied to the payment of Brandon's demand.

In the meantime Mrs. Faria brought suit for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Faria defaulted, and on July 26, 1926, Mrs. Faria was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce, together with an allowance for the maintenance of the children. Neither the validity of the deed in question here nor the title to the property was involved in the divorce action; nor was any assignment made therein of the homestead. On October 27, 1926, Mrs. Faria conveyed the property by deed of gift to her children, reserving therein a life estate unto herself. Several months later Brandon obtained a second money judgment by default against Faria in the sum of $2,829.30 (action No. 96338), and after causing an execution to be levied on the ranch instituted supplemental proceedings for the appraisal and setting apart of the homestead. Mrs. Faria and the children contested those proceedings, upon the ground that by virtue of Faria's deed of gift of April 4, 1924, he parted with all interest in the property; but on October 18, 1927, the proceeding was determined adversely to their claims, and on appeal the trial court's action was affirmed by this court (Brandon v. Faria et al., 279 P. 192), and with respect to the trial court's decision in Brandon v. Faria (No. 93935), finding that the deed from Faria to his wife was void as against creditors, this court held that the facts there found "were prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud subsequent creditors (Hemenway v. Thaxter, 150 Cal. 737, 90 P. 116). * * *

It further appears that, following the rendition of the judgment in the action of Brandon v. Faria to collect the sum of $2,829.30 (No. 96338), the defendants herein sought to enjoin the levy of the execution on the ranch upon the ground that Faria had no interest therein, but the injunction was denied; and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed the order of denial (Faria et al. v. Brandon, 276 P. 106), declaring with reference to the trial court's decision in Brandon v. Faria (No. 93935), that it had been "duly adjudged that Faria conveyed to his wife without consideration, and when he was insolvent, and for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors."

[1] It thus appears that twice have the courts of appellate jurisdiction recognized the decision in Brandon v. Faria (No. 93935) as being a determination of the fact that the purpose of the gift deed of April 4, 1924, from Faria to his wife was to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors; and indeed, during the trial of the present action, it was stipulated by Faria's counsel that such was its purpose, but it was claimed that the same was made "at the solicitation" of Mrs. Faria. If such was the purpose of the deed, the law will not allow Faria to recover back the property he has fraudulently conveyed, for the rule in such case is that, as soon as the fraudulent purpose of the conveyance is disclosed by the evidence, the trial court will leave the parties where it finds them. 12 Cal. Jur. 1026, and cases cited.

But Faria contends here, as he did before the trial court, that the fraudulent conveyance of April 4, 1924, was made at the solicitation of Mrs. Faria, and as a result of misrepresentation, fraud, and undue influence on her part, and that consequently it was immaterial that the effect of such conveyance was to defraud creditors; and in support of such contention he cites cases which hold that the general rule, to the effect that a court of equity will not grant relief to one who has made a deed to defraud creditors, has no application where the deed was procured by the fraud and undue influence of the defendant, who will not be allowed to perpetrate a greater fraud, and to take advantage of his own wrong and of the absence of free consent of the grantor, and who, under such circumstances, under express statutory provision, takes as trustee of the grantor. Donnelly v. Rees, 141 Cal. 56, 74 P. 433.

In this regard the allegations of the complaint herein, charging those elements and upon which the judgment is grounded, are summarized in respondent's brief as follows: " * * * That beginning about the 4th day of December, 1923 (which was shortly after the filing of the Campbell action for damages), and continuously thereafter until the date of said deed of gift, defendant Adeline Faria earnestly and persistently solicited and requested plaintiff to make said deed, in consideration of the love and affection of plaintiff for his said wife, and upon the repeated representation that she would always permit and allow plaintiff to occupy, use, possess, and enjoy said lands, together with all the rents, issues, and profits thereof, during the natural life of plaintiff." Also that defendant represented to plaintiff "that, unless he would execute said deed, she would leave and abandon plaintiff and take with her the minor children of the parties." The only evidence set forth in respondent's brief to support said allegations consists of the testimony given by respondent himself, the essential portions of which are as follows:

"Q. Now, shortly after the time that you received the summons in that $50,000 suit, your wife had certain conversations with you about the property? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And what did she say to you about this property, shortly after you received the papers in the Campbell suit? A. She wanted me to pass the ranch, so that we wouldn't lose the ranch.

"Q. And you have seen, or did see, your attorney, Mr. Mitchell, about the matter—that is, about the Campbell suit—about at the same time that she started to talk to you about the ranch? A. Yes, sir; just as soon as I got the papers, I went to see my attorney.

"The Court: What was the date of that suit?

"Mr. Christian: November 20, 1923.

"Q. Now, when she first asked you to pass the ranch over to her, what did you say to her? A. I told her I didn't want to pass it, because it was the only thing I had. * * *

"Q. Now, did she say anything else to you about it? A. She used to talk about that every day, so that I would pass the ranch to her.

"Q. What did she say? A. She said I could stay on the ranch just the same as before, sell all the fruit, and run the ranch, and stay there just as before.

"Q. And did she tell you that upon many occasions? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, when she told you that at first, what was your answer? A. I told her I wouldn't pass her the ranch.

"Q. And did she keep asking you to make a deed? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now state whether or not, during any of these conversations, she stated that she was going to leave you, and take the children along with her. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, just tell the court just what she did say. A. She said that, if I wouldn't pass the ranch over to her, she was going to go away with the children, and herself, and was going to go to court and take a divorce from me. * * *

"Q. State whether or not you made up your mind to make this deed a long time, or short time, before the 4th day of April, 1924. A. Just about that time I made up my mind.

"Q. State whether or not the constant request from your wife had any effect on your mind. A. Yes, sir; it would bother my head.

"Q. And state whether or not you had any fear of losing the ranch in the beginning; that is, from the time that your wife started to ask you to pass the ranch into her name. A. No, sir.

"Q. Will you tell the court when, if ever, with respect to the date of the transfer of the property, did you have any fear because of the representations of your wife of losing the property? A. Near the time of making the deed; that is just about the time I fear.

"Q. And state whether or not the fact that your wife persistently and constantly asked you to make this deed—if that is the reason why you had the fear of losing the ranch. A. Yes, sir."

He further testified that the deed in question was drawn by and executed before an attorney in Oakland, with whom his wife had previously consulted, but that before executing the deed he consulted alone with said attorney about the matter, and the next day returned to the attorney's office, accompanied by his wife, and executed the deed; that, after delivering the deed to his wife, it was left with the attorney to be recorded; and that said attorney told him that, if he did not convey the property to his wife, they would likely lose the ranch and "be thrown out in the street." He also testified that he would not have deeded the property to his wife, if it had not been for such importunities and representations.

The evidence shows without dispute that, following the execution of the deed from Faria to his wife, they continued to live together upon the premises as husband and wife for over two years, at the end of which period Mrs. Faria left the ranch, taking the children with her, because, as she claimed, of Faria's cruel treatment; that afterwards she lived with her parents, and shortly after leaving the ranch commenced the suit for divorce, which, as stated, Faria allowed to go by default; that, soon after Faria was served with summons in the divorce action, he quit the ranch voluntarily and did not return. The evidence shows that Faria was the owner also of another ranch, referred to as the Creek ranch, which he sold about the same time he conveyed the ranch in question to his wife, for the purpose, as he claims, of paying certain creditors; but he admits having testified on behalf of Brandon, in the latter's suit to set aside the present deed, that he conveyed the ranch in question to his wife to avoid the possible consequences of the Campbell suit.

Mrs. Faria admitted having talked with her husband about the Campbell suit, but denied having importuned him to convey the ranch to her, stating that "he wanted to deed the property to her." She also denied having made any of the representations above mentioned. She also contradicted Faria's testimony as to the circumstances attending the execution of the deed. She stated that, soon after the commencement of the Campbell suit, Faria declared his intention of conferring with said attorney in Oakland, and that she told him she would go with him; that the deed was prepared at the request of Faria, and that the attorney told him at that time that he must not afterwards "blame him for making the deed, because he wanted to make the deed himself." She further testified that she was compelled to leave the ranch and take refuge with her parents because of Faria's cruel treatment; that he called her vile names, threatened to kill her, struck her in the face, chased her with pruning scissiors and with a fork, and declared his intention to sell whisky on the ranch. Faria denied having committed the acts of cruelty above mentioned, but it appears from the record that said acts constituted the main grounds for divorce, which, as stated, Faria allowed to go by default.

[2-6] Admittedly, under the rule governing the determination of appeals, all conflict in the testimony must be resolved in support of the conclusions reached thereon by the trial court; but, after so resolving such conflict, we are of the opinion that the evidence here is legally insufficient to establish, as against the appellant, a case of undue influence or actionable fraud. It is conceded, of course, that at the time of the execution of the deed from Faria to his wife their relationship was one of confidence and trust. But, as held in the case hereinafter cited, the mere relationship of husband and wife does not constitute prima facie evidence of undue influence against the wife (Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 155 P. 95; McDougall v. McDougall, 135 Cal. 316, 67 P. 778), nor is there any presumption that a voluntary deed of conveyance or gift from husband or wife is the result of undue influence; and while it may be presumed that a wife has influence over her husband, this influence is not presumed to be undue (McDougall v. McDougall, supra), unless it appears from the face of the transaction or from the proof that the marital confidence was used to take an unfair advantage or that this confidence was subsequently violated (Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 P. 189; Yordi v. Yordi, 6 Cal. App. 20, 91 P. 348; Hensley v. Hensley, 179 Cal. 284, 183 P. 445). In other words, as declared in Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 P. 186, 190, "the influence which the law presumes to have been exercised by one spouse over the other is not an influence caused by any act of persuasion or importunity, but is that influence which is superinduced by the relation between them, and generated in the mind of the one by the confiding trust which he has in the devotion and fidelity of the other. Such influence the law presumes to have been undue, whenever this confidence is subsequently violated or abused. Civ. Code, § 1575, subd. 1."

[7] Applying the foregoing legal rules to the peculiar circumstances confronting the Farias at the time of and immediately preceding the execution of the deed in question, with reference to the demands then being made upon them by Faria's creditors, and the fear entertained by them that as a possible outcome of the Campbell suit they might lose the ranch, it is evident that Mrs. Faria's activities in importuning and persuading her husband to execute the deed in question, and the influence she may have exercised over him in that respect, did not constitute undue influence within the meaning of said legal rules, unless it can be held that the promises and statements made by her at the time were not made in good faith, or, if so made, that the marital confidence which moved her husband to execute the deed was subsequently violated or abused.

As to the representation that she "would always permit and allow said plaintiff to occupy, use, possess, and enjoy the whole of said real property hereinafter described, together with all the issues, rents, and profits thereof, and each and every part thereof," there is no evidence that she ever refused plaintiff any such rights or privileges while they lived together on the ranch, and plaintiff admits that after he was served with the papers in the divorce proceeding he left the ranch of his own accord and did not return. In this connection it may be stated that at the time he was served with summons in the divorce action he was served also with a temporary injunction restraining him "from injuring plaintiff, or annoying or harassing or interfering with plaintiff's custody of their minor children," and that said injunction was read to him by the officer at the time it was served; and Faria claimed that, owing to his limited knowledge of the English language, he thought he was ordered to leave the ranch. But the evidence shows that, as soon as the papers were served upon him, he consulted with and was advised by two attorneys of his own selection.

And with reference to Mrs. Faria's statement that, unless her husband conveyed the ranch to her, she would leave and abandon him and take the children with her, it must be assumed that such statement was based upon the implied understanding that, if she did continue to live with him, she would be treated with kindness and respect. It appears from the record of the divorce proceeding, however, that during the two years following the execution of the deed, Faria struck her about the face with his fists and threatened to kill her; that he threatened to cut her stomach with a pair of large pruning shears, and that he called her vile and offensive names; that on several occasions she was obliged to seek refuge elsewhere because of his violence and threats to kill her; that during the year 1926, at the home of said parties, without any cause or provocation, Faria "told her to go away, and that he will be satisfied if she goes away, because he cannot stand to see her any longer, and to get out of his sight."

Manifestly, under such circumstances, it cannot be held that, in order to maintain her legal rights under the deed of gift, she was compelled, morally or legally, to continue the marital relation with him or to remain longer on the ranch; nor can her departure under such circumstances be deemed in law to be a violation of the marital confidence or a breach of the agreement on her part. In other words, as held in Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 P. 691, a husband cannot take advantage of his wife's failure to carry out her promises, when he has made it impossible for her to do so. And it is not claimed here that there was any promise made by Mrs. Faria to convey back the property under any circumstances.

For the reasons stated we are unable to sustain the trial court's finding that, at the time Mrs. Faria made the representations, statements, and promises above mentioned, she well knew that the same "were false and untrue, and were made with the intent and purpose to defraud plaintiff and to induce him to transfer" the ranch to her.

[8] In support of the judgment, respondent further contends that in executing said deed he acted on the advice of his wife and her attorney, and did not have any independent legal advice. The evidence shows, however, that soon after he was served with summons in the Campbell suit, and prior to the execution of the deed in question, he consulted with two attorneys; and, moreover, he makes no claim here that, when he executed the deed, he was not acting freely, voluntarily, or without a full knowledge of the facts or the effect of the transfer, but only that he was persuaded by his wife to make the deed to the property to her upon the representations and statements above mentioned. In any event, it is not essential in all cases of confidential relations, even where the utmost good faith is required to be shown, that before a transfer can be shown to be valid and binding the confiding party must indispensably have had independent advice. 9 Cal. Jur. 230.

The judgment is reversed.

100 Cal. App. 373

BOVO v. ABRAHAMSON. (Civ. 6665.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨931 (1)—Substantial evidence is resolved in favor of findings on conflicting evidence.

Any substantial evidence must be resolved in favor of findings of trial court, where evidence is conflicting.

2. Mortgages ⇨369(7)—Evidence showed agreement was option to purchase within 18 months after sale under trust deed, and not redemption agreement.

Evidence, in action to set aside sale under trust deed and to quiet title, held to justify court's finding that agreement made between parties, whereby defendant promised to convey real property to plaintiff if she should deliver to him within 18 months after his purchase at trustee's sale purchase price and sums owing to defendant, and sums paid for taxes and street improvement bonds together with interest, was mere option to purchase property within 18 months, and was not redemption agreement.

3. Mortgages ⇨369(7)—Evidence showed plaintiff before action did not tender or offer amount due defendant purchasing at trustee's sale under agreement to reconvey.

Evidence, in action to set aside sale under trust deed and to quiet title, held sufficient to establish that plaintiff never at any time before commencement of action tendered to defendant or offered to pay amount due defendant under agreement by which he agreed to reconvey if plaintiff acted within 18 months.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1071(5)—Findings that allegations not found true were untrue and not supported by evidence held immaterial, where court found, upon sufficient evidence, facts sustaining judgment.

Where court found, upon sufficient evidence, facts sustaining judgment, findings complained of that all other allegations of the pleadings other than those specifically found to be true were untrue and not supported by evidence were immaterial.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨15—Agreement to reconvey property purchased at sale under trust deed to owner on repayment of sums expended held without consideration.

Where purchaser at sale under trust deed paid consideration for trustee's deed, agreement made by parties, whereby purchaser agreed to reconvey to owner on repayment of sums expended by purchaser constituting an option to purchase and no money or other thing of value having passed between parties, and owner not having waived any right in consideration thereof, held without consideration.

6. Frauds, statute of Ⓒ103(5)—Verified answer stating facts concerning oral option to purchase land did not satisfy statute where option had expired (Civ. Code, § 1624, subds. 1, 5; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subds. 1, 5).

Where oral agreement of purchaser at sale under trust deed to reconvey to owner had expired years before verification of answer in suit to quiet title and set aside sale, that defendant in verified answer stated facts concerning agreement was insufficient to satisfy statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subds. 1, 5, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subds. 1, 5).

7. Adverse possession Ⓒ85(3)—Evidence showed former owner occupied premises purchased by defendant at sale under trust deed as tenant at will, and that defendant had title by adverse possession.

Evidence, in action by former owner to set aside sale under trust deed and to quiet title, held sufficient to sustain findings of court that plaintiff occupied premises defendant purchased as tenant at will of defendant, and that defendant owned premises by adverse possession.

8. Frauds, statute of Ⓒ44(4), 74(2)—Oral agreement to reconvey property purchased at sale under trust deed within 18 months on repayment of sums expended held unenforceable (Civ. Code, § 1624, subds. 1, 5; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subds. 1, 5).

Agreement, whereby purchaser of property at sale under trust deed agreed to reconvey to owner within 18 months on payment of certain sums, constituted an option to purchase, and, not being in writing nor to be performed within one year, held unenforceable under Civ. Code, § 1624, subds. 1, 5, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subds. 1, 5.

9. Mortgages Ⓒ369(5)—Action to enforce agreement to reconvey property purchased at sale under trust deed, brought more than nine years thereafter, held barred by laches.

Action to set aside sale under trust deed and to quiet title, under agreement whereby purchaser of property under trust deed agreed to reconvey to plaintiff within 18 months on reimbursement of sums expended, held barred because of staleness of demand, where action was not commenced until more than nine years later and during all such time purchaser was improving property and exercising rights of an owner with full knowledge of plaintiff and without any protest on her part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Maria S. Bovo, also known as Mary S. Bovo, also known as Mary S. Marcucci, against Henry R. Abrahamson, in which the defendant cross-complained. Judgment adverse to plaintiff, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Dunn, White & Aiken and W. M. Nold, all of Oakland, for appellant.

C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment denying her a right to redeem from defendant, as trustee, the real property described in her pleadings and also quieting defendant's title to the same property. In support of the appeal it is contended that certain findings of fact are without support in the evidence; that others are contrary to the undisputed evidence; that others are contrary to the undenied allegations of the complaint; and that still others are contrary to the express admissions of the defendant.

The court made a blanket finding of fact as follows: "That all the allegations in the complaint, amended complaints and supplemental complaints, and all pleadings in said action other than hereinafter found, are untrue and not supported by the evidence, and the court further finds that the following facts are true and that all others alleged in said pleadings are untrue." The court then finds specifically that on and prior to June 14, 1916, plaintiff was the owner of the lands described in her complaint; that on said day and prior thereto plaintiff was indebted to the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward, Cal., in the sum of $7,883 evidenced by a promissory note in the principal sum of $7,500, the balance being accrued interest; that said indebtedness was secured by a deed of trust upon the property described in the pleadings and constituted a first lien thereon; that plaintiff was indebted to other parties in sums aggregating $2,000, which constituted second liens on said property; that on June 14, 1916, the plaintiff was also indebted to the defendant herein in the sum of $2,552.20 for remodeling the buildings on said property, said last-named sum being the reasonable amount expended in said work, including therein a 10 per cent. commission for his services; and that plaintiff was unable to pay any of said amounts and referred the defendant to the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward, telling defendant that said bank would pay him the amount due to him as aforesaid. The court also found as a fact that said last-named bank was anxious to have repaid to it the amount due from the plaintiff as aforesaid and notified her in writing that the loan to it must be taken care of and unless a payment of the same was made it would foreclose its deed of trust; that the defendant was informed by a Mr. Mount of the Central National Bank of Oakland that his right to a mechanic's lien on said premises was subject and subsequent to the three liens secured by deeds of trust as aforesaid, and advised the defendant to purchase the property at the trustee's sale under the deed of trust held by the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward, and that by so doing he would secure the property free and clear of the second liens and also of all claim by the plaintiff; that in pursuance of said advice and with the intention of securing said property free and clear of any of the said secondary claims, or any claims of plaintiff, and without any agreement with her in relation thereto, defendant bought said property at said trustee's sale; and that thereafter the defendant received the trustee's deed therefor as a complete and absolute conveyance to him of all claims subsequent to the execution of the trustee's deed, and as a complete and absolute conveyance of all the right, title, and interest of the plaintiff therein. The court further found that after said transaction had been fully completed the defendant, at the earnest request of the plaintiff, agreed that if she would pay him all sums of money that he had paid to purchase the property, and all sums owing to him for remodeling said property, and all sums of money paid for taxes and street bonds, and other sums due thereon, together with interest on said several sums within a period of 18 months from said date, he would convey said property to her, the said plaintiff; that after the execution to him of the trustee's deed he took possession of the property and employed an agent to obtain tenants for him; that after the execution of said trustee's deed defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff that in consideration of her paying the light and water bills and taking care of the steps and hall, and collecting rent from other tenants and paying it over to defendant, and acting as manager of said apartment house, she might occupy one of the apartments in said house free and clear of rental therefor, and in pursuance of said agreement plaintiff did remain in one of the apartments as a tenant at will and did perform said services, and made no claim of ownership to said premises until a short time prior to the commencement of this action; and that since the execution to him of the trustee's deed for said premises, the defendant has treated the property as his own, has built garages thereon to be used in connection with the house, has paid all street bonds affecting the property, and has paid all taxes levied or assessed against the same with full knowledge on the part of the plaintiff and without any claim by her of ownership therein. The court further found that since on or about June 15, 1916, defendant has held the same by adverse possession and that the plaintiff has never paid nor offered to pay any taxes thereon, and did not make any claim of ownership thereto until a short time prior to the commencement of this action. Then follow appropriate findings concerning the changes made in the building itself; that the apartment occupied by plaintiff has a reasonable rental value of $35 per month; that the plaintiff has never paid defendant the sums he paid at the trustee's sale, nor any other sums due him, and did not make any tender of the same prior to the commencement of this action; and that the agreement to convey was without consideration, was oral, and constituted a mere option to purchase; and that the cause of action, if any ever existed, was barred by subdivisions 1 and 5, § 1624, of the Civil Code, and by subdivisions 1 and 5 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure and by sections 318, 320, 323 and 363 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was also barred by laches.

[1] We will first consider appellant's specification of error that the findings are not sustained by the evidence. It is admitted, or appears from uncontradicted evidence, that on and prior to June 14, 1916, the plaintiff was the owner of the real property which is the subject of this action, subject, however, to the three deeds of trust mentioned in the foregoing findings; that on said date the property was sold by virtue of the power of sale under the first deed of trust to satisfy the indebtedness due the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward; and that it was purchased by the defendant for the full amount due said bank. It was also proved by competent evidence that prior thereto the defendant had made improvements on said premises of the reasonable value of $2,552.20. It also appears without conflict that at the time of the purchase by the defendant he had no agreement whatever with the plaintiff concerning the title to the property, and that on the evening of the day on which the sale under the trust deed was made as aforesaid, the defendant herein, Mr. Mount, the vice president and cashier of the Central National Bank of Oakland, Mr. J. A. Park, cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward, and a Mr. Bovo, a son of the plaintiff, met in the Central National Bank in Oakland. As the only agreement ever made between the plaintiff and defendant concerning the said property was made at the aforesaid meeting, we deem it proper to quite fully present what occurred at that meeting. The record discloses that Mr. Mount was not available as a witness and Mr. Bovo is deceased. The witness J. A. Park testified that, "Mr. Bovo was there for the purpose of seeing about getting an agreement from Mr. Abrahamson to redeem the property within a period of two years." He further testified that: "Mr. Bovo wanted Mr. Abrahamson to agree that his mother could have the privilege of redeeming the property within a period of two years. Mr. Mount, who seemed to be Mr. Abrahamson's advisor all the way through, said, 'We will not give any agreement except a verbal one that we will return the property to Mrs. Bovo within a period of eighteen months, provided she can supply the money to pay all expenses and all claims against the property which may rightfully belong to Mr. Abrahamson.' Mr. Abrahamson said, 'If they could pay me the money due me within a period of eighteen months from the date of the sale I would be glad to return the property to the former owner.'" It also appears from the evidence of this witness that the agreement was entirely oral, that Abrahamson refused to give a written agreement, that the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Hayward had no intention of renewing the loan, but as an accommodation to Mr. Mount of the Central National Bank it took a new loan from the defendant for the face of the original loan which they had made to the plaintiff and took a new note and deed of trust on the property from the defendant. This witness further testified that the amount of defendant's bid was approximately the market value of the property and that there would have been a very small equity over that amount. The witness further testified that Mrs. Bovo sent Mr. Abrahamson to him to take care of the latter's claim for improvements made on the premises and that he told Mr. Abrahamson he could not consider it. The trustee's deed to the property was executed and delivered to the defendant Abrahamson after the parties entered into the foregoing agreement at the Central National Bank. The evidence as to the subsequent conduct of the parties is in many respects in sharp conflict, but any substantial evidence must be resolved in favor of the findings of the trial court. The defendant testified that on the day of the sale, but after he had bid in the property, he visited the premises and told the plaintiff he had purchased it; that she told him she had no place to go and he agreed to allow her to retain one of the apartments in the building provided she would pay the water bills, also the bills for the hall light, and take care of the steps and hall and collect some of the rentals; that she agreed to do so and thereafter did perform said services, and it also appears where she collected rents she always turned them over to the defendant. There was also some evidence that the defendant during the years following the execution of the deed admitted that he was holding the property for plaintiff; however, according to his own testimony, these statements were made during the eighteen months following the agreement above set forth, but not afterwards. It further appears from the evidence that upon the request of plaintiff's son, defendant rendered a statement of the amount due him, although demand therefor was not made until nearly two years from the date of the agreement made in the Central National Bank of Oakland and defendant testified that had the plaintiff offered to pay him at the time the statement was rendered, he would have accepted it and made her a deed, but that after the rendering of the statement and the failure of the plaintiff to pay him he kept no further account of his expenditures. The evidence shows that no other request was ever made, nor was the statement rendered ever questioned as to the correctness, nor was any tender ever made to defendant of any amount due him until the commencement of the action of March 27, 1925. It also appears from the evidence that defendant has paid since the execution to him of the deed for the property all taxes, street improvement bonds, has built garages on the property, collected the rents, and exercised all the rights of ownership to the premises, and that his right so to do was never disputed by plaintiff nor anyone else until the commencement of this action.

[2, 3] Appellant claims that the agreement made at the Central National Bank is a redemption agreement that equity will enforce against the defendant. She cites in support of this claim Webb v. Vercoe, 201 Cal. 754, 258 P. 1099, 1101, 54 A. L. R. 1200, the cases therein cited and other cases, but the main reliance seems to be upon Webb v. Vercoe, supra. In our opinion there is a clear-cut distinction between the facts of the latter case and the facts in the case at bar. In the cited case the transaction involved the foreclosure of two mortgages, the junior mortgagee purchasing the property at the foreclosure sale. The evidence relied upon to establish a resulting trust in favor of the mortgagor consisted of certain letters written by the parties. In one of these the mortgagor appealed to the junior mortgagee to buy the property at said sale in her own name and allow him to redeem. To this the mortgagee agreed and and in pursuance thereof did buy the property. Some of the letters fixed the terms of the redemption. The Supreme Court held that the trial court "was well warranted in concluding that the written declarations of the defendant were to the effect that plaintiff need not attempt to redeem her property from the foreclosure sale, but could rely upon the defendant to furnish the money to purchase at such sale and to thereafter take a sheriff's deed, treating the transaction as a loan and holding the legal title as security for its repayment; this, too, upon the terms found by the court, to wit, interest at seven per cent. per annum; and that plaintiff should have an indefinite time within which to repay defendant and secure thereby title to the property." In the case at bar the defendant, without any agreement with plaintiff, bought the property at the trustee's sale, paying therefor an adequate consideration. Thereafter it was agreed that defendant would return the property to plaintiff within eighteen months, provided she could supply the money to pay all expenses and all claims against the property which belonged to the defendant. The latter specifically stated "if they could pay me the money due me within a period of eighteen months of the date of the sale, I would be glad to return the property to the former owner." There is a further distinction between the two cases, in that the original transaction in Webb v. Vercoe, supra, involved a sale under foreclosure of a mortgage with a right of redemption in the mortgagor, while in the case at bar the transaction involved a trust deed and there was no right of redemption. We are satisfied from the foregoing evidence that the court was justified in its finding that the agreement made between the parties was a mere option to purchase the property within eighteen months and was not a redemption agreement. Furthermore the evidence establishes the fact that the plaintiff never at any time before the commencement of this action tendered to defendant, or offered to pay, the amount due defendant. If the foregoing conclusion that the agreement was an option to purchase and not an agreement permitting the plaintiff to redeem from the sale is correct, then no useful purpose is served by discussing the several questions pressed by appellant based upon the theory of a redemption agreement, or the further claim that the transaction constituted an equitable mortgage.

[4] Appellant complains of the blanket finding made by the trial court, that all other allegations of the pleadings, other than those specifically found to be true were untrue and not supported by the evidence. It is claimed by appellant that sixteen allegations of the pleadings other than those specifically found by the court are sustained either by the admissions of the pleadings or undisputed evidence. We agree with counsel that in some instances the findings objected to are subject to the criticisms made, but notwithstanding this, the court found, upon sufficient evidence, facts which sustain the judgment and the findings complained of are therefore immaterial.

[5] Appellant claims that because the respondent, in testifying concerning the transaction, used the word "advanced" in speaking of the payment of the purchase price by him, he should be held to a strict interpretation of the word as meaning "loan," and therefore the consideration for said deed was paid by appellant. However, the trial court held, upon sufficient evidence, against this construction. At the suggestion of the court, counsel stipulated both plaintiff and defendant were of foreign birth, and were not familiar with the English language. We are also satisfied that respondent, having paid the consideration for the trustee's deed, and the agreement made by the parties being an option to purchase and no money or other thing of value having passed between the parties, and appellant not having waived any right in consideration thereof, the agreement was without consideration.

[6] Appellant complains that the court erred in holding that the redemption agreement was not evidenced by an instrument in writing, that the defendant in his verified answer having stated the facts concerning the agreement, that of itself is sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. The agreement being an option to purchase the land, and all rights of the appellant having expired years before the verification of the answer, we are of the opinion that the objection is not well founded.

[7] It is also contended that the court's findings that appellant occupied the premises as a tenant at will of the respondent, and that the latter owned the premises by adverse possession, are not sustained by the evidence. Upon this phase of the case the evidence shows that after respondent bid in the property at the sale he visited the premises, told appellant of his purchase, and at her request permitted her to continue to occupy one of the apartments in the building in consideration of her performing certain services in and about the property and paying the charge for the hall light in the building and the water rental of the premises. From that time forward defendant paid all taxes levied or assessed against the property, leased the apartments to others, received all rents for their use, constructed garages on the premises to be used in connection with the house, and claimed to own the same against the plaintiff and every one else, and his claim thereto was never disputed by appellant nor any one else. There is some evidence in the record that respondent admitted to others that he was holding the property for appellant, but respondent testified that such statements were made during the first eighteen months in accordance with his agreement that he would return the property to the appellant and were not made after that time. Such evidence sustains the findings of the court.

[8] The court found that the cause of action was barred by subdivisions 1 and 5 of section 1624 of the Civil Code and subdivisions 1 and 5 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The agreement being an option to purchase, and not being in writing nor to be performed within one year, the court's finding is correct.

[9] The court also held that the cause of action was stale. Upon this subject the evidence shows that the respondent purchased the property on June 14, 1916, and under her own evidence the oral agreement by which appellant could demand a return of the property was limited to eighteen months. The only effort made by plaintiff to fulfill the agreement, so far as respondent was concerned, was a request by her son made nearly two years after the making of the agreement, for a statement of the account. This was rendered, and nothing further was done until just prior to the commencement of this action, nine years later, and during all of that time the respondent was improving the property and exercising all the right and power of an owner with the full knowledge of appellant and without any protest on her part. The court's action was correct.

The court also found that the cause of action was barred by other sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, but as we are of the opinion that the judgment must be affirmed, it would serve no useful purpose to discuss the objections raised thereto. There are many other points of error claimed by appellant, but after the conclusion we have reached as to the nature of the agreement, it is unnecessary to discuss or pass upon them.

The judgment is affirmed.

CROWHURST v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF ALBANY et al. (Civ. 7086.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 30, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 28, 1929.

Municipal corporations §31—Council's postponement of election on consolidation of municipalities more than eight months after resolution pursuant to electors' petition held unauthorized (Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2 [St. 1913, p. 577]).

Action of city council in fixing date of election, on the question of consolidation with another city, more than eight months after passage of resolution calling for election pursuant to electors' petition, held unauthorized and in violation of Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2 (St. 1913, p. 577), requiring council without delay to call special election and submit question of consolidation to electors.

Application by Frank G. Crowhurst for mandamus to be directed to the City Council of the City of Albany and others. Writ granted.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for petitioner.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the city council of the city of Albany and the individual members thereof to submit without delay to the electors of that city, at a special election to be called and held pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of the Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 577), the proposition whether such municipality shall be consolidated with the city of Berkeley.

The electors' petition filed with the city council initiating the proceedings for the holding of such election was the second one of its kind to be filed for that purpose. The first was declared illegal by this court on March 15, 1929, upon the ground that it did not conform to the requirements of the statute. Carter v. Green, 276 P. 120. Before the judgment therein became final and on April 8, 1929, a new petition was filed with the city council, upon which it refused to act on the ground that the legal proceeding involving the validity of the first petition was still pending. Thereupon mandamus proceedings were instituted to compel the council to take action thereon, and on May 20, 1929, Division 2 of the District Court of Appeal, District 1, held adversely upon all objections raised by the council, and directed that the writ issue as prayed. Crowhurst v. Green et al., 277 P. 886. Thereafter and on July 23, 1929, the petition was again brought before the council, at which time it was referred to the city clerk for certification of the signatures, and on August 12, 1929, the petition was certified as being legally sufficient. On the same day the city council passed a resolution calling the special election, but fixed April 14, 1930, as the date on which it should be held, which, as will be noted, is more than eight months subsequent to the date of the passage of the resolution calling the election.

Section 2 of said act provides in substance that whenever a petition conforming to the requirements of said act shall be filed with the legislative body of a city, "such legislative body must, without delay call a special election and submit to the electors of such municipal corporation the question whether such municipal corporations shall be consolidated" (italics ours), and that notice of such election shall be given by publication in a newspaper printed and published in such municipality at least once a week for the period of four successive weeks next preceding the date of such election; and furthermore that the date fixed for the holding of such election "shall be within 20 days after the publication of such notice."

It is clear from the mere reading of the provisions of section 2 of said act that the legislative body of a city has no judicial power to defer the holding of an election petitioned for in conformity with the requirements of said act, but must without delay call the election and must also without delay submit to the electors the proposition to be voted upon; and it is also clear that the statute contemplates that four weeks and twenty days is a reasonable time within which to hold the election after the passage of the resolution calling the same. It follows, therefore, that the action of the city council of the city of Albany in fixing the date of the election for a date more than eight months after the passage of the resolution calling the election was in violation of the letter and the spirit of the law. The excuses offered by respondents in justification of their action in thus delaying the holding of the election, as the same are pleaded in the answer, are in their nature purely political, and while the same might be urged in opposition to the proposition to be voted upon, it is certain they do not serve as legal grounds for the suspension of the mandatory provisions of the statute requiring the council to submit the proposition to the electors of the city "without delay."

For the reasons stated it is ordered that the demurrer to the petition herein be overruled, and that a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed; that respondents forthwith rescind and set aside the former resolution of the city council passed on August 12, 1929, calling said election and fixing the date thereof for April 14, 1930, and forthwith thereafter take the necessary and appropriate proceedings in conformity with the terms of said act to hold said special election; and that the same be held, on a date not later than six weeks after the service of the writ herein upon a majority of the members of the city council of said city.

MINOR v. FOOTE et al. (Civ. 6773.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 27, 1929.

1. Negligence $\S$ 136(26)—Only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction can be drawn from evidence, can court say as matter of law that contributory negligence is established.

Question whether plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is primarily one to be determined by jury from all circumstances and physical conditions attending accident, and it is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction can be drawn by jury from evidence, that court can say as matter of law that contributory negligence is established, and even where facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions therefrom, question is for jury.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 930(1)—Appellate court will assume that prevailing party's testimony is true, and evidence will be construed to sustain jury findings.

On appeal, it will be assumed that testimony of prevailing party is true, and entire evidence will be construed in most favorable way to sustain findings of jury.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 979(2)—Granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence is conclusive on appellate court, unless there has been abuse of discretion.

Where a new trial has been granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence, trial court's action is conclusive in appellate court, unless there has been abuse of discretion.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 244(50)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that pedestrian, struck by automobile at intersection, was not contributorily negligent.

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian, struck by automobile at street intersection, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding of jury that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

5. Automobiles $\S$ 217(6)—Pedestrian is not contributorily negligent in failing to run, on observing automobile which strikes him.

A pedestrian, who is struck while crossing a street in a lawful and prudent manner, will not be deemed guilty of contributory negligence merely because he did not run, on observing approach of automobile which struck him.

6. Automobiles $\S$ 160(1)—Automobile driver must be vigilant and anticipate presence of others on street.

Driver of automobile has no right to assume that road is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times he must be vigilant, and must anticipate and expect the presence of others.

7. Automobiles $\S$ 160(3), 163(8)—Automobilist making left turn was required to see that crossing was clear, or to have automobile under sufficient control, if unable to see because of darkness.

Driver of automobile, in making a left turn at street intersection, was charged with duty of looking to see that crossing was clear before attempting to cross it, or, if unable to see crossing because of darkness, of having her automobile under sufficient control when she made the turn to avoid striking pedestrians already on the crossing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Homer R. Spence, Judge.

Action by Sarah C. Minor against Georgena Foote and another. From an order granting a new trial, because the verdict for plaintiff was for a sum less than the amount stipulated by the parties as the special damages to plaintiff, defendant Foote appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph E. Reardon and Benjamin F. Curtaz, both of San Francisco (Ivores R. Dains, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

P. O. Solon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of being struck by an automobile belonging to defendant Adelaide MacSweeney and driven by defendant Georgena Foote. At the conclusion of the trial the action was dismissed as to Adelaide MacSweeney. Plaintiff sued for $15,000 general damages and $777.06 special damages. The defendant Georgena Foote, although denying liability for the accident, stipulated during the trial, which took place before a jury, that plaintiff had necessarily expended the sum of $777.06 for the treatment of her injuries. The jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor, but, disregarding the stipulation above mentioned, awarded her damages for only $500. Judgment being entered for that amount, plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the motion was granted, upon the grounds of "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and that the verdict is against law, said verdict having been rendered in favor of the plaintiff for a sum less than the amount stipulated by the parties as the special damages to the plaintiff."

An appeal was taken by the defendant from the order granting the new trial, and in support thereof she contends that the evidence shows that plaintiff's own negligence was the sole proximate cause of her injury, and that defendant was not guilty of any negligence, and that therefore, "conceding for the purposes of argument that the damages awarded her were inadequate, it does not follow that an order granting a new trial for such reason may be sustained, if the evidence shows that plaintiff was guilty of negligence as a matter of law which proximately contributed to her injuries, or if the evidence fails to show negligence on the part of defendant and appellant."

The evidence shows that the accident occurred in Berkeley on September 16, 1926, at about 7:40 p. m., while plaintiff was attempting to cross Atherton street, where it joins Allston way. The latter street forms the south boundary of the grounds of the University of California, and is occupied by a double-track street railway line. Atherton street enters Allston way at right angles on the south side thereof, but does not cross Allston way. At the time of the accident it was dark, the darkness being intensified by trees and the absence of street lights. Immediately preceding the accident, Mrs. Minor, the plaintiff, who was 70 years of age, but active and in the full possession of her faculties of sight and hearing, and her daughter, Ruby Minor, were walking in a westerly direction along the sidewalk on the southerly side of Allston way. When they reached the southeast corner of the streets, they stopped "and made a survey of the conditions." Mrs. Minor testified that they first looked to the left down Atherton, then ahead (west) up Allston, and then continued on their course straight ahead to cross Atherton; that when they reached a point about the middle of the street she heard her daughter scream, and turning her head to the right she saw the light of an automobile; and that she was struck almost instantly. The testimony given by Mrs. Minor's daughter was substantially the same, but she stated that when they reached Atherton street, and before venturing across, they "looked in every direction to see if any automobiles were approaching," and, seeing none, they started across. Appellant was driving westerly up Allston way in the same direction in which the Minors were walking, and after reaching the center of the intersection of Atherton street made a left-hand turn to drive southerly down Atherton. Miss Minor testified that she saw the approaching automobile for the first time just as it was making the turn; that it was traveling "very fast," "between 25 and 30 miles an hour"; that she screamed, "Run, mother, run!" and started to run to the other side of the street; that while running she heard the impact, and realized that her mother had been struck.

Appellant was 22 years of age and a student at the University. She testified that upon reaching the intersection, and while making the left-hand turn, she was traveling at a speed of only 12 miles an hour or less; that the headlights of the Ford coupé which she was driving were lighted, and that the lights and the brakes were in good condition; that the weather was clear, and there was no traffic or other obstacles to obstruct her view of the crossing, but that she did not see Mrs. Minor until she was within 3 feet of her, at which time she applied the brakes and stopped the automobile within 6 feet beyond the point of the impact. She admitted, however, that at no time did she sound a horn, nor give any other warning of her approach, or of her intention to make the left-hand turn, except to give the regulation hand signal approximately 50 feet before reaching the intersection. She also admitted that the automobile was almost new, and that it "did not make an exceptional lot of noise." Furthermore, at the police station following the accident she made a written statement, in which she admitted "partial responsibility" for the accident.

[1-3] The question of whether or not a plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is primarily one to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances and physical conditions attending the accident (Jones v. Southern Pac. Co., 74 Cal. App. 10, 239 P. 429); and where the evidence of negligence consists of circumstances from which inferences may be drawn in favor of or against negligence, it is the province of the jury to determine whether or not there was negligence (Keena v. United Railroads of S. F., 57 Cal. App. 124, 207 P. 35). It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that a court can say as a matter of law that contributory negligence is established; and even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one for the jury. Katz v. T. I. Butler Co., 81 Cal. App. 747, 254 P. 679. Moreover, in reviewing the question on appeal it will be assumed that the testimony of the prevailing party is true, and the entire evidence will be construed in the most favorable way to sustain the findings of the jury. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 926. The law is well settled also that, where a new trial has been granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the action of the trial judge is conclusive in the appellate court, unless there has been an abuse of discretion.

Hanlon Drydock, etc., Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal. App.) 268 P. 385.

[4] We are of the opinion that the evidence above set forth is legally sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that consequently the trial court did not abuse its discretion in not holding otherwise in ruling on the motion for a new trial.

[5-7] Appellant calls attention to the fact that plaintiff's daughter observed the lights of the automobile in time to avoid injury by running to the other side of the street, and appellant argues, therefore, that, "had plaintiff exercised the same degree of care as her daughter, she too would have avoided injury." The evidence shows, however, that plaintiff saw the lights instantly after her daughter observed them, and, bearing in mind plaintiff's advanced age, the jury may well have doubted whether she could have escaped injury by running. Moreover, we do not agree to the proposition, which appellant seems to urge, that a pedestrian who is struck while crossing a street in a lawful and prudent manner should be deemed guilty of contributory negligence merely because he did not run upon observing the approach of the automobile which strikes him. As held in Devecchio v. Ricketts, 66 Cal. App. 334, 226 P. 11, the right of drivers of automobiles to use public highways is not superior to that of the humblest pedestrian, and accordingly the driver of an automobile has no right to assume that the road is clear, but under all circumstances and at all times he must be vigilant, and must anticipate and expect the presence of others.

In the present case the evidence shows that plaintiff and her daughter had reached the middle of the crossing when appellant, without sounding any warning, suddenly came upon them by making a left-hand turn, and consequently appellant was charged with the legal duty of looking to see that the crossing was clear before attempting to cross it, or, if she was unable to see the crossing because of darkness, of having her automobile under sufficient control at the time she made the turn to avoid striking any pedestrians who were already on the crossing.

The facts of the cases emphasized by appellant in her brief are materially different from those of the case at bar. In Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 776, 89 P. 1109, 1112, the plaintiff was riding a bicycle between the street car tracks in the daytime, and was overtaken and struck by the car, and it was held that under such circumstances it was perfectly plain that his "failure to see or hear the car must have been the result of absolute inattention to his situation and surroundings, and that he exercised no care whatever." In Finkle v. Tait, 55 Cal. App. 425, 203 P. 1031, 1034, the opinion of the Supreme Court in passing upon a petition for a hearing before that court states that the pedestrian who was struck "either failed to take the trouble to look for automobiles on that side of the street as he crossed, or that he saw the automobile and carelessly walked in front of it," and that "there was evidence that he was carrying a box of raisins * * * on his shoulder, in such a position that it may have obscured his vision." In Atkins v. Bouchet, 65 Cal. App. 94, 223 P. 87, the undisputed facts were that "the plaintiff, while crossing the street, glanced neither to the right nor the left, and with her umbrella held down to her waist line had her view of traffic on her left completely cut off, and did not see the automobile at any time until after the collision, although the accident occurred in the middle of the day." And in Ogden v. Lee, 61 Cal. App. 493, 215 P. 122, the pedestrian looked twice in the direction of the automobile and saw its lights, and notwithstanding continued to walk across the street, with an umbrella pulled down over his face, until he was struck.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

ROBERTS v. GRIFFITH CO. (Civ. 6709.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 28, 1929.

1. Animals ☞53—Permitting horses or mules to run untended on streets may be actionable negligence, regardless of their vicious character or scienter.

It may be actionable negligence to permit horses and mules to run at large and untended on streets of municipality, regardless of their vicious character or scienter.

2. Animals ☞55—Complaint alleging that defendant negligently allowed mules to run upon streets, and that they threw marshal to ground, breaking his leg, stated cause of action (Pen. Code, § 370).

Complaint, alleging that city was of sixth class, and plaintiff was deputy marshal thereof, and that defendant carelessly and negligently allowed mules to run at large without keeper or other supervision upon streets, thereby creating public nuisance and obstructing free passage of streets, in violation of Pen. Code, § 370, and that plaintiff while engaged in abating nuisance was thrown by mules violently to ground and his left leg broken to his damage, held to state cause of action.

3. Animals ☞55—Complaint alleging that defendant negligently permitted mules to run upon streets, and that mules threw marshal abating nuisance, breaking his leg, sufficiently showed how accident occurred (Pen. Code, § 370).

Complaint in effect alleging that defendant negligently permitted mules to be at large upon streets creating public nuisance by obstructing free passage and use of streets in violation of Pen. Code, § 370, and that by reason of negligence plaintiff as deputy marshal, without negligence on his part, was while attempting to abate nuisance thrown down by mules resulting in breaking of deputy's leg, held sufficient to show how or in what manner accident occurred.

4. Pleading ⚡34(1)—In determining pleading's effect, allegations must be liberally construed (Code Civ. Proc. § 452).

In the construction of pleading for purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed with view to substantial justice between parties as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 452.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Clarence W. Roberts against the Griffith Company. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed with directions.

Superseding former opinion in 277 P. 901.

Brewton A. Hayne and Ernest M. Torchia, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. From a judgment of dismissal, entered pursuant to an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

The complaint, in substance, alleges that Lynwood is a city of the sixth class and plaintiff was and is a deputy marshal thereof; that defendant was and is a corporation, chiefly engaged in doing street work, and in connection therewith owned more than twenty mules; that on October 24, 1926, at the hour of 10 o'clock p. m., defendant carelessly and negligently allowed about 20 of its mules to run at large, without a keeper or other supervision, upon the public streets of Lynwood, thereby creating a public nuisance by unlawfully obstructing the free passage and use in the customary manner of said streets, in violation of section 370 of the Penal Code; that it thereupon became the duty of plaintiff, as a deputy marshal, to abate such nuisance, and while engaged with two other deputy marshals in driving such mules from the streets plaintiff was thrown by such mules violently to the ground and his left leg broken to his damage. The demurrer was both general and special.

[1] It is not contended by respondent that under the circumstances alleged in the complaint plaintiff was not acting in the performance of his duty in endeavoring to remove the mules from the city streets; but respondent does contend that no actionable negligence is pleaded because there is no allegation that the mules were vicious or of scienter on the part of respondent; and that the negligence, if any, in permitting them at large was not the proximate cause of appellant's injuries. With these contentions we cannot agree. While there is a conflict of authority on the subject in the various jurisdictions, we are satisfied that the better rule is that it may be actionable negligence to permit horses or mules to run at large and untended on the streets of a municipality regardless of their vicious character or of scienter.

In Goodman v. Gay, 15 Pa. 188, 53 Am. Dec. 589, the court said:

"The owner has no right, either by law or custom, to turn a horse loose in the streets of a city. All men know that a horse which has been stabled and well fed will, when turned out, run and plunge, and become dangerous in the midst of people. If one man has the right to turn out his horse, every man has the same right; and if the one-fourth of people who own horses in a city would turn them out on the streets, not only the women and children, but even the men would have to abandon them.

"There is no reported case in which it was held that a person who turned out his horse in the streets of London or New York was not answerable, if he ran over a child or a woman unless the owner knew, when he turned him out, that he was vicious and prone to kick. But I may say that all horses are, when turned loose, more or less dangerous in confined streets; and all men know this. The gist of the action is that the defendant did an act not sanctioned by law or custom, from which he must have known that injury might result."

To the same effect are Dickson v. McCoy, 39 N. Y. 400; Hardiman v. Wholly, 172 Mass. 411, 52 N. E. 518, 70 Am. St. Rep. 292; Baldwin v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 113, 44 Am. Rep. 205; Doherty v. Sweetser, 82 Hun. 556, 31 N. Y. S. 649; Wasmuth v. Butler, 86 Hun. 1, 33 N. Y. S. 108; Stern v. Hoffman Brewing Co., 26 Misc. Rep. 794, 56 N. Y. S. 188; Drew v. Gross, 112 Ohio St. 485, 147 N. E. 757, 758.

Of similar import are the following cases holding that it is actionable negligence to leave a horse or team untethered and unguarded on a public street: Bowen v. Flanagan, 84 Va. 313, 4 S. E. 724; Phillips v. De Wald, 79 Ga. 732, 7 S. E. 151, 11 Am. St. Rep. 458; Griffiths v. Clift, 4 Utah, 462, 11 P. 609; Pierce v. Connors, 20 Colo. 178, 37 P. 721, 46 Am. St. Rep. 279; Rumsey v. Nelson, 58 Vt. 590, 3 A. 484; Moulton v. Aldrich, 28 Kan. 300.

Respondent relies on the English case of Cox v. Burbridge, 13 C. B. (N. S.) 431, 143 Eng. Rep. 171, and the English cases following it, and the Indiana case of Klenburg v. Russell, 125 Ind. 531, 25 N. E. 596. In Healey v. P. Ballantine & Sons, 66 N. J. Law, 339, 49 A. 511, 514, the Supreme Court of New Jersey expressly disapproved the case of Cox v. Bur- bridge, supra, in the following language: "Mr. Wood, commenting on the case of Cox v. Burbridge, says: 'The doctrine of this case does not commend itself to the court or profession, as being consistent with reason or sound policy. The horse was unlawfully in the highway. The child was lawfully there, and there seems to be no good reason why the owner or keeper of the horse should not be responsible for the injuries inflicted upon the child while the horse was so unlawfully at large.' Wood, Nuis., p. 190. Judge Redfield, in discussing the case of Cox v. Burbridge, says that that case 'has created some discussion in England, and provoked some unfriendly criticisms, as it seems to us not altogether without reason. It seems almost incomprehensible that anyone should require proof that the owner of a horse was made aware of its propensity to do damage when running at large in the highway. If the horse was wrongfully in the highway, and did damage in consequence to any person or thing rightfully there, the owner or keeper should be responsible, as it seems to us.' 4 Am. Law. Reg. (N. S.) pp. 140, 141. It may be safely asserted that the decision of that case was contrary to the great weight of authority in this country, and it seems to us not sustained on principle or by preceding authority in England."

With this criticism of the principle of Cox v. Burbridge and those cases which have followed it we fully agree. It would be intolerable to permit such animals, as horses, mules, and cattle to roam untended and untethered on the public streets of incorporated cities and towns without holding the owners liable for the natural consequences of their being so at large.

While the precise question has not come before our appellate courts, the early case of Ficken v. Jones, 28 Cal. 618, 625, is instructive. In that case plaintiff was injured by a steer which was being driven with other cattle through Brannan street in San Francisco. There was no evidence that the cattle were wild, untamed, or vicious, or that defendants had cause to believe they were so; but the court held that defendants were nevertheless bound to exercise care in driving them for the safety of people on the streets and would be liable for failure to do so which resulted in injury to person, saying: "The driving of cattle through the streets of a city is attended with danger to persons who are of right there, and who can justly demand that the care, diligence and skill essential to their safety shall be commensurate with the necessities of the case." If the driving of cattle through city streets is attended with danger to persons, the permitting of them to wander unattended is of necessity fraught with greater peril.

The Supreme Court of Ohio, in Drew v. Gross, supra, said of a horse at large on the highway: "What ordinary care demands depends always upon the circumstances of the case, and a primary factor among those circumstances is the fact whether the injury could or could not have reasonably been anticipated from the acts done or left undone by the defendant."

[2] The real question in this case is whether the defendant could have reasonably foreseen that by allowing a band of twenty mules to be loose upon the streets an injury such as occurred to plaintiff might ensue. To that question there is only one reasonable answer. Any one who has had experience with animals in herds or bands, however docile they may ordinarily be, must know the danger attendant upon frightening, alarming, or startling them, and must equally know how unaccountable their actions may sometimes be.

We conclude that the complaint stated a cause of action.

[3] Respondent insists, however, that the judgment should not be reversed because it was urged as a ground of special demurrer that the complaint was uncertain as to how or in what manner the accident occurred. It is claimed that this ground of special demurrer was well taken, and since plaintiff did not ask leave to amend the judgment must be affirmed. The complaint in this regard, after alleging that the mules were negligently permitted to be at large on the streets of the town, contains the following averment: "The plaintiff, without any negligence on his part, was by said mules, violently thrown upon the ground." Respondent's criticism of this allegation is that the verb "thrown" is too indefinite to indicate in what manner the accident occurred and would be perfectly consistent with the fact that appellant was attempting to ride one of the mules without saddle or bridle. We think this criticism is unduly hypercritical. Among the definitions of the verb "to throw" in Webster's New International Dictionary we find: "To drive or impel by violence; to dash; force, to cause to fall; to prostrate; to cast down."

At least since the decision of Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 P. 618, 619, 36 P. 407, it is the settled rule in California that negligence and proximate cause may be simply set forth, the classic example given in the Stephenson Case being: "For that the defendant so negligently drove his horse and carriage that the same struck against the carriage and horse of the defendant." And while in the Stephenson Case by way of dictum it was suggested that such a complaint might be vulnerable to a special demurrer, subsequent cases have held that it is not (Cunningham v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 561, 47 P. 452; Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368, 113 P. 663). In effect the complaint alleges that respondent negligently permitted the mules to be at large, and that by reason of such negligence plaintiff without negligence on his part was by said mules thrown down. We think this is sufficient.

[4] In Mix v. Yoakum, 200 Cal. 681, at page 687, 254 P. 557, 559, the Supreme Court says: "The defendants insist upon the application of the rule that a pleading must be taken most strongly against the pleader. This rule received recognition in the earlier cases [citing cases] and the old rule seems to have received some, but we think, ill-considered notice in Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 192 P. 534, where, on page 702 (192 P. 537), a quotation from Joseph v. Holt (37 Cal. 250) supra, is set forth. Since the enactment of section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1872, it has been generally recognized that, in the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, 'its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties.'"

No case relied on by respondent dealt with a pleading at all similar to the one here.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6570.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 14, 1929.

Criminal law ☞ §192—Trial court could not, after conviction and order denying defendant new trial were affirmed, admit him to probation with fine (Pen. Code, §§ 1203, 1263).

Where one was convicted for failure to stop and render assistance, as provided by Pen. Code, § 367c, after truck driven by him had collided with automobile, injuring an occupant thereof, and judgment and order denying his motion for new trial were affirmed, trial court was not authorized thereafter to modify judgment of imprisonment, and attempt to change it to judgment of fine in sum of $500, and order probation on condition that defendant pay fine, under section 1263, requiring that, if affirmed, original judgment must be enforced, and notwithstanding that section 1203 authorizes trial court in granting probation, to require payment of fine as condition thereof.

Application by the People of the State of California for a writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Imperial and another, to require respondent court to enforce a judgment. Writ granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

Hickcox, Trude & Johnson, of El Centro, and Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for respondents.

R. B. Whitelaw and Utley & Nuffer, all of El Centro, for defendant Maggio.

CONREY, P. J. By information filed in respondent court (case No. 1947), one Salvatore Maggio was charged with the crime of violation of section 367c of the Penal Code (committed August 22, 1927), to wit, for failure to stop and render assistance, etc., after a truck driven by him had collided with an automobile and injured an occupant thereof. Maggio was convicted (November 16, 1928) and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison, and he thereafter appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The judgment and order were affirmed. People v. Maggio (Cal. App.) 266 P. 813. The remittitur was filed in respondent court on the 31st day of May, 1928. On the next day, June 1st, respondent court modified the judgment which had been thus affirmed, and attempted to change it to a judgment of fine in the sum of $500. From this amending order the people appealed and the order was reversed. People v. Maggio (Cal. App.) 274 P. 611. The remittitur on this second appeal was filed in respondent court on the 24th day of February, 1929. Thereafter on the 15th day of March, 1929, the district attorney presented to said superior court a motion that the court direct commitment to be issued and delivered to the sheriff, together with a copy of the judgment and remittitur in the case, for the purpose of putting the original judgment into effect. This motion was denied, and in lieu thereof the court made an order admitting the defendant Maggio to probation, on condition that he pay a fine of $500. Thereupon the people filed in this court their petition for writ of mandate, and the alternative writ was issued. Return having been made, this cause has been argued and submitted.

We are satisfied that, if it be held that the court was without authority to make such probation order, a proper case is presented for the issuance of a writ of mandate, notwithstanding any right of appeal which the people may have. The people contend that in a criminal action the trial court is without authority to grant an application for probation after the affirmation of a judgment of conviction on appeal. The reversal of the first order modifying the judgment (People v. Maggio [Cal. App.] 274 P. 611) was founded upon the provisions of sections 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code, which are quoted in that decision, and upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Beggs v. Superior Court, 179 Cal. 130, 175 P. 642, 644, which decision rested upon the court's construction of said sections of the Penal Code. The Supreme Court said: "It is clear, from the reading of these provisions, that after a judgment of conviction in a criminal case has been affirmed by an appellate tribunal judicial power to alter or suspend it has ceased." In his concurring opinion in that case, Mr. Justice Wilbur pointed out that the procedure where probation is granted may result in cancellation of the judgment and dismissal of the charge, in which event the judgment would never be enforced. But section 1263 of the Penal Code requires that in the event of an affirmance "the original judgment must be enforced." It is worthy of note that, in its order granting probation, respondent court has again attempted, not only to suspend the imposing of sentence but to reimpose a fine of $500, which is the very thing which, on the appeal of the people, it was held that the court had no authority to do. Notwithstanding that section 1203 of the Penal Code authorizes a trial court, in granting probation, to require the payment of a fine as a condition of probation, we are of the opinion that such authority does not exist under the circumstances presented by the record in this case. This is so because the right to admit to probation after affirmance of the judgment does not exist at all.

In accordance with the views hereinabove expressed, it is clear that the peremptory writ of mandate should issue; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6569.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 14, 1929.

Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1001—Court, knowing that prior to judgment and order of probation defendant had been convicted of felony, could not admit defendant to probation (Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493).

Where defendant, prior to time when judgment convicting him of manslaughter was pronounced and order of probation made, had been convicted of felony, and that fact was presented to and considered by court in connection with application for probation, trial court was without authority to admit defendant to probation, under Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493, providing that probation shall not be granted to defendant, unless court be satisfied he has not been previously convicted of felony.

Application by the People of the State of California for a writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Imperial, and another, to require the respondent court to enforce a judgment. Writ granted.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward W. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

Hickcox, Trude & Johnson, of El Centro, and Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for respondents.

R. B. Whitelaw and Utley & Nuffer, all of El Centro, for defendant Maggio.

CONREY, P. J. By information filed in respondent court (case No. 1959) one Salvatore Maggio was charged with the crime of manslaughter, committed on the 12th day of November, 1927. His plea of guilty was entered on the 21st day of May, 1928, and he applied for probation. On the 1st day of June, 1928, the matter of sentence and application for probation came on for hearing. The court pronounced sentence of imprisonment in the state prison, but granted the application for probation and suspended the execution of the sentence. Thereafter the people moved said superior court for an order vacating the order granting probation, and for an order directing the issuance of the commitment, and for such other proceedings as are required by law to put into effect the judgment. This motion was denied on the 15th day of March, 1929. The people then filed their petition in this court, pursuant to which the alternative writ of mandate has been issued.

Prior to the time when judgment was pronounced and the order of probation made in said action No. 1959, the defendant had been convicted of a felony, and that fact was presented to and considered by the court in connection with the application for probation in case No. 1959. The history of said former action and conviction, and the status of the same as it was on the 1st day of June, 1928, are set forth in People v. Superior Court (Civil No. 6570) 88 Cal. App. —, 280 P. 202, in which the decision of this court has been this day filed.

Section 1203 of the Penal Code contains the provisions of law under which admission to probation in criminal cases is authorized. That section, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493), was in force at the time of the proceedings to which we have referred. It is therein provided that, after the conviction by plea or verdict of guilty of a public offense, in cases where discretion is conferred on the court, the court may, under the circumstances indicated in the section, place the defendant on probation; but the authority so given is qualified as follows: "Further provided, however, that probation shall not be granted to any defendant * * * unless the court shall be satisfied that he has never in any place been previously convicted of a felony. * * * In view of the facts to which we have referred, showing that it was then and there well known to the court that the defendant had been convicted of a felony, it seems to us that the conclusion is imperative that in said action No. 1959, as well as in the other action, the court was without authority to admit the defendant to probation.

Let the peremptory writ issue.

PEOPLE v. GUZMAN. (Cr. 1801.)†

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 27, 1929.

Aliens ⇨17—Statute requiring defendant to prove citizenship held not to require defendant prosecuted for possessing firearms as alien to prove nativity (Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434; St. 1923, p. 696).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1983, as added by St. 1927, p. 434, providing that in any proceeding by state to enforce laws denying certain privileges or licenses to aliens, alleged alien shall have burden of establishing that he was, at the time of exercising right or privilege, a citizen or eligible to become such, provided state has proved that he actually exercised right or privilege, defendant in prosecution for possessing firearms as naturalized foreign-born alien under St. 1923, p. 696, could not be forced to prove his nativity or suffer a conviction because of his silence, since place of one's nativity is not a matter peculiarly within his knowledge so as to be within ab inconvenienti rule.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

On motion for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 279 P. 844.

Trujillo & Eriksson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. It was remarked in People v. Bruno (Cal. App.) 279 P. 175, that the place of one's nativity is not a matter peculiarly within his knowledge. In that case and in the main opinion in this case, by quotation from the earlier one, we contented ourselves with this statement, believing it to carry an obvious truth. The Attorney General still insists, however, that under section 1983 of the Code of Civil Procedure (as added by St. 1927, p. 434), the defendant in such a case as this may be forced to prove his nativity or suffer a conviction because of his silence. There is a vast difference between appellant here and a defendant in an action in which is in controversy the question whether a certain license has been issued to him. In a case of the latter nature the defendant is bound to know whether he has had the license. In a case like the present it may easily occur that the defendant has no knowledge whatever of the place of his nativity. The world is full of individuals whose parents have deceased, or who have deserted them, in their early infancy, leaving no one to communicate to them those circumstances relating to date and place of birth, which, if communicated by the proper persons, would be admissible in evidence under the exception to the hearsay rule in matters of pedigree. Appellant may be one of these individuals. Certainly, we cannot assume that he is not, and the same remark applies to every defendant who refuses to take the witness stand in such an action as the present one. It seems plain, therefore, that the matters which were here left to the defendant to prove were not peculiarly within his knowledge. Proof of them has no relation whatever to the ab inconvenienti rule. To require defendant to make such proof, under section 1983, is to convict the Legislature of the wrong of having required a defendant to prove that which he cannot prove, merely because it may be difficult for the People to prove it.

Rehearing denied.

DOBDEL v. REARDON.

(Civ. 6939.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Wills ⇨55(3)—Evidence showed testator was not of unsound mind or suffering from insane delusion when executing will.

Evidence in application for the probate of will held insufficient to support jury's finding that testator was not of sound mind or was suffering from an insane delusion at time he executed will.

2. Wills ⇨50—Testator has sound and disposing mind and memory if, when making will, he understands nature of act, and property, and relations to persons having claims upon bounty whose interests will affect.

Testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if at time of making his will he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand nature of act he is doing, to understand and recollect nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by provisions of will.

†Hearing granted. 286 P. 1037.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Wills ☞21—Mental condition of testator when executing will is question in determining capacity.

Actual mental condition of testator at time of execution of will is question in determination of whether testator was of sound mind with capacity to make will.

4. Wills ☞53(2)—Evidence of mental condition before and after execution of will is admissible only as showing mental condition at execution.

Evidence as to mental condition before and after execution of will may be relevant and admissible in determining whether testator was of sound mind, but it is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at time of executing testamentary document.

5. Wills ☞38(1)—Testator's mistaken belief that disinherited sister needed no financial help was not insane delusion sufficient to overcome presumption of soundness of mind to execute will.

Though testator who disinherited sister was mistaken as to belief in sister's financial condition, where there was some basis for belief and testator's judgment that sister needed no financial help, it did not amount to insane delusion sufficient in itself to overcome presumption of soundness of mind to execute will.

6. Appeal and error ☞1048(3)—Error in permitting expert witnesses to base conclusions as to testator's capacity to execute will upon incorrect premises required reversal of judgment denying probate.

Error in permitting expert witnesses of contestant to probate of will to base their answers to questions upon statement of facts which was contrary to facts proved and omitted essential elements in history of testator's life which were before jury and conceded to be true concerning soundness of testator's mind, held to require reversal of judgment denying probate of will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Application by F. W. Dobbelt for the probate of the will of Alfred C. Clark, also known as Alfred Churchill Clark, deceased. From a decree in favor of the contestant, Oliver L. Reardon, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Elizabeth Clark Wiley, deceased, denying the probate, the proponent appeals. Reversed.

A. R. Grinstead, of Sonoma, and Clarendon W. Anderson, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court rendered upon a verdict of the jury denying probate of the will of Alfred C. Clark. The appeal is presented on typewritten transcripts.

Alfred C. Clark died on March 11, 1926, at the age of 70 years. He left surviving him as his only heir at law his sister, Elizabeth Clark Wiley, who was the contestant in the trial court. Subsequent to the trial, this contestant died, and her administrator has been substituted as party respondent herein.

The decedent's family moved to Sonoma county in the year 1875, and settled upon a ranch near Glen Ellen. From 1875 to 1898, when the decedent's father died, the decedent worked with his father on the ranch, and in 1898 the decedent married and continued to reside with his wife upon the ranch and to farm the same. In 1913 the decedent obtained a divorce from his wife upon the ground of her desertion. He married again in 1916, and his second wife died in 1924. The contestant lived in the same household with decedent until their father's death, when the contestant moved to another house near by, where she continued to live until her marriage in 1909, when she moved to Ventura county. For many years prior to his death the decedent and contestant were estranged because of controversies arising out of the settlement of the estate of their father and of a brother named George Clark, who died in 1920. The original ranch property had been divided and other properties acquired, so that, about the time of the father's death, and until the death of the brother, George, the decedent, in addition to taking care of his own property and of the interest of the contestant, managed and farmed the property belonging to the brother, George. George's property went to the decedent and the contestant, and this was subsequently sold by the decedent and the proceeds divided. Prior to the sale of this property, the decedent wrote to contestant stating that he could obtain fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars for it, and the contestant agreed to accept $8,000 as her share, and sent a deed conveying her interest. The property, however, was sold for $25,000, and the decedent insisted upon holding the contestant to her bargain, sending her $8,000 from the proceeds and investing the rest on his own behalf. This occurred in the latter part of 1920, and from that time until decedent's death the parties drifted apart, and during the last three years of decedent's life they did not see each other at all. The will was executed on March 10, 1926, while the decedent was sick in the hospital suffering from hypostatic pneumonia, from which he passed away on the day following. This controversy is referred to as explaining in a measure the decedent's act in omitting to provide for his sister in his will. The testimony regarding this controversy no doubt bore an important part of the jury's verdict in favor of the sister, and, though it has little bearing upon the real issues tried, it should be noted that the jury heard the contestant's side of the controversy only.

[1] The attack upon the will was based upon the grounds that it was not executed in the manner and form required by law, that the decedent was not of sound or disposing mind or memory, and that he was suffering from insane delusions, in that he stated that the contestant was possessed of sufficient property and means for her own support and that she was a religious fanatic and that he feared that any property he might leave her would be contributed by her to religious purposes. At the close of contestant's case, the trial judge granted a nonsuit on the issue of the improper execution of the will, and the other two issues were submitted to the jury. On these the jury answered that the decedent was not of sound and disposing mind at the time the will was executed, and that he was at the time suffering from insane delusions. On this appeal the attack upon the judgment is based upon the grounds that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict in either particular. The evidence on the part of the contestant rested upon her testimony and that of four elderly women, who related numerous idiosyncrasies and peculiarities of the decedent generally, running over a period of ten to twenty years prior to the date of the execution of the will. In addition to this, three medical experts were called, and, in answer to a hypothetical question which had been prepared in advance for them by the contestant, they answered that in their opinion the deceased was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the will. Another witness called by the contestant, the cashier of the bank where the decedent transacted his business, testified as to matters relating to the decedent's account in the bank, but, when asked upon cross-examination his opinion as to the mental capacity of the decedent the contestant objected, and he was prevented from answering. On the part of the proponent, testimony was given by the two subscribing witnesses to the will, by the physician and the nurse who was in constant attendance upon him in his last illness, by his family physician, and by many friends and neighbors, who testified unqualifiedly that the decedent was of sound mind. Having reviewed all this testimony, we are satisfied that the evidence does not support the jury's finding of unsoundness of mind or that the decedent was suffering from an insane delusion, and for these reasons the judgment must be reversed, but in conformity to the practice in cases of this kind, we will include a résumé of this testimony in order that those who wish may read.

[2-4] Before discussing the testimony, it is well to refer to the rules of law governing a case of this character. For this purpose we cannot improve upon the statement of the Supreme Court in Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 764, 251 P. 778, 780, as follows:

"A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument. Estate of Motz [136 Cal. 558, 69 P. 294], supra; Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534; Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 P. 852; Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085. The actual mental condition of the testator at the time of the execution of the will is the question to be determined. Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; 26 Cal. Jur. 635. Evidence as to mental condition before and after the execution of the will may be relevant and admissible, but it is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of executing the testamentary document."

In emphasizing the degree of mental unsoundness sufficient to destroy testamentary capacity, we quote from page 765 of 199 Cal. (251 P. 780), of the same case, as follows:

"'Insanity' is a broad, comprehensive, and generic term of ambiguous import. In a medical sense, it is used to denote any unsound and deranged conditions of the mind, and every degree of mental unsoundness, whatever may be its source or cause. 32 C. J. 594. But mere proof of mental derangement, or of insanity in a medical sense, is not sufficient to invalidate a will. Not every degree of mental unsoundness or mental weakness will suffice to destroy testamentary capacity. The contestant is required to go further than that. He must either show such a complete mental derangement as denotes utter incapacity to know and to understand those things which a testator must be able to know and to understand in order to possess testamentary capacity, or he must show the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will in question. Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079. In other words, mental derangement sufficient to invalidate a will must be an unsoundness of mind in one of two forms: (1) mental unsoundness of such broad character as to establish incompetency generally; or (2) some specific and narrower form of insanity under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion. And, even in the latter class of cases, it is not sufficient merely to establish that the testator was the victim of some hallucination or delusion; it must be shown that the will was the offspring of the hallucination or delusion. Estate of Perkins, supra.

"Testamentary capacity is always presumed to exist until the contrary is established. That is to say, the presumption is always that a person is sane, and the burden is always upon the contestant to show affirmatively and by a preponderance of evidence that the testator, at the time of executing the will, was of unsound mind. In re Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 P. 172, 711; Estate of Perkins, supra; 26 Cal. Jur. 756."

Applying these principles of law to the facts of the case here, it is evident that the testimony is insufficient to support the attack upon the will. The only direct evidence of facts existing when the instrument was executed is that which was given by witnesses for the proponent, and this testimony was clear, direct, and positive evidence that the testator was of sound and disposing mind at the time the will was executed. During the winter preceding his death, the decedent lived with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson who were neighbors, until March 2, 1926, when he returned to his own farm, where he immediately contracted a severe cold, and on March 5th was removed to a hospital.

Mrs. Berger, a witness called by the contestant, testified that she had known the decedent since 1907, and that she had visited in his home frequently since his marriage to his second wife in 1918; that, when she learned that decedent was ill on March 2, 1926, she went to his home and nursed and cared for him for three days and until he was removed to the hospital. Through all this acquaintance she was unable to testify to any act indicating unsoundness of mind, but, when asked this question, she insisted that the decedent was of sound mind; that, when he left his home for the hospital, his mind was perfectly clear "up to that time."

Mrs. Burns, one of the subscribing witnesses to the will, and the proprietor of the hospital in which he died, testified that he did not have delirium at any time during the time which he spent in the hospital; that prior to the execution of the will he had talked with her of his desire to make a will and had told her that he was not going to leave anything to his sister because she was well provided for and also because she was a religious fanatic; that, after the will was signed by the decedent, he declared it to be his last will and personally requested Mr. Grinstead and herself to sign as subscribing witnesses; that, after this was done, he said, "This is my will now and I feel relieved"; that thereafter the decedent asked the witness if she did not desire some money for his expenses in the hospital, saying: "I had better draw you up a check. I might pass out. Life is not certain." Soon thereafter Mr. Dobbel, the proponent, came in, and the decedent asked him to write out a check for the hospital, which was done, and the decedent signed the check. This witness further testified that after the will had been executed the decedent appeared to be very much better and very much encouraged, felt that he would recover.

Mr. Grinstead, an attorney at law practicing in the town of Sonoma, was the other subscribing witness to the will. He testified, as did Mrs. Burns, that at the time the will was executed the testator was of sound and disposing memory. This witness testified that he had not known the testator until called to the hospital on the day previous to the execution of the will; that all the information relating to the property, the beneficiaries under the will and the amounts to be given each was furnished to him by the testator at the time the will was prepared. The will was written by this witness at the bedside as dictated to him by the testator. The evidence is unmistakable that none of those witnessing the execution of the will and none of those in attendance upon the decedent during his last illness had used any influence of any character as to the disposition of the property, but, on the other hand, all the names of the beneficiaries and addresses and the descriptions of the property, both real and personal, were given to Mr. Grinstead by the testator from memory and without reference to notes or other suggestion.

Dr. McGrath, who attended the deceased in his last illness, testified that his death was caused by hypostatic pneumonia, which he explained is not the disease usually called pneumonia by laymen, but is a cardiac condition diagnosed as heart trouble, that during this illness the patient does not suffer from delirium, and that, during all the time he was treating the deceased, from March 5th to March 10th he was entirely rational and of sound mind. This witness further testified that during this period the testator frequently mentioned his desire to make a will and asked the witness to summon an attorney for that purpose.

Miss Munzenmier, who was one of the testator's nurses in the hospital testified that he frequently spoke to her about his desire to make a will; that during his entire sickness he talked rationally and was in his right mind; that he was never delirious at any time while she was attending him; and that he talked with others who visited him about his plan to make a will.

Dr. Meneary, who had been the personal physician of the decedent for many years, testified that he had frequently visited at the home of the decedent, and that the latter had frequently called at his office. From this professional observation of the personal conduct and life of the deceased, this doctor testified that he was of sound mind, and that any question of his being of unsound mind had never occurred to him.

None of these witnesses, except Miss Munzenmier, the nurse, to whom a small gift was made, was a beneficiary under the will, and the attorney who drew the will had not known the testator before he was called in for that purpose, and knew none of the beneficiaries. Other witnesses whom we do not need to give by name, friends and neighbors of the testator, men who had been engaged in business with him and who had traveled with him, testified as to his mental soundness with one accord.

And in this connection it may be well to point out that, with the exception of the three medical experts, all the witnesses called by the contestant were elderly women who professed warm friendship for the contestant and a desire to see her successful in the contest, and who for some reason had been offended by the deceased during his lifetime. One of these witnesses was his former wife, whom he divorced thirteen years prior to the date of the execution of the will. Her entire testimony related to instances occurring during their married life. Another of these witnesses had not seen the decedent since 1917, and all her testimony related to instances occurring prior to that time. Another witness had known the deceased since 1907 and called upon him just prior to his death. This witness, while expressing dislike for some of the legatees under the will and frankly admitting that she would like to see the contestant have the property, emphatically declared that he was of sound mind up until the time he went to the hospital on March 5, 1926. Another witness had known the deceased prior to the year 1916, and related some instances that occurred during their life as neighbors. She saw the decedent once after that time in October, 1925, when she met him in San Francisco. What impressed upon her at that time that he was of unsound mind was the fact that he had forgotten a little fire which had occurred in one of the rooms of the house in the year 1915. These witnesses stressed the fact that they reached the conclusion that the decedent was of unsound mind because he did not engage with them in discussion of politics or current affairs and did not read the books and magazines that they were interested in, but preferred the reading of the Youth's Companion. These witnesses, particularly his former wife, related instances of the decedent's physical habits and custom of telling vulgar stories and using vulgar language, a practice which he seems to have discontinued after his marriage to his second wife in 1916. It is significant that none of the men acquaintances or neighbors of decedent were called by the contestant, and that all the male associates of the decedent who were called by the proponent testified to his soundness of mind.

To our minds the evidence which is the most convincing on the general question of mental soundness is found in the testimony of Mrs. Weaver, a sister of the deceased's second wife, during which there was received in evidence a number of letters written by the decedent to Mrs. Weaver at her home in Seabright, Santa Cruz county, from a time subsequent to the death of his second wife in 1924 down to a few months prior to the date of the execution of the will. In view of the fact that the contestant emphasized the lack of education of the testator, that he had been compelled to drop out of school at the age of twelve years because of inability to learn, that his entire source of reading was the Youth's Companion, and that he would never discuss or take any interest in politics or current affairs, these letters, written as they were a short time prior to the date of the execution of the will, are potent evidence of the keenness of the testator's mind and of his interest in current events during the latter term of his years. The testator and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Weaver, had each purchased shares of stock in a mining corporation operating in Nevada, and, as favorable reports came to them from time to time covering the operations of the mine, they were led to look hopefully to the success of their investment. These investments are referred to throughout this correspondence, and the anticipations of the testator for a financial gain are all expressed with a desire that he may have funds to give to others. This attitude on the part of the testator is explained by the testimony of the contestant that throughout his life he was in the habit of giving money and property to those whom he believed to be in poorer circumstances than himself, and that he frequently expressed the wish that he could help others who were in financial straits, and that a large proportion of the property and moneys which he had acquired had been given away to others rather than dissipated by himself. The first letter in the record is dated January 18, 1925, which we quote in full:

"My dear sister Dell: Yours with Saw's Letter received. Many thanks for sending it. It surely looks good. I sincerely pray it may prove as good as it looks. Please thank them for the extra shares for me. There are so many who I want to help in their struggle to meet the obligations of this life that the money can't come amiss. And when it comes, it will be put where it will do the most good. Please send my shares to me here, and I will put them in my box at Santa Rosa. You surely won't send anymore than you already have. When they begin paying dividends people will be speaking of you as that rich lady. Then look out for the men.

"You will have enough for yourself and Roscoe too. I shall have others to look after. God knows there are many who need lifting along in their struggle for existence. The more I can help the happier I will be. I pray that as they go deeper the lead will turn to silver and then to pure gold. You had better send certificate by express, or the same way they were sent to you to me, to me, to Glen Ellen. Of course, if they should be stolen, they would not be worth anything to anyone else except me.

"Now sit up and be happy and pray for the best.

"Yours with best wishes always,

"Love to all, Dell, Roscoe & Ann, Fred."

Eleven similar letters are found written at intervals of about four weeks, the last appearing in the record being dated January 31, 1926, which was less than two months prior to the execution of the will. This letter reads in part as follows:

"Leva's passing surely was sudden, although I was not surprised to hear that she had gone, as her condition for several years has been that of a consumptive. I have never heard one word from her since seeing her at Susie's funeral. I think she expected Susie (testator's second wife) to leave her something, but why she should expect anything I can't understand. * * *

"I am here with the Johnsons & shall stay until March or April, then go back to Rose Cottage & stay until I can rent or sell the place. I don't feel that I can ever make my home there again. The Sullivans are living on their place & fixing up the house & think they are improving the place, but the more they do the worse it looks. No taste for the beautiful. The Johnsons are just about on the standstill as far as making a living goes. I don't know how they could have held on, if I had not come here and stayed this winter. I not only pay my board, but help them with their work also. (The Johnsons were both remembered in the will.) We are having heavy rains now, which were very much needed. How did things look at the mines when you were there. Have they started building the smelter yet? Give them all my love when you write again. Also remember me to the kids & write soon. Am so sorry about the Sweet Shop friends.

"Give my regards to all my acquaintances down there. Maybe I will drive down next summer on my way to Fallon.

"Well, I must close,

"Yours with love,

Fred."

We have read all this correspondence. It appears without material error in spelling, punctuation, grammar, or composition. If this is the character of education that a man obtains from reading the Youth's Companion, that magazine might well be placed in every American home. If this correspondence had been included in the hypothetical questions propounded to the medical experts and in the face of this evidence they had expressed the opinion that the testator was of unsound mind, then we would say that the practice of employing experts of this character is a useless and frivolous thing. If this evidence does not demonstrate the soundness of mind of the testator for a period of one year at least preceding the execution of the will, it does at least demonstrate that he had lucid and normal periods, and that at a time less than two months before the execution of the will he was enjoying one of those normal states of mind. There was not a particle of testimony offered or received on the part of contestant even remotely tending to prove an irrational or abnormal condition of mind between this period and the date of the execution of the will. In fact, all the competent testimony of facts covered matters which occurred over a period of from ten to twenty years prior to that date. Aside from the testimony of the experts and the testimony covering the issue of insane delusions, both of which we will treat later, there is no evidence in the record which is sufficient as a matter of law to overcome the direct and positive evidence of mental competency existing at the time of the execution of the will or to rebut the presumption of sanity which runs to every man, even though he make a will which omits to provide for an heir at law.

The rules of law covering cases of this kind are well settled. Some of the later cases are Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079; Estate of Relph, 192 Cal. 451, 221 P. 361; Estate of Gunther, 199 Cal. 119, 248 P. 514; Estate of McDonough, 200 Cal. 57, 251 P. 916; Estate of Haupt, 200 Cal. 147, 252 P. 597; Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. 152, 252 P. 325; Estate of Johnson, 200 Cal. 290, 252 P. 1049; Estate of Phillips, 202 Cal. 490, 261 P. 709. Almost every fact upon which contestant relies to establish incompetency in this case has been considered by the Supreme Court in the cases cited, and its evidentiary weakness has been judicially pointed out. The insufficiency of the evidence such as we have here coming from the contestant herself, showing that in his early life the testator was peculiar at times and did unreasonable things, but that throughout her acquaintance with him her brother had many normal and rational periods, and that, since his second marriage in 1916, the influence of his second wife was such that the testator's condition was markedly improved, and that she (the contestant) was always satisfied to let her brother manage her property and account to her for the income and proceeds thereof, renders appropriate the following language from Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. at page 159, 252 P. 328: "Disregarding any conflicting evidence and resolving whatever conflicts there may be in the evidence in favor of and granting to the contestant every possible inference to be drawn from the evidence, there still remains a hiatus in the chain of proof that, at the time of the execution of the will, the testator was mentally incompetent, or that he was at the time subject to delusions which in any manner, affected his testamentary act." Bearing in mind the issue to be determined is not what might have been the mental condition of the testator, but what in fact was his mental condition at the time he made the will (Estate of Perkins, supra; Estate of Relph, supra; Estate of Wilson, 117 Cal. 262, 49 P. 172, 711), we are satisfied that the opinion expressed by contestant's witnesses, founded upon facts and conditions existing long prior to the date of the execution of the will, "are not sufficient to overturn the uncontradicted evidence of the witnesses who testified to testator's sound mental condition at the very time the will was executed or at times very near thereto" (Estate of McDonough, 200 Cal. 57, 62, 251 P. 916, 918). But, as said later on in the same case (page 69 of 200 Cal. [251 P. 921]): " * * * The issue does not rest upon the contestant's evidence alone. The testimony of proponent's witnesses must be taken into account in weighing the sufficiency of contestant's case. Evidence which standing by itself might be sufficient to sustain a verdict may in the light of all the facts be wholly inadequate, and that without invading the province of the jury as the judges of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence." Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085."

[5] The argument is made that the testator was possessed of insane delusions in the belief that his sister was well provided for, that she had as much property as he had, and that she was a religious fanatic, and that, if any of his property were left to her, she would devote it to religious purposes. The proved facts are that the sister owned two houses in the town of Fillmore, that her husband owned six houses in the same town, and that their combined income at the time of the trial was about $145 per month. At the time of the execution of the will, the contestant was about 75 years of age and her husband was of about the same age. They had no one dependent upon them for support, and the only near relative was a grown son of the husband's by a former marriage. The income from the combined properties of the contestant and her husband was low at the time due to poor business conditions in the town, but at that it was greater than that received by the testator from his property. He naturally viewed the possession of eight houses as property of some value, and therefore had justification in the belief that his sister was provided for and that her property, because of the income she was able to receive from it, was as valuable as his. He had frequently expressed the wish that his sister, who was five years his senior, would pass away before he did, so that he could direct the disposition of his own property. He had also expressed the fear that, if he should die before his sister and leave his property to her she would dispose of it in a way other than desired by him, and that, because of her advanced age, any property which he left her would be of little or no benefit to her. The testator's fear that his sister would not long outlive him was borne out by the fact that subsequent to the trial on October 14, 1926, she passed away. The asserted insane delusion that the sister was a religious fanatic is a matter which cannot be determined upon any basis of fact or reason, because the belief of religious fanaticism depends entirely upon the attitude of the believer as to what form of religious enthusiasm is reasonable and what is fanatical. Here the contestant testified that she had always been greatly interested in the Methodist Church and in Sunday school work and was "enthusiastic" over religious affairs and church affairs; "that is my principal work in life and I had no other interest in Glen Ellen except that." On the other hand, the testator had given expression of his enthusiasm along these lines in the work of the Masonic order, and had often expressed the desire that the home place should be turned over to the local Masonic lodge upon his death, and had expressed the fear that, if he left it to his sister, she would turn it over to one of her church activities.

Mistaken though he may have been as to his belief in his sister's financial condition, there was nevertheless some basis for the belief, and his judgment as to what his sister needed in a financial way is not to be supplanted by the judgment of the jury or of the court upon that matter. And it is of no moment that the court or jury may take a different view as to the reasonableness of his prejudice or dislike of his sister's religious activities or that in the opinion of the court or jury the testator's property would have gone to a better purpose if the contestant had been allowed to devote it to the aid of the church contrary to the wishes of the testator. That beliefs of this character, unreasonable though they be, but founded upon some fact or information which may or may not be true, do not amount to insane delusions sufficient in themselves to overcome the presumption of soundness of mind, seems abundantly clear from all the cases on the subject. What is necessary in a case of this kind is stated in Estate of Gunther, 199 Cal. 119, 125, 248 P. 514, 516, from which we quote: "An insane delusion is not only one which is error, but one in favor of the truth of which there is not only no evidence, but regarding which there is the clearest evidence to the contrary. It is a delusion or conception which springs up spontaneously in the mind of a testator, and is not the result of his belief or knowledge of any fact which would in reason or in probability furnish evidence in its support. The law upon this subject has been very fully and ably set forth in Estate of Scott, 128 Cal. 57, 60 P. 527; Estate of Allen, 177 Cal. 668, 171 P. 686; Estate of Russell, 189 Cal. 759, 210 P. 249; Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079, and cases cited."

[6] A word should be said concerning the testimony of the three expert witnesses called by the contestant. These witnesses, in answer to a hypothetical question prepared by the contestant and submitted to them before their examination, all agreed to give their opinion, based upon the facts covered by this question, that the testator was of unsound mind at the time of making his will. The appellant attacks this testimony upon several grounds, but mainly because the question does not conform to the facts proved. This objection is unanswerable. These witnesses based their answer upon a statement of facts which, besides being directly contrary to the facts proved, omitted many essential elements in the history of the testator's life which were then before the jury and conceded to be true. For the purpose of this opinion it is necessary to refer to but a few of these discrepancies. The hypothetical question included the statement that the testator took no interest in current affairs and read only boys' stories found in the Youth's Companion. These statements were both untrue. It included a statement that the testator died from pneumonia with the implication that his last illness was accompanied by the usual delirium. This also was untrue. It included a statement of the making of the last will without including any of the circumstances surrounding this transaction, circumstances which were of the most vital importance to enable any one, a medical expert or a layman, to reach a conclusion as to the mental capacity of the testator at the very time the will was executed. Thus the question omitted the conceded fact that during the entire time of his last illness the testator suffered no delirium, but was fully conscious of all the facts surrounding him; that he frequently stated to the nurse and others about him that he desired to make a will; that all the items of the will, including the descriptions of his properties, names and addresses of the beneficiaries, some of whom lived out of the state, were given voluntarily by the testator, without reference to any note or memorandum; that none of those present when the will was drafted used any influence upon the testator; and that, after the will was executed, he expressed great satisfaction that that act had been performed and that he felt better because of it. There was also omitted from the question any mention of the numerous letters which the testator addressed to his sister-in-law, covering a period of more than one year preceding the date of the execution of the will, and all of which displayed a keen interest in current events and an unmistakable ability on the part of the writer to comprehend the daily affairs of life. It is unnecessary to further detail discrepancies in this hypothetical question. Manifestly the answers of the three experts must have had some effect on the minds of the jury, and, because of the error in this respect, if for no other reason, the judgment must be reversed. Estate of Gould, 188 Cal. 353, 205 P. 457; Snow v. Harris, 41 Cal. App. 34, 37, 181 P. 676; Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 264, 228 P. 25; Johnson v. Clarke (Cal. App.) 276 P. 1052.

Judgment reversed.

THATCHER v. G. & M. CONCRETE CO., Inc.★
(Civ. 6490.)

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California, Aug. 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1040(10)—Overruling demurrer to complaint because uncertain as to whether promise sued on was part of written contract, if error, held harmless.

Where plaintiff had conveyed purchase contract of gravel-producing plant to defendant in consideration for defendant reconveying to plaintiff one-fourth interest in plant, and defendant sold entire plant, in action by plaintiff for his portion of sale price paid, overruling demurrer to complaint based on uncertainty of whether promise to reconvey one-fourth interest was oral or written, if error, held harmless, as defendant was familiar with written contract.

2. Evidence ⇨419(13)—Where $1 and other valuable consideration was recited as consideration for transfer, plaintiff was not precluded from showing true consideration (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

Where transfer of gravel-producing plant recited as consideration sum of $1 and other valuable consideration, plaintiff was not precluded, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, from showing true consideration for transfer, as it did not destroy the legal operation of the contract.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Court's finding that defendant agreed to reconvey to plaintiff interest in gravel-producing plant could not be disturbed as evidence conflicted.

When evidence on issue is conflicting, finding of court that defendant agreed to reconvey to plaintiff an interest in gravel-producing plant free and clear of incumbrance could not be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by G. M. Thatcher against the G. & M. Concrete Company, Incorporated. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Montague, for appellant.

S. G. Tompkins, of San Jose, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal from the judgment entered in an action for declaratory relief and for an accounting.

The court found that on and prior to November 17, 1926, the plaintiff was the owner of a contract for the purchase from S. T. Carlisle of a gravel-producing plant situated on the land of Joseph and Caroline Doetsch in Santa Clara county, the consideration being $5,000, payable in installments, and the delivery to Carlisle of 2,000 cubic yards of gravel; that plaintiff also held a written lease of a gravel deposit upon the land mentioned; that on the above date the plaintiff agreed to assign and transfer to the defendant the Carlisle contract and the lease in consideration of the transfer by the corporation to the plaintiff of a one-fourth interest in the plant fully paid and free of incumbrances; that the plant consisted of the leasehold interest mentioned and the appliances used in producing, crushing, and washing the gravel; that these assignments were on the same day made to the defendant, which thereupon executed to the plaintiff the following bill of sale:

"Oakland, Cal., Nov. 18, 1926.

"Bill of Sale.

"For one dollar and other valued consideration the G. & M. Concrete Company, Inc., herewith grant and convey back to G. M. Thatcher one fourth (25%) interest in their gravel plant located near Campbell, known as the Central Gravel Co., at this time, situated on the Los Gatos Creek bed on property owned by Joseph Doetsch and Caroline Doetsch.

"G. & M. Concrete Company, Inc.,

"By R. Martin Greathouse, President.

"Accepted 11/18/26 by G. M. Thatcher."

(Corporate seal.)

The assignment of the Carlisle contract, which was indorsed thereon, was in words and figures as follows:

"November 17, 1926.

"For one dollar and other valued consideration I hereby assign, convey and sell all my interest in and upon this contract to G. & M. Concrete Co.

"G. M. Thatcher."

It was further found that defendant went into possession and operated the plant for the account and benefit of both parties according to their respective interests, namely, a one-fourth in the plaintiff and a three-fourths interest in the defendant, until the month of May, 1927, when the defendant notified the plaintiff that he had no further interest therein, and that thereafter until the execution by the defendant of an agreement for the sale of the plant to one William Watson the plant was operated for the account and benefit of the defendant alone; and that on August 30, 1927, the defendant, acting in the transaction as the agent for the plaintiff, executed an agreement to sell the plant for the sum of $11,800 to Watson, who paid thereon the sum of $1,500.

The plaintiff prayed that he be adjudged the owner of a one-fourth interest in the plant, and that the defendant be required to account for that proportion of the amount paid by Watson.

Judgment was entered accordingly and an appeal was taken therefrom by the defendant.

As grounds for the appeal it is claimed that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint and in admitting oral testimony as to the consideration for the transfers mentioned; and also that the finding that the defendant agreed to assign or assigned a one-fourth interest in the gravel plant "fully paid and free of incumbrances" is unsupported.

[1] The objection to the complaint was based upon the alleged uncertainty appearing from its averments as to whether the alleged promise to reconvey to plaintiff "a one-fourth interest in said gravel plant fully paid for" was oral or written. While the allegations in this regard might have been more specific, the defendant was necessarily familiar with the written portion of the transaction, and any error in overruling the demurrer was not prejudicial to his substantial rights and is not ground for reversal. Grossetti v. Sweasey, 176 Cal. 793, 169 P. 687; Arena v. Bank of Italy, 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441; 2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, § 603, p. 1014.

The evidence shows that the plaintiff agreed to pay Carlisle the sum of $5,000 in five installments of $1,000 each between February 1, 1927, and February 1, 1928, and to deliver the gravel mentioned above. It also shows that no part of the contract in these respects had been performed when the same was assigned to defendant. It also appears that the defendant paid certain installments, following which it demanded as a contribution from the plaintiff one-fourth of the amount so paid, and upon his refusal to pay said proportion declared that he had no further interest in the plant.

[2] The assignment by the plaintiff, as well as the transfer from the defendant to him, recited as the consideration the sum of "one dollar and other valued considerations." The defendant contends that the parol evidence rule precluded evidence that the true consideration for plaintiff's assignment was an agreement that as between the parties the plaintiff's interest in the plant should be considered as having been fully paid for. As provided by section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is the rule that "when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest, no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing, * * *" nevertheless, as an exception thereto, it has been held that when the effect is not to destroy the legal operation of the writing it may be shown by parol that the true consideration is other or different from that expressed in the instrument. Arnold v. Arnold, 137 Cal. 291, 70 P. 23; Winchester v. Winchester, 175 Cal. 391, 165 P. 965; 10 Cal. Jur., Evidence, § 199, p. 932. Thus, the consideration of the assignment of a personal chattel or chose in action may be proven by parol, and a different one established than that expressed in the instrument (Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 134), or the true consideration for a written release reciting a consideration of one dollar may be shown (Stufflebeem v. Arnold, 57 Cal. 11). The seller of a business may, notwithstanding the recitals in the bill of sale with respect to its consideration, show by parol that the consideration in part was the agreement by the purchaser to pay an outstanding note of the seller (Wurdeman v. Waller, 88 Cal. App. 393, 263 P. 558); and it may be likewise shown that as a part of the consideration of the purchase of mortgaged property the grantee assumed the payment of the mortgage (White v. Schader, 185 Cal. 606, 198 P. 19, 21 A. L. R. 499; Robson v. O'Toole, 60 Cal. App. 710, 214 P. 278).

[3] In view of the foregoing, testimony was properly admitted in the present case to show that the true consideration for the assignments by the plaintiff was defendant's agreement to reconvey to him an interest in the plant, fully paid for and free of incumbrances; and the evidence on the issues being conflicting, the findings of the court, which were fully supported, cannot be disturbed. 2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, § 543, p. 921.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

SEVERNS v. CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY INDEMNITY EXCHANGE. (Civ. 6953.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1929.

1. Abatement and revival ⇨54—Cause of action for personal injuries, in absence of statute to contrary, abates on death of either person injured or tort-feasor.

In absence of statute expressly providing to contrary, cause of action for personal injury abates on the death of either person injured or tort-feasor.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨703(1)—Municipality may within reasonable limits prescribe nature of security required by those operating vehicles for hire on public streets.

Municipality has right within reasonable limits to prescribe security to be given by those operating vehicles for hire on its public streets.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨703(1)—Ordinance requiring operator of vehicle for hire on public streets to protect public by bond or insurance policy is not unreasonable.

There is nothing unreasonable in provision of ordinance requiring operator of vehicle for hire on public streets to protect public by bond or insurance policy required therein and in manner provided.

4. Abatement and revival ⇨54—Passenger injured while riding in jitney bus, whose owner was insured as required by ordinance, held not entitled to maintain action against insurer after insured's death.

Where owner of jitney bus, operating vehicle for hire on public streets of city, complied with ordinance by taking out policy of insurance, which insured owner against loss or damage from operation of vehicle, and guaranteed payment within policy limits of any final judgment rendered against owner, passenger, injured in collision with jitney bus and another automobile, held not entitled to bring action against insurer, where owner of jitney bus had died before action was commenced, since insurance policy was only an undertaking to pay any final judgment which injured person may obtain against insured, and obtaining of such judgment constituted condition precedent to any action which injured person might have against insurer.

5. Automobiles ⇨95—Passenger in jitney bus after insured's death could not maintain action directly against insurer under statute prescribing liability of indemnitor (Civ. Code § 2777).

Where owner of jitney bus in which passenger was riding at time of collision was injured, and died before action was brought by passenger, passenger could not maintain action against insurer, under Civ. Code, § 2777, providing that one who indemnifies another against act to be done by latter is liable jointly with person indemnified and separately to every person injured by such act, since statute applies only to a joint tort-feasor, or where liability of indemnitor and indemnitee is joint and concurrent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Margery Severns against the California Highway Indemnity Exchange. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Raymond D. Williamson and Raymond T. Donohue, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco (Carroll B. Crawford, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem. Appeal by plaintiff, Margery Severns, from a judgment in favor of defendant, after the trial court had granted a motion for nonsuit.

The action is one to recover damages for personal injuries, medical expenses, and loss of wearing apparel sustained by plaintiff on May 31, 1925, in a collision between an automobile, operated as a so-called jitney bus, in which plaintiff and a woman friend were passengers for hire, and another automobile, at the intersection of Fell and Franklin streets, in the city of San Francisco. The operator of the jitney bus was Sam Euphrat, who was injured in the accident and died as a result of his injuries, on June 3, 1925. It was alleged, and the evidence tended to show, that the accident was the result of negligence on the part of Euphrat.

The complaint, which was filed December 7, 1925, alleges that Euphrat was a duly licensed driver, and had complied with the provisions of Ordinance No. 3212, New Series, of the city and county of San Francisco, approved April 29, 1915, section 4 of which reads, in part, as follows:

"In order to insure the safety of the public, it shall be unlawful for any person to drive or operate such 'jitney bus' or to obtain a permit therefor unless he shall have given and there is in full force and effect at all times while such person is driving and operating such 'jitney bus' on file with the police commission, either (a) a bond of the owner or lessee of said 'jitney bus' with a responsible surety company or association authorized to do business under the laws of the state of California, in the sum of ten thousand (10,000) dollars, conditioned that the owner or lessee of said 'jitney bus' for which a permit has been applied (giving its manufacturer's name and number and state license number) will pay all loss or damage that may result to any person or property from the negligent operation of or defective construction of said 'jitney bus,' or which may arise or result from any violation of any of the provisions of this ordinance or the laws of the state of California. The recovery upon said bond shall be limited to five thousand (5,000) dollars for the injury or death of one (1) person and to the extent of ten thousand (10,000) dollars for the death or injury of two (2) or more persons in the same accident and to the extent of one thousand (1,000) dollars for the injury or destruction of property. Such bond shall be given to the city and county of San Francisco and shall inure to the benefit of any and all persons suffering loss or damage either to person or property as herein provided, and suit may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction upon said bond by any person or persons or corporation suffering any loss or damage as herein provided. Such bond shall be approved by the police commission, and the permission granted by said police commission as herein provided shall recite that the permit is issued upon condition and in consideration of the filing of said bond. Said bond shall be a continuing liability notwithstanding any recovery thereon, and if at any time, in the judgment of the police commission, said bond is not sufficient for any cause, the commission may require the party to whom permit is issued as herein provided to replace said bond with another bond satisfactory to the commission, and in default thereof said permit may be revoked; or (b) a policy of insurance in a company authorized to do business in the state of California, insuring said owner or lessee of said 'jitney bus' against loss by reason of damage that may result to any person or persons or property from the operation of said 'jitney bus' said policy of insurance to be in limits of five thousand (5,000) dollars for any one (1) person injured or killed; and, subject to such limit for each person, a total liability of ten thousand (10,000) dollars in case any one (1) accident resulting in bodily injury or death to more than one (1) person. Said policy of insurance must also provide insurance to the extent of one thousand (1,000) dollars for the injury to or destruction of any property of third parties.

"Said policy shall guarantee payment of any final judgment rendered against the said owner or lessee of said 'jitney bus' within the limits herein provided, irrespective of the financial responsibility or any act of omission of said 'jitney bus' owner or lessee."

Euphrat had deposited with the police commission of San Francisco, and there was in effect on the day of the accident, an instrument purporting to be a policy of insurance, executed by the defendant, California Highway Indemnity Exchange. Those portions which are important and material in the consideration of the case read as follows:

"Subscribers at California Highway Indemnity Exchange (herein called Exchange) do hereby agree to indemnify the subscriber named herein: In consideration of the stipulations enumerated in the schedule of warranties attached hereto subscribers at California Highway Indemnity Exchange do hereby severally agree to indemnify the subscriber named herein against the hazards covered by the special agreements:

"Filed—Police Commission S. F. Jit—
Rent End Att. San Francisco
"Special Agreements

"Injuries to persons:

"(a) Against loss from common-law or statutory liability for damage on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered (or alleged to have been suffered) while this contract is in force, by any person or persons not in the employ of the subscriber resulting directly from the ownership, use or maintenance of any automobile described in the schedule herein contained. This contract shall cover such injuries so sustained wherever any automobile covered hereby may be in the service of the subscriber. The Exchange's liability is limited to five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) for injuries to or death of any person, and, subject to the same limit for each person, the Exchange's total liability for injury to or death of more than one person in any one accident is limited to ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00). And in addition to said limited sums, the Exchange will pay the expense of litigation, and all costs taxed against the subscriber in any legal proceedings defended by the Exchange, together with any interest accruing after entry of judgment upon such part of said judgment as shall not be in excess of the limits of the Exchange's liability herein expressed.

"(b) The subscriber may provide such immediate surgical relief as is imperative at the time of the accident, and the Exchange will reimburse him the amount expended upon receipt of proper voucher therefor.

"(c) Against loss from common law or statutory liability for damages on account of another (property of the subscriber or in charge of the subscriber or any of his employees, or carried in or upon said automobile, not being covered by this clause) resulting directly from the ownership, use or maintenance of any automobile described in the schedule hereinafter contained. The liability of the Exchange for loss or damage in this clause is limited to not more than one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) for any one accident.

"(g) The foregoing special agreements are made subject to the general agreements, which shall be construed as conditions. * * *

"It is hereby understood and agreed that in the event a final judgment covering any loss or claim under this policy is rendered against the subscriber, the Exchange guarantees the payment of said judgment direct to the plaintiff securing such judgment, irrespective of any financial responsibility on the part of the subscriber, provided that any action by the said plaintiff to recover under this clause is commenced within twelve months next after such final judgment shall have been rendered; or where such limitation of time is prohibited by the laws of the state wherein this policy is issued, then and in that event no suit or action shall be sustainable unless commenced within the shortest limitation permitted under the laws of such state. The Exchange does not prejudice by this condition any defense against such loss or claim that it may be entitled to make under this policy in so far as it relates to any action brought against the Exchange by the subscriber."

It is contended by plaintiff that her action lies directly against the defendant insurance exchange, because she is one of the class of persons for whose benefit the policy was issued by reason of the provisions of the ordinance under which it was executed and received by the police commission; in other words, that she has an independent cause of action against the defendant on an instrument issued pursuant to the intent of the so-called jitney bus ordinance.

[1] A cause of action for personal injuries, in the absence of a statute expressly providing to the contrary, abates upon the death of either the person injured or the tort-feasor. De La Torre v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 754, 254 P. 1105; Clark v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 527, 150 P. 357, L. R. A. 1916A, 1142. The right, if any, of the plaintiff to have a direct action against the defendant is dependent, therefore, not upon any statutory provision, but upon the intent disclosed by the ordinance and the terms of the policy or the contract which the defendant executed.

A number of cases have been before the appellate courts of California in which the San Francisco jitney bus ordinance, or ordinances of similar nature in other cities, have been under consideration. The San Francisco ordinance was first reviewed in the case of In re Cardinal, 170 Cal. 519, 150 P. 348, L. R. A. 1915F, 850, in which case the Supreme Court specifically mentioned the fact that the ordinance provides, first, for a bond conditioned that the surety company will pay all loss or damage resulting from the negligent operation of a jitney bus; or, second, for a policy of insurance, insuring the owner of the bus against loss, which policy shall guarantee payment within the limits prescribed of any judgment rendered against the owner.

In the case of Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 181 P. 779, 780, the court had under consideration an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which provided that a bond to be given by a jitney bus driver should be conditioned that said bond should inure to and be for the benefit and protection of any one who should sustain any damage or injury, which is the substance of the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 4 of the San Francisco ordinance. The court said:

"It is true, as the appellants contend that the general rule is to the effect that the liability of sureties cannot be extended beyond the fair import of the express undertaking in the bond. There is, however, an exception to this general rule in the case of bonds given in pursuance of a governmental law for a public purpose. The exception is clearly and concisely stated in the case of State v. Nutter, 44 W. Va. 385, 30 S. E. 67, where it is said: 'The law in force at the date of a public bond, fixing a certain condition for it, and saying what its obligations shall be, is a part of it as effectually as if such obligations were in words inserted in it. * * * By signing the parties adopt the law as a part of the bond. If we do not so hold we frustrate the plain purpose of the statute.' * * *

"Of course, this exception to the general rule would have no application where its undoubted effect would be to impose a liability necessarily and absolutely inconsistent with the unequivocal intent of the parties as disclosed by the express terms of the bond itself. Graeter v. De Wolf, 112 Ind. 1, 13 N. E. 111. There is no provision, however, in the bond in question which expressly excludes a direct right of recourse by the injured party against the bonding company. Moreover, the bond as it read at the date of the accident was a contract made not only for the protection of the operator of the motor bus, but also directly for the benefit of injured passengers in so far as it expressly promised to pay directly to an injured party any amount for which the operator of the bus might be adjudged liable.

"To read the statutory requirement into the bond, while it accords to the plaintiff the privilege of joining the Casualty Company in a suit against the operator of the bus, introduces no necessary inconsistency into the contract and leaves the substantial rights of the parties unimpaired."

In other cases, such as Malachowski v. Varro, 76 Cal. App. 207, 244 P. 936 (in which the Los Angeles ordinance was under consideration), Gugliemetti v. Graham, 50 Cal. App. 268, 195 P. 64 (a bond providing that it should inure to the benefit of anyone injured by reason of the negligence of the assured), and Fraher v. Eisenmann (Cal. App.) 270 P. 704 (interpretation of the San Francisco ordinance), it was held that the defendant insurance carrier was properly joined in an action against the assured, if the policy or the ordinance provided that it should inure to the benefit of the public; but we find no case in California in which the question whether the insurance carrier can be held responsible after the death of the assured, and before any action has been begun or any judgment has been secured against him, has been decided.

It should be noted that the San Francisco ordinance provides specifically for two distinct forms of protection: First, under subdivision (a) of section 4 for a bond conditioned as stated in the ordinance which has been heretofore quoted; and, second, for a policy of insurance containing the conditions set forth in said ordinance. There is no provision in section (b) that the policy issued thereunder shall inure to the benefit of the public, such as appears in subdivision (a), and the policy itself contains no provision of that kind.

In the case of Kruger v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, 201 Cal. 672, 258 P. 602, 604, the Supreme Court, interpreting the same ordinance and a similar policy, said: "The undertaking is to pay the judgment to the party injured and not the damages sustained nor the loss incurred as a result of the injury."

In the Kruger Case, as well as in the case of Milliron v. Dittman, supra, the court made the comment that the defendant must be presumed to have taken into consideration the extent of the liability incurred by it in issuing the policy, and in fixing the cost of the premium, which should be charged therefor.

Considerable stress has been laid upon the use in section 4 of the San Francisco ordinance of the introductory words "in order to insure the safety of the public." The expression is not apt, as the real purpose of the ordinance is to compel the giving of a better or more substantial security to the public that claims for damages against more or less irresponsible operators of motor vehicles for hire will be paid.

[2, 3] It is plain that a municipality has the right within reasonable limits to prescribe the nature of a security to be given by those operating vehicles for hire upon its public streets, and there is nothing unreasonable in the provision of an ordinance requiring the operator of such a vehicle to protect the public by the bond or policy of insurance required therein and in the manner provided. Kruger v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, supra.

In the case of Woodhead Lumber Co. v. E. G. Niemann, etc. (Cal. App.) 278 P. 913, the court held that the question of whether a contract is intended for the benefit of a third person, is one of construction, and the intent must be gathered from reading the contract as a whole, in the light of circumstances under which it was entered into.

[4] It is clear that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco intended to permit the execution of one or the other of two instruments, one of which was in the form of a bond expressly inuring to the benefit of all those persons who might be injured by the operation of a motor vehicle covered by the bond, and the other being an insurance policy guaranteeing the payment of any final judgment which should be recovered against the assured.

If the driver of the automobile in which the plaintiff was injured had survived the accident, it could not be contended that the plaintiff could have proceeded directly against the defendant without having first secured a final judgment against the assured, although it has been suggested that the assured and the defendant might have been proceeded against in the same action. Kruger v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, supra. We do not think it can be conceded that the plaintiff would now have any greater rights against the defendant than she possessed prior to the death of the assured.

Reading section No. 4 of the ordinance, we do not think that the legislative intent was to create a primary liability against the insurance carrier. The use of the words "final judgment" in subdivision (b) of section 4, appear in themselves to negative such intention, and the language of the insurance policy does not indicate an intention on the part of the insurance company to extend its obligations beyond the terms of the ordinance, but expresses, on the other hand, an intention that the liability of the carrier should not attach until the final judgment had been obtained.

[5] It is contended by plaintiff that section 2777 of the Civil Code gives her the right to maintain her action directly against the defendant. That section provides that one who indemnifies another against an act to be done by the latter is liable jointly with the person indemnified, and separately, to every person injured by such act.

The case of Moore v. L. A. Iron & Steel Co. (C. C.) 89 F. 73, is cited in support of such contention, but that case, so far as its interpretation of section 2777 is concerned, has been superseded by Northam v. Fed. Casualty Co. of America (C. C.) 177 F. 981, in which it was held that said section is to be regarded as a declaration of the common law, and that it announces a rule of no greater import; that it applies, in other words, to joint tort-feasors, or where the liability of the indemnitor and indemnitee is joint and concurrent.

In the case of Treloar v. Kell & Hannon, 36 Cal. App. 159, at pages 168 and 169, 171 P. 823, 826, the court referred to the case of Northam v. Federal Casualty Co. of America, supra, and section 2777 of the Civil Code, and said as to that section:

"We may say that it would not be competent for the Legislature to modify, defeat, or nullify a contract of the parties by creating a liability that was not contemplated or provided in their contract, and in the second place it is entirely obvious by the provisions of the succeeding section 2778 that the Legislature did not intend to change the liability of the indemnitor in such policy as the one herein involved.

"For therein it is provided: '2. Upon an indemnity against claims, or demands, or damages, or costs, expressly, or in other equivalent terms, the person indemnified is not entitled to recover without payment thereof.' It may be stated finally that the encyclopedias and text-books approve the doctrine which we have herein announced.

"Applying the familiar rules of interpretation we can reach no other conclusion than that the surety company is not liable for this claim. To hold that the surety company bound itself to defend successfully any suit that might be brought against the indemnitee and to assume any liability of the latter, and therefore satisfy any judgment that might be obtained against the employer in such case and under the circumstances herein appearing, would be doing violence to the language of the contract adopted by the parties themselves and supplying an additional covenant not to be found in the policy."

While other jurisdictions do not, in most instances, recognize the right of a third person to join the assured and the insurance carrier as defendants in the same action, upon the theory that actions ex contractu cannot be joined with actions ex delicto, cases in such jurisdictions are persuasive as supporting the principle which we think should control in this case.

In the case of Criss v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 105 W. Va. 380, 142 S. E. 849, 850, the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia held that under a liability insurance contract, issued in compliance with a certain statute which forbade the road commission of the state to issue a permit to a taxi driver until he should file a bond or "liability insurance satisfactory to the commission, and in such sum as the commission may deem necessary to adequately protect the * * * public," and in which case the policy issued provided that its obligations and promises should inure to the benefit and protection of any person sustaining bodily injuries, and that such obligations constitute direct liability to such persons whether an action for damages should be brought against the named assured alone, or jointly with the company, a person claiming to have been injured could not proceed against the insurer alone until such claim had been liquidated. After stating that the Legislature had created a new right, but did not provide a new remedy, the court said:

"The phrase upon which she relies is a promise upon a promise. It is a promise, to any person who might be injured by the automobile of the assured, that the insurer's promise to the assured in such contingency shall inure to the benefit of the injured person. The promise to the assured is to indemnify him for his actual loss in such case. Ann. Cas. 1913D, note, p. 1152. That promise requires performance only when such loss is determined. That determination depends upon the recovery of a final judgment against the assured, or upon an agreement to which the insurer is a party. The policy so states. The fulfillment of that promise cannot be exacted upon the mere occurrence of an injury; the mere institution of an action against either the assured or the assured and the insurer jointly does not make either one directly liable to the injured person. Such person himself might be at fault. The direct liability of the insurer commences only when established. It is established only by the final judgment or by the agreement above referred to. Consequently, in plain language, the rider simply obligates the insurer to pay directly to the injured person the amount he is entitled to recover from the assured, either by judgment or by agreement, instead of indemnifying the insured in that amount. The 'inurement to the benefit and protection' and the 'direct liability' requirements of the rider are fully met by such payment.

"The plaintiff here has obtained neither judgment against the assured nor an agreement of liability from the assured and the insurer. Therefore a direct liability to her from the insurer has not been established, and she cannot predicate her right of action against the insurer on that ground. See Smith Stage Co. v. Eckert, 21 Ariz. 28, 184 P. 1001, 1003, 7 A. L. R. 995, a leading case."

In the case just cited the assured died about nine months after the date of the injury, and the court commented upon the fact that under the common law plaintiff's right of action against the assured perished at his death.

In the case of Smith Stage Co. v. Eckert, supra, the court had under consideration an action by a passenger against a stage company and its insurance carrier upon an indemnity policy covering loss by reason of judgments against the stage company for injuries to passengers, and which policy contained a clause inserted by order of the corporation commission providing that the policy was to inure to the benefit of any and all persons suffering loss or damage, and that suit might be brought thereon in any court having jurisdiction. The policy provided further, as follows: "If final judgment is rendered against the assured by reason of any loss or claim covered by this policy, the company shall pay said judgment up to the limits expressed in the policy direct to the plaintiff securing said judgment."

The court held that such provisions did not make it unnecessary for the person injured to first obtain judgment against the stage company before he could recover against the indemnity company on the policy, and the court said: "After much thought and investigation, we have concluded that the indemnity company's contract is not one of insurance, but one of conditional liability; the condition being that the injured person must first obtain a judgment against the assured stage company before he has any remedy against the indemnity company on the policy."

In the case of New York Indemnity Co. v. Ewen, 221 Ky. 114, 298 S. W. 182, it was held that a passenger, injured by the negligent driving of an automobile by the holder of a policy indemnifying against loss from liability imposed by law on account of the maintenance of the automobile, may not join in his action the assured and insurer, notwithstanding the provision in the policy that the assured's insolvency should entitle the claimant to maintain an action against the insurer, and notwithstanding the allegations and proof of the assured's insolvency, it being the opinion of the court that the indemnity provided for in the insurance policy was against loss from liability, meaning a real loss and one which must be put into a judgment against the assured before recovery could be had against the insurance carrier.

From the foregoing we conclude that the insurance policy in question in this case was simply an undertaking to pay any final judgment which the injured person might obtain in a court of competent jurisdiction against the assured, and not the damages sustained nor the loss incurred as a result of the injuries, and that the obtaining of such judgment constituted a condition precedent to any action which the injured person might have against the insurance carrier.

We are of the opinion that the motion for nonsuit was properly granted, and the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

COLLEGE NAT. BANK OF BERKELEY v. MORRISON et al. (Civ. 5941.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Sales ⇨475—Seller's delivery of sales contract to bank as security constituted valid assignment.

Seller's delivery to bank of title-retaining contract for sale of motortruck as security for payment of seller's note to bank and other demands constituted sufficient and valid assignment.

2. Guaranty ⇨66—Failure to act in regard to matter in which one owes guarantor no duty will not release guarantor.

Guarantor is not released by failure of one to do something in regard to which he owes guarantor no duty.

3. Guaranty ⇨56—One guaranteeing buyer's performance of sales contract, on delivery thereof to bank as security for loan to seller, held not discharged by bank's extension to seller without notice to guarantor (Civ. Code, § 2819).

One guaranteeing performance on part of buyer of contract for buyer's purchase of truck, at time contract was delivered by seller to bank as collateral security for payment of seller's obligation at bank, held not discharged by bank's extension of time for payment of loan to seller, without notice to guarantor, since guarantor's liability to pay amounts due on sales contract and his rights against his coguarantor and the buyer were not altered, under Civ. Code, § 2819.

4. Pledges ⇨44—Seller's execution of renewal notes for unpaid balance on loan secured by pledge of sales contract did not extinguish obligation.

Contract for sale of motortruck and obligation thereunder were not extinguished by seller's execution of renewal notes for unpaid balance on loan to bank, to which he had transferred contract as collateral security, in absence of agreement to that effect, though original notes were surrendered, and under such circumstances security might be applied by pledgee to balance remaining unpaid.

5. Evidence ⇨44(7) — Evidence of parol agreement that one guaranteeing buyer's performance under title-retaining sales contract, at time of pledge thereof, should not be liable until truck sold had been repossessed by pledgee, held incompetent (Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

In action by pledgee of title-retaining sales contract against one guaranteeing buyer's performance thereunder at time of pledgee's loan to seller, testimony offered by guarantor as to agreement, made at time of execution of guaranty, that he would not be liable until truck sold had been repossessed by bank and sold to satisfy seller's note, was incompetent under parol evidence rule, and was properly rejected under Civ. Code, § 1625, and Code Civ. Proc.

§ 1856, irrespective of tendency of evidence to show failure of consideration for guaranty.

6. Pleading ⚡236(2)—Late application to amend pleading is addressed to trial court's discretion.

After expiration of time within which amendments of pleadings may be made as matter of course, an application to amend is addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

7. Appeal and error ⚡959(1)—Trial court's grant or refusal of delayed application to amend pleadings is reviewable only when discretion is abused.

Trial court's exercise of its discretion to grant or deny amendment to pleadings, sought after time within which amendments may be made as matter of course, is subject to review only when abuse of discretion is apparent.

8. Pleading ⚡258(4)—Refusal to permit guarantor to amend answer at close of trial by setting forth new defense, where delay was not excused, held not abuse of discretion.

In action by pledgee of sales contract against one guaranteeing buyer's performance thereunder at time of pledge, it was not an abuse of discretion for trial court to refuse defendant permission to amend answer at close of trial by alleging agreement that guaranty contract would not be effective until truck should be sold, since amendment set forth new defense, and no reason for delay was shown.

9. Guaranty ⚡36(5)—One guaranteeing performance of sales contract was liable for attorney's fees incurred in enforcing performance thereof.

One guaranteeing performance of contract covering sale of motortruck was liable for attorney's fees incurred by pledgee of seller in enforcing performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by the College National Bank of Berkeley against Arch Morrison and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and last defendant F. H. Dam appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene W. Roland, of Oakland, and F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Oscar T. Barber, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal from a judgment entered against defendants Morrison and Dam. Defendant Wetherbee was not served with summons, and Morrison defaulted. Defendant Dam answered the complaint and is the sole appellant.

On February 29, 1922, Morrison, by an instrument in writing designated a lease, agreed to sell, and Wetherbee, who is therein called the lessee, agreed to buy, a motortruck for the sum of $2,600, payable $875 in cash and the balance in monthly installments of $172.50, with interest. Title to the truck was reserved by the seller, and the buyer agreed to pay the sum of $100 as attorney's fees in the event of suit to recover any part of the amount payable under the contract. Thereafter, on March 7, 1922, Morrison and his wife borrowed $1,500 from plaintiff bank, for which they executed their note, payable 90 days after date, with interest. With the note there was delivered to the bank the above lease contract, the note reciting that the lease contract was deposited as security for the payment of the note, and also for "all other present or future demands of any and all kinds of the holder hereof against the undersigned." There was indorsed upon the contract at the time of its delivery to plaintiff the following, signed by defendants Morrison and Dam: "I hereby guarantee the performance of the within lease on the part of the lessee to the College National Bank of Berkeley. Arch. Morrison, F. H. Dam."

The complaint alleged, and the court found, that there was due and unpaid on the lease contract a total of $1,295.25, and of the principal and interest of the Morrison obligation to the bank the sum of $788.54, for which, with the further sum of $100 as attorney's fees, the judgment was entered. The evidence showed that $306.01 was paid on the note mentioned; that on June 7, 1922, Morrison and his wife executed to the bank a new note for $1,153.99, on which the sum of $334.74 was paid; and that on October 7, 1922, Morrison executed to the bank a third note for $819.25, on which $200 was paid. Each note contained the same recitals as to the security. The two notes first mentioned were surrendered either before or at the time the third note was executed, and Mrs. Morrison was not made a party to the action.

[1-3] Appellant contends that the acceptance of the two notes last executed, and the surrender of the first and second upon the execution of the third, exonerated him from liability under the guaranty indorsed upon the lease contract, and that the court erred in excluding certain oral testimony offered by him and in refusing to allow an amendment to his answer.

The delivery of the lease contract with the intent to assign the same constituted a sufficient and valid assignment thereof to the bank. Bibend v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 30 Cal. 78. As stated, appellant guaranteed the performance of the obligation of his principal, Wetherbee, and not that of Morrison or his wife; and he was not released by the failure of the bank to do something in regard to which it owed him no duty. Friend v. Smith Gin Co., 59 Ark. 86, 26 S. W. 374; Welch v. Walsh, 177 Mass. 555, 59 N. E. 440, 52 L. R. A. 782, 83 Am. St. Rep. 302; Westchester, etc., Co. v. McIntire, 174 App. Div. 525, 161 N. Y. S. 384; 28 Corp. Jur. Guaranty, § 150, p. 992.

The bank was under no duty to proceed against Wetherbee (Carver v. Steele, 116 Cal.

116, 47 P. 1007, 58 Am. St. Rep. 156), nor was appellant exonerated by the extension of time for payment of the Morrison loan, as his liability to pay the amounts due on the lease contract was not thereby affected, nor his rights or remedies either against his coguarantor or Wetherbee impaired, or the obligation of the latter altered. Civ. Code, § 2819; Fitts v. A. F. Messick, etc., Co., 144 N. C. 463, 57 S. E. 164.

[4] Moreover, the execution of the renewal notes for the unpaid balance of the Morrison loan, and the surrender of the note or notes previously given, did not, in the absence of an agreement to that effect (which the court found was not the case), extinguish the original obligation (Bonestell v. Bowie, 128 Cal. 511, 61 P. 78; White v. Stevenson, 144 Cal. 104, 77 P. 828; Gnarini v. Swiss, etc., Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 P. 726; Angelo-Cal., etc., Co. v. Wallace, 58 Cal. App. 625, 628, 209 P. 78), and the security might properly be applied to the balance unpaid (Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 P. 352).

[5] Appellant pleaded as a defense, and sought to prove, an agreement with the bank, made at the time of the execution of the guarantee contract, that he was not to be liable thereunder until the truck described in the lease contract had been repossessed by the bank and sold to satisfy to that extent the Morrison note. The offered testimony under the parol evidence rule was incompetent, and its rejection was not error. Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Leonard v. Miner, 120 Cal. 403, 52 P. 655; Lindemann v. Coryell, 59 Cal. App. 788, 212 P. 47.

Appellant in the same connection claims that the offered evidence also tended to show a failure of consideration for his promise. However this may be, its effect being to vary the terms of the contract, the evidence was incompetent. Moreover, the evidence in the record clearly shows that the consideration for the guaranty was the making of the loan to the Morrisons, which was sufficient to support appellant's promise.

[6-8] At the close of the trial appellant sought to amend, by alleging that it was agreed that the guaranty contract should not be in effect until the truck should be sold by the bank and the proceeds applied on the Morrison note. Permission to amend was denied. The amendment set forth a new defense, and no reason for the delay was shown. After the expiration of the time within which amendments may be made as a matter of course, an application to amend is addressed to the sound discretion of the court. While the court should exercise its power in that respect liberally, in order that the substantial merits of the cause may be determined, yet when the court has exercised its power, either by granting or denying an amendment, the ruling is subject to review only when it is apparent that an abuse of discretion has occurred. Wixon v. Devine, 91 Cal. 477, 27 P. 777; Miner v. Rickey, 5 Cal. App. 451, 90 P. 718; Cullinan v. McColgan, 87 Cal. App. 684, 263 P. 353. Under the circumstances appearing from the record the denial of the motion was not an abuse of discretion. Bell v. Standard Quicksilver Co., 146 Cal. 699, 81 P. 17; Manha v. Union Fertilizer Co., 151 Cal. 581, 91 P. 393.

[9] Lastly, it is claimed that the allowance of an attorney's fee was improper. Appellant, having guaranteed the performance of the lease contract, was also liable for attorney's fees incurred in enforcing performance. Henne v. Summers, 23 Cal. App. 763, 139 P. 907; Grace v. Croninger, 56 Cal. App. 659, 206 P. 130; Murphy v. Luthy Battery Co., 74 Cal. App. 68, 239 P. 341.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

PEOPLE v. NEGRA. (Cr. 3198.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Criminal law §742(2)—Whether witness corroborating accomplice was also accomplice held for jury.

Whether witness in prosecution for murder, whose testimony corroborated that of accomplice, was also accomplice, was fact to be determined by jury under instructions of the court.

2. Homicide §234(3)—Evidence independent of that of accomplice held to connect defendant with commission of murder (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for murder, evidence independent of that of accomplice held sufficient to connect defendant with commission of murder, so as to comply with provisions of Pen. Code, § 1111.

3. Criminal law §512—Jury may consider that witness is accomplice in passing on credibility, but testimony cannot be rejected therefor, and, if other evidence tends to connect defendant with crime, accomplice's testimony is considered as other testimony (Pen. Code, § 1111).

While jury may consider circumstances that witness is an accomplice, in passing on his credibility as witness, his testimony is not to be rejected merely because he is an accomplice, and, if there is other evidence which measures up to requirement of Pen. Code, § 1111, tending to connect defendant with commission of crime charged, then testimony of accomplice is to be considered by jury as is any other testimony, and must be given weight to which jurors may conclude that it is entitled.

4. Criminal law §511(1)—Evidence necessary to corroborate testimony of accomplice need not tend to establish precise facts testified to by accomplice.

The law does not require that evidence necessary to corroborate testimony of an accomplice shall tend to establish precise facts testified to by accomplice.

5. Criminal law §511(2)—Strong corroborative testimony is not necessary to support conviction founded on accomplice's testimony, and evidence is sufficient if tending to connect accused with crime.

Strong corroborative testimony is not necessary to support judgment of conviction founded on testimony of an accomplice, and, even though circumstantial and slight, evidence is nevertheless sufficient if it tends to connect accused with commission of offense.

6. Criminal law §511(7)—Defendant's statements and admissions in connection with other testimony may afford corroboratory proof sufficient to sustain conviction.

Defendant's own statements and admissions, made in connection with other testimony, may afford corroboratory proof sufficient to sustain verdict of conviction.

7. Criminal law ⇨511(1)—It is unnecessary that corroborating evidence establish, without aid of testimony of accomplice, that defendant committed offense.

It is not necessary that corroborating evidence should go so far as to establish by itself and without aid of testimony of an accomplice that defendant committed offense charged.

8. Criminal law ⇨511(4)—Evidence in criminal prosecution must be considered in light of rules relating to corroborating testimony of accomplice applied to particular facts, and determination reached accordingly.

Evidence in each criminal prosecution must be considered in light of rules relating to testimony corroborating that of accomplice applied to particular facts, and determination reached accordingly.

9. Witnesses ⇨278—Defendant held not unduly limited in cross-examination of accomplice witness.

In prosecution for murder, evidence held not to show that defendant was unduly limited as to cross-examination of an accomplice, by refusing to allow testimony by accomplice as to conversation with district attorney previous to prosecution, where court and prosecution accorded defendant very wide latitude in cross-examination, which went into minutest details of accomplice's testimony.

10. Criminal law ⇨823(16)—Instruction that, if defendant aided or abetted murder, jury should return verdict of guilty, held not erroneous for using word "or." Instead of "and," where following instructions used aid and abet; "accomplice" (Pen. Code, § 31).

In prosecution for murder, instruction that if defendant instituted homicide, and aided or abetted its commission, though not present at actual killing, verdict of guilty should be returned, held not erroneous for using word "or," instead of "and," as used in definition of an "accomplice" in Pen. Code, § 31, where court not only read part of section 31, defining who are principals, but immediately followed criticized instruction with two others, stating principal must aid and abet crime, and defined "accomplice" as one who with criminal intent aids and abets another in crime.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and F. M. Ostrander, Dist. Atty., of Merced, for the People.

WASTE, C. J. Antone Negra and Robert, known as "Buck," Deluchi were indicted jointly by the grand jury of the county of Merced for the crime of murder. They were tried separately. Negra was found guilty of murder in the first degree. The jury failed to fix the punishment, and Negra was sentenced to pay the extreme penalty. The conviction rested mainly on the testimony given by Deluchi, and Negra has appealed, urging the insufficient corroboration of an accomplice to sustain the judgment, and alleged errors of the lower court occurring during the trial.

Deluchi was present at the killing of the decedent, and testified in detail as to the manner in which the deceased was lured to a lonely ranch, some distance from Los Banos, and there shot by Negra. Therefore our consideration of the evidence is to be directed to determining whether or not Deluchi's testimony, that of an accomplice, is corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the appellant, Negra, with the commission of the offense. Pen. Code, § 1111.

The evidence discloses that Negra and Ralph Amabile, the deceased, were copartners in the sheep business. They were first cousins and brothers-in-law. The partnership was indebted to a bank at Los Banos in the sum of approximately $46,800, partly secured by a mortgage upon sheep, cattle, and other personal property. As further security for the indebtedness, an insurance policy on the life of Amabile had been obtained in the sum of $10,000, with a double indemnity clause ($20,000) for accidental or violent death. The appellant, Negra, was shown to be a very intimate friend of the wife of the deceased. Their relations were objectionable to Amabile and were such as to "cause talk" in the community.

Amabile left his home on the evening of July 24, 1928, at about half past 7 o'clock, saying he was going to a distant ranch to meet a man on business. Three days later his dead body was found. He had been shot, the bullet entering his back and piercing his heart. The truck, in which he left his home on July 24, was found several days after the murder, abandoned on a street in Tracy. It is the theory of the prosecution that in killing Amabile the appellant was actuated by two motives: First, to secure money to place the business in a better financial condition through collecting the insurance on the life of his partner; and, second, to remove the obstacle of Amabile's objections to appellant's intimacy with Amabile's wife. Ten thousand dollars of the insurance was collected and paid to the bank immediately after Amabile was killed.

The witness Deluchi testified that for several weeks prior to the actual killing the appellant had endeavored to get him, Deluchi, to "pull a job" for him for which he would give Deluchi $500. Appellant said to Deluchi: "This Ralph Amabile, he is going, or me. We have been fighting all the time." Appellant give Deluchi money on several occasions, once for the purpose of buying a gun. Through Deluchi, the appellant endeavored to get two other men, living in Stockton, to do the "job," which he told each was to kill Amabile. Neither of the men approached consenting to kill Amabile, according to Deluchi's testimony, Negra said he would "get him," and that he "had an alibi all fixed." Amabile was then induced by Negra and Deluchi to go to the deserted Santa Nella ranch. There is some evidence from which it may be inferred that he was requested by them to go there for the purpose of getting some stolen calves. Negra and Deluchi reached the ranch before Amabile. Negra went into the barn. Amabile soon arrived, backed his truck up to the barn, and got out. There was a shot, Amabile fell, and, when Deluchi came up, Negra said to him, "I guess the son of a bitch won't bother me now." He told Deluchi to take Amabile's truck out to the highway. Later in the evening, appellant and his wife went to a moving picture show in Los Banos, and Negra apparently made an effort to be seen there, and that his automobile should be seen near the theater. The prosecution's theory is that appellant was thereby laying the basis for an attempt to establish an alibi. Deluchi drove the truck to Stockton, and then to Tracy, where he abandoned it.

[1, 2] Immediately after the discovery of the body, the appellant was interviewed by deputy sheriffs concerning the death of Amabile, and the movements and whereabouts of himself and Deluchi prior to and on the 24th of July. He made many statements, which were subsequently shown to be untrue, and later, when confronted with the falsity of his statements, he made further denials, and became angry. After three or four days, however, he went to the office of the sheriff, and was taken to the office of the district attorney, where he admitted, as subsequently proved by several witnesses, that on July 24 he had been with Deluchi near the place where the crime was committed, and about the time of the killing of Amabile, as described by Deluchi. While the search for Amabile's body was being conducted, and during the time the authorities were seeking to reconstruct the incidents leading to and surrounding the murder, appellant was, according to the testimony of several witnesses, nervous, and expressed himself as fearing trouble if the body should be found. In the presence of a number of persons who testified

In the case, he stated that Morse, a deputy sheriff investigating the killing, was trying to connect him with the crime, and if "he did not look out [he] would blow his head off, too." He uttered the same threat, in substance, against persons who told the officers they saw Deluchi and him near the scene of the crime.

Appellant's reasons, given when on the stand, for not admitting that he was with Deluchi on the day of Amabile's death, and his explanation and his counsel's theory as to why he did not tell the authorities that he was with Deluchi near the scene of the murder and about the time it was committed, failed to impress the jury. It was plausible, but did not satisfy. According to his testimony, Amabile was engaged in stealing cattle, against his (appellant's) remonstrance, and Deluchi was apparently in on the deal; he had, at Amabile's request, taken Deluchi to meet Amabile; and he was "scared they would run [him] into this thing." The fact that appellant and Deluchi were much together and had frequent telephone conversations during the weeks preceding Amabile's death, as testified to by Deluchi, appears to be abundantly established by the testimony of a number of witnesses. The witness Eddie Smith corroborated the testimony of Deluchi that appellant bought a gun in Stockton and endeavored to induce Smith and another man, "Shillalah Buck," to "do the job," as "Buck Deluchi ran out on him."

It is argued that Smith was also an accomplice. Whether he was or not was a fact to be determined by the jury under the instructions of the court (People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44); but, without Smith's testimony, there is sufficient evidence in the record, independent of that of Deluchi, tending to connect the appellant with the commission of the offense to comply with the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code.

[3-8] While the jury may consider the circumstance that a witness is an accomplice, in passing upon his credibility as a witness (People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 348, 354, 15 P. 5), his testimony is not to be rejected merely because he is an accomplice, and if there is other evidence which measures up to the requirement of the Code (supra), tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged, then such testimony of the accomplice is to be considered by the jury, as is any other testimony, and must be given the weight to which the jurors may conclude that it is entitled. People v. Hoosier, 24 Cal. App. 746, 142 P. 514.

The evidence tending to connect a defendant with the commission of the crime may be slight and, when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration. People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 P. 32. The law does not require that the evidence necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice shall tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice; and strong corroborative testimony is not necessary to support a judgment of conviction founded on the testimony of an accomplice. Even though circumstantial and slight, the evidence is, nevertheless, sufficient if it tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense. People v. Martin, 19 Cal. App. 295, 125 P. 919. The defendant's own statements and admissions, made in connection with other testimony, may afford corroboratory proof sufficient to sustain a verdict. People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 570, 46 P. 611; People v. Sullivan, 144 Cal. 471, 473, 77 P. 1000. It is not necessary that the corroborating evidence should go so far as to establish by itself, and without the aid of the testimony of an accomplice, that the defendant committed the offense charged. People v. Solomon, 6 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 305, 58 P. 55.

It is not necessary to cite the great number of authorities which sustain these fundamental principles of law relating to the testimony of an accomplice. An examination of the decisions will show that the evidence in each case must be considered in the light of these rules, applied to its particular facts, and a determination reached accordingly.

We are of the view that there is evidence in this case, other than the testimony of Deluchi, which, when considered as a whole, tends quite convincingly to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense for which he was indicted. The jurors accepted it, and, under correct instructions, passed upon its weight and the credibility of the witnesses who gave it. Its weight and the credibility of the witnesses were again passed upon by the trial court on a motion for a new trial, which was denied. We find no legal ground for disagreeing with the conclusion of the court and jury.

[9] Because of the importance the jury must have attached to the testimony of Deluchi, appellant complains that the trial court unduly limited the cross-examination of that witness, and prevented appellant from following an inquiry vital to his case. The record does not bear out the contention. After the homicide, Deluchi went first to Stockton, where, he testified, appellant met him and gave him $50. He then fled to Mexico, where he was apprehended and returned to Los Angeles. He refused to discuss the killing of Amabile with the arresting officers, but talked freely with Mr. Ostrander, the district attorney of Merced, who interviewed him in the office of the district attorney of Los Angeles county. The details of that conversation, and what was there said, were not offered in this case, for Deluchi was not on trial, and his extrajudicial statements to Mr. Ostrander in Los Angeles were no part of the case against appellant. Near the close of appellant's cross-examination of Deluchi, the witness was asked who was the first person to whom he told the story of the killing of Amabile after his arrest. He replied that it was Mr. Ostrander. The record continues as follows:

"Q. Who spoke to you first? A. Mr. Ostrander.

"Q. What did he say to you? A. He said, 'How do you do,' or 'Hello,' or 'How are you.'

"Q. And then what? A. He asked me then—he started to ask me in regard to this case.

"Q. And did you immediately tell him all about it, or did you deny it first.

"Mr. Ostrander: If the court please, we object as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and not proper cross-examination.

"The Court: The objection is sustained. If you want to make him your own witness, you may do so at the proper time.

"Mr. Gabriel: Q. Was there any promises made to you? A. Nothing whatever.

"Q. Has there been any since then, any promises made to you in reference to this case? A. Nothing, no promises whatever; only my attorney had wrote me a letter, while I was in Madera, to come and make a clean breast of everything, and to tell the truth, and also my relatives in San Francisco."

A number of questions about the letter followed, and the witness was questioned as to his attitude toward appellant, and if he was not trying to convict appellant. He answered that he was not. The cross-examination of Deluchi was long and searching, before and after the incident noted. In view of the serious nature of the charge against appellant, and the alleged association of Deluchi in the commission of the crime, the ruling complained of might well have been otherwise; but, when we review the record of the entire cross-examination, we find no justification for the plea that appellant was unduly limited. He cites no other ruling in support of his contention. The court and prosecution accorded appellant a very wide latitude in the cross-examination, which went into the minutest details of Deluchi's testimony.

[10] Complaint is made of certain of the trial court's instructions. In one part of the charge to the jury, it told the jurors that if they "believed from the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt that defendant, Antone Negra, instituted the homicide, and aided or abetted its commission," even though not present at the actual killing, the jury should return a verdict of guilty. Complaint is made of the use of the disjunctive word "or," in the italicized portion of the instruction, instead of the conjunctive word "and," as used in the definition of an accomplice found in section 31 of the Penal Code. Support for the contention that the instruction is erroneous is found in two old decisions of this court, in which the instructions then under consideration were held to be improper. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 P. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44. We are not now so impressed with the soundness of those decisions on the point now made as to accept their application, unless that be found absolutely necessary. In fact, in the Dole Case the court held that a correct specific instruction on the precise point affected by the improper use of the word "or" in the erroneous instruction cured the error, and that has ever since been the rule. People v. Arnold, 199 Cal. 471, 499, 250 P. 168; People v. Morine 138 Cal. 626, 629, 72 P. 166; People v. Anderson, 59 Cal. App. 408, 431, 211 P. 254; People v. Fisher, 30 Cal. App. 135, 138, 157 P. 7; People v. Fredoni, 12 Cal. App. 685, 108 P. 663.

While in this case the instruction complained of is the one specifically referring to the defendant Negra, the trial court, not only correctly read the part of section 31 of the Penal Code defining who are principals, but immediately followed the criticized instruction with two others, in one of which it told the jury that a principal must aid and abet in the commission of the crime, and in the other extended the definition of an accomplice to be one who "with criminal intent aids, abets, and assists another in the commission of such crime." We are therefore satisfied in this case, as we were in People v. Arnold, supra, that, in view of all the instructions given on the subject of who are principals in the commission of criminal offenses, and the general circumstances of the case, the jury could not have taken the charge as to "aiding and abetting" in the narrow and literal sense which might attach if the objectionable instruction was the only one on the subject.

Complaint is also made that the lower court erroneously instructed the jury on the doctrine of the defense of alibi, but fails to point out wherein the alleged error lies. As we read it, the instruction, in substance, correctly states the law (People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 327, 57 P. 1067), and was favorable to the defendant.

In support of his motion for a new trial, appellant presented the affidavits of a number of persons. These were met by counter affidavits offered by the prosecution, and the motion was denied. On reading these affidavits, we are convinced that the trial court did not abuse the wise discretion vested in it in ruling on the motion. What has been before said by this court on that subject covers the case so exactly that we refer to the decision in People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 P. 671, and especially to the language of the court and the decisions cited on page 350 of the report.

The evidence in this case fairly supports the verdict of the jury. The rulings and instructions of the court complained of did not constitute error.

The judgment of conviction and the order denying the motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

LANGDON, J. I dissent. The chief witness for the prosecution was an admitted accomplice, Buck Deluchi. I think the court erred in curtailing the cross-examination of the accomplice, Deluchi, without whose testimony no conviction could be had in the case. It is evident that the testimony of Deluchi is full of contradictions, and his reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was shown by the testimony of a number of reputable witnesses to be bad. It is evident, also, that he was testifying to save his own life, and, therefore, the widest latitude should have been extended on the cross-examination of this witness.

I am satisfied, also, that the corroboration of the accomplice falls far short of the standard required as set forth in People v. Kempley (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 478.

YALE et al. v. BRIGGS et al.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 10, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨ 123—Appeals from minute orders in will contest, intended merely to afford data from which proper final judgment might be drafted, held dismissible.

Where minute orders in will contest, granting nonsuit as against certain contestants, were intended and must have been understood to be and to serve merely as memoranda affording data from which proper final judgment might thereafter be drafted, disposing of entire cause, appeals from such orders were dismissed, since in such case appeal would lie only from formal judgment.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Proceeding by Harold L. Yale and others against William E. Briggs and others to contest and revoke probate of the will of Charles Yale, deceased. From orders granting nonsuit as to certain contestants, and portion of judgment thereon, such contestants appeal. On motions to dismiss appeals. Motion to dismiss appeals from orders granted, and motion to dismiss appeal from portion of judgment denied.

Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry A. Chamberlin and Farrand & Slosson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Motions to dismiss appeals. The last will and testament of Charles Yale, deceased, and a codicil thereto, were duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued. A contest and petition to revoke the probate was filed by the appellants, and the proceeding came regularly on for hearing. During the hearing, and as the introduction of evidence progressed, the proponents and respondents moved for a nonsuit as to each of the four grounds of contest. An order granting the motion as to the third and fourth grounds of contest was entered in the minutes on November 23, 1928, and an order granting the motion as to the second ground was entered on December 6, 1928. On the following day a nonsuit was granted as to the first ground of contest, but only as to two of the contestants. The issue presented by the first ground of contest was submitted to a jury, which found for the remaining contestants. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict on December 31, 1928.

The judgment provided, in part: "That said motions of said respondents * * * for a nonsuit and dismissal of the second, third amended, and fourth separate grounds of contest having heretofore been ordered granted, same are and each of them is hereby granted, and said separate grounds of contest to revoke said will and codicil and the probate thereof, on the ground of undue influence, fraud, and conspiracy, and lack of proper execution, are hereby dismissed, and said contestants shall have and recover nothing, and be granted no relief, under and by reason of said second, third amended, and fourth separate grounds of contest; and it appearing that contestants, Jennie Ethelyn Grisier * * * and Richard Miller, are not interested in said estate as contemplated by law, and are not proper parties to said contest, said action and contest is dismissed as to said contestants Jennie Ethelyn Grisier and Richard Miller only." On February 14, 1929, the contestants filed a notice of appeal to this court from each of the several minute orders above referred to, and from that portion of the judgment just above quoted. The notice of appeal was filed more than 60 days after the entry of the respective minute orders, but within 60 days of the entry of the judgment.

In moving for a dismissal of the several appeals, the respondents rely on section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads, in part, as follows: "An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered, in the following cases: * * * 5. By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. * * * The dismissals mentioned in subdivisions 3, 4, and 5 of this section must be made by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered. * * *

The respondents take the position that, under the provisions of this section, each of the several minute orders became, when entered, a final determination or judgment upon the particular ground of contest to which it related, requiring any appeal therefrom to be taken within 60 days after the entry. It is contended that the appeals from these orders, not having been taken within that time, were taken too late. The dismissal of the appeal from the quoted portion of the judgment is moved on the ground that the reference therein to the orders of nonsuit theretofore made was "superfluous and of no effect." It is respondents' contention that, as an appeal from a nonsuit, to be effective, must be taken within 60 days from the entry of the order of nonsuit in the minutes, no appeal will lie from a formal judgment of dismissal thereafter entered.

Without in any manner attempting to minimize the force of the authorities cited and relied on by the respondents in support of their motion, it is our conclusion, founded on a reading of the several minute orders and of that portion of the formal judgment hereinabove quoted, that the minute orders were intended by the trial court, and must have been understood by the parties, to be and to serve merely as memoranda affording data from which a proper final judgment might thereafter be drafted disposing of the entire cause. In such a case an appeal is held to lie from the formal judgment. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 523, 524, 59 P. 937; Larson v. Larson, 15 Cal. App. 531, 536, 115 P. 340.

The motion to dismiss the appeals from the several minute orders hereinabove referred to is granted. The motion to dismiss the appeal from a portion of the judgment is denied.

UNITED STATES v. ACKERMAN et al.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 10, 1929.

Appeal and error §795(1)—Motion to dismiss appeal, because appellants were not "parties aggrieved," which did not challenge appellate jurisdiction, or allege appellant's failure to comply with rules, was denied (Code Civ. Proc. § 938).

Motion to dismiss appeal on ground that appellants, being only lodgers in hotel closed as a common nuisance by order of court, were not "parties aggrieved," and had no interest in subject-matter of action, within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 938, was denied, where there was no challenge in such motion to jurisdiction of appellate court for alleged failure of appellants to comply with rules or statute as to appeals.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by the United States against Rosa Ackerman and others. Judgment against defendants. On motion to dismiss appeal of Paul Bahr and others. Denied.

William H. Johnson, of San Jose, for appellants.

Fred L. Thomas and Frank J. Waterhouse, both of San Jose, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. This action, instituted under and pursuant to the provisions of sections 21 and 22 of title 2 of the National Prohibition Act (41 Stat. 305 [27 USCA pp. 99, 111, §§ 33, 34]), terminated in the court below with the entry of a decree adjudging the Alviso Hotel, situate in the county of Santa Clara, to be a common nuisance, and ordering the entire building closed for a period of one year. No appeal was taken by the owner of the building. However, certain occupants of the hotel, none of whom had been made parties to the action, duly moved the court below to vacate or modify its judgment, on the ground, among others, that "each of said moving parties are aggrieved by the effect of said judgment, and are materially injured as to their substantial rights."

An affidavit, filed in support of this motion, set out that the several moving parties had been occupying rooms in the Alviso Hotel "as their private place of dwelling"; that at none of the times mentioned in the complaint had intoxicating liquors been kept or dispensed in any of their said rooms; and that, by reason of the judgment and decree of abatement, they had been ousted and ejected "from their several rooms and places of dwelling." From the order denying their motion to vacate or modify the judgment, the moving parties prosecuted this appeal.

The plaintiff and respondent moves to dismiss the appeal, principally on the ground that the appellants "at no time had any interest in the subject-matter of the action, for the reason that they were mere lodgers in said hotel," and were not, therefore, "parties aggrieved," within the meaning of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Inspection of the transcript and of the appellants' opening brief discloses that both the motion to vacate the judgment and the appeal from the order denying the same are grounded on the claim that the appellants, although merely roomers or lodgers in the Alviso Hotel, have such an interest in that portion of the building occupied by them as "places of dwelling" as to make them "parties aggrieved," within the meaning of section 938, supra. It is readily apparent, therefore, that a determination of the motion to dismiss the appeal involves the necessity of an investigation and consideration of the merits of the appeal.

A motion to dismiss an appeal "is, in the usual acceptation of the term, a challenge to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, or based upon some alleged failure of the appellant to comply with the statutes or the rules of court in taking and perfecting his appeal. * * *" Estate of Sharp, 10 Cal. App. 1, 2, 100 P. 1071. Here there is no challenge to the jurisdiction of the court, or alleged failure to comply with the rules or statutes as to appeals.

That being so, the motion to dismiss is denied, with leave to the respondent to renew the motion upon the final submission of the appeal, if so advised.

CITY OF INGLEWOOD v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 10903.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨434(1)—Exemption of municipality's property from taxation does not apply to special assessments (Const. art. 13, § 1; Pol. Code, § 3607).

Const. art. 13, § 1, and Pol. Code, § 3607, exempting property of a municipality from taxation, does not apply to special assessments.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨406(1)—Power to levy special assessment is analogous to that exerted in levy of ordinary tax.

Power to levy special assessment is exercise of same power as that exerted in levy of an ordinary tax for governmental purposes, and both have their source in the fundamental power inherent in all governments.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨426—Special assessment for local improvement cannot be made on municipality's property without positive legislative authority.

Special assessment for local improvement cannot be imposed on property owned by municipal corporation unless there is positive legislative authority.

4. Drains ⇨70—Health ⇨4—Levees and flood control ⇨23—Municipal corporation was not bound by general words relating to taxation of real property in statutes creating flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts (Los Angeles County Flood Control Act; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; St. 1919, p. 731, as amended).

Municipal corporation held not bound by general words to effect that all real property in district should be and remain liable for taxes contained in Los Angeles County Flood Control Act (St. 1915, p. 1502); St. 1923, p. 498, as amended, creating Los Angeles County Sanitation District No. 5; and St. 1919, p. 731, as amended, creating drainage improvement district.

5. Drains ⚡70—Health ⚡4—Levees and flood control ⚡23—City held not liable for special assessments on property privately owned when flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts were created but acquired by city and used for public purposes before assessments were made (St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; St. 1919, p. 731, as amended; Acquisition and Improvement Act 1925, § 5).

City held not liable for special assessments on property privately owned at time of creation of flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts under St. 1915, p. 1502, St. 1923, p. 498, as amended, and St. 1919, p. 731, as amended, but which city subsequently acquired and used for public purposes before assessments were made, since, there being nothing in any of such acts or in any other statute which expressly or impliedly provides for imposition of such liability upon municipally owned property, it must be conclusively presumed that no intention existed in minds of Legislatures to authorize assessment upon such class of property in view of Acquisition and Improvement Act 1925, § 5 (St. 1925, p. 849), in which assessments were authorized for local improvements on lands of municipalities.

6. Evidence ⚡65—Property owners in flood control and other districts were conclusively presumed to know legal effect of acts creating assessment districts (St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; St. 1919, p. 731, as amended).

Property owners in flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts created by St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; and St. 1919, p. 731, as amended, were conclusively presumed to have known that legal effect of such acts was that property of municipality could not be taxed and to have acted in light of such knowledge at time of hearing when their lands were included in such districts and made liable for improvement assessments.

7. Constitutional law ⚡290(1)—Withdrawal for assessment purposes of property acquired by city after formation of flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts did not deprive taxpayers of property without due process (St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; St. 1919, p. 731, as amended).

Withdrawal for assessment purposes of property acquired by city subsequent to formation of flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts under St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; and St. 1919, p. 731, as amended, did not deprive taxpayers of their property without due process of law, since this was legal consequence of operation of statutes under which districts were organized and of which property owners were fully informed by provisions of such acts.

8. Constitutional law ⚡290(1)—Withdrawal for assessment purposes of property acquired by city after formation of flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts did not deprive bondholders of property without due process (St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; St. 1919, p. 731, as amended).

Withdrawal for assessment purposes of property acquired by city after formation of flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts under St. 1915, p. 1502; St. 1923, p. 498, as amended; and St. 1919, p. 731, as amended, did not deprive bondholders of their property without due process of law, since they purchased bonds of districts with full knowledge that enabling acts under which bonds were issued contained no provision authorizing assessment of municipal property for purpose of paying bonds or for any other purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by the City of Inglewood against the County of Los Angeles for the refund of special assessments and penalties paid under protest. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Clyde Woodworth, City Atty., of Inglewood, for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., and Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsels, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. C. McAllaster, City Atty., of Pasadena, for intervener City of Pasadena.

CURTIS, J. This action was brought under the provisions of section 3819 of the Political Code of this state for the refund of certain special assessments and penalties paid under written protest upon publicly owned and used property of the city of Inglewood, situated in the county of Los Angeles. The action comes before us upon an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of said county, sustaining a general demurrer of the county of Los Angeles to the complaint of said city of Inglewood. These special assessments were levied by the county officials of said county of Los Angeles, acting for and on behalf of the Los Angeles flood control district, the Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5, and the Los Angeles county drainage district No. 8. The complaint states the following facts regarding said districts and the several assessments which are the subject of this action:

1. Los Angeles county flood control district was created by an act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "Los Angeles County Flood Control Act," approved June 12, 1915, Statutes 1915, p. 1502. Said district was duly and regularly established under the provisions of said act on August 11, 1915, and at all times since has duly and regularly performed the governmental purposes set forth in said act. Further facts regarding said district may be found in the decision rendered by this court in the action entitled Los Angeles County Flood Control District v. Hamilton, reported in 177 Cal. 119, 169 P. 1028. Under and by virtue of the provisions of said act, there was levied upon the property included within said district for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1927, and ending June 30, 1928, a special assessment on land and improvements only of 11 cents per hundred dollars of assessed valuation.

2. Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5. Under and by virtue of an act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "An act authorizing the creation, government and maintenance of county sanitation districts, issuance of bonds by such districts and the powers thereof," approved May 29, 1923, Statutes 1923, p. 498, as amended, there was validly and legally established prior to said first Monday in March, 1927, a certain assessment district known as Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5. Jurisdiction of the said district over the land and improvements included therein for the purposes of said district including the levy of special assessments thereon attached on the 31st day of March, 1924. Under and by virtue of the provisions of said act there was levied on land and improvements located in said Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5, a special assessment for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1927, and ending June 30, 1928, of 26 cents per hundred dollars of assessed valuation.

3. Los Angeles county drainage district No. 8. Under and by virtue of the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "An act to promote the drainage of wet, swamp and overflow lands, and to promote the public health in the communities in which they lie; providing for the issuance of bonds and levying of assessments on lands benefited, to pay the cost and expenses thereof," Statutes 1919, p. 731, as amended, there was prior to the first Monday in March, 1927, created in the county of Los Angeles a certain special assessment district known as "Drainage Improvement District No. 8 of Los Angeles County." Jurisdiction of the said district over the land and improvements included therein for the purposes of said district including the levy of special assessments thereon attached on the 17th day of March, 1924.

There was validly levied under and by virtue of the provisions of said act in zone H of said drainage improvement district No. 8 of Los Angeles county, for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of interest and sinking fund on the bonds of said district, a special assessment of 8 cents per hundred dollars of assessed valuation of land only located in said district.

Under the provisions of all of said acts, the special assessments of said districts are levied and collected at the same time and in the same manner as the general tax levy for county purposes in the county of Los Angeles.

Subsequent to the first Monday in March, 1927, the tax collector of the county of Los Angeles, acting as tax collector of the Los Angeles county flood control district, and on behalf of said Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5 and drainage improvement district No. 8 of Los Angeles county, presented certain tax bills to the city of Inglewood; said tax bills showing assessments against the property described in the complaint under each of said districts. Said assessments were not paid and on the 8th day of June, 1928, the properties were duly and regularly advertised for sale, and on the 30th day of June, 1928, were sold to the state in the usual manner. On or about the 9th day of July, 1928, said property was redeemed from the sale, payment being made under protest, and thereupon this action was brought to recover the sum so paid under the provisions of section 3819 of the Political Code, as aforesaid.

All of the property described in said assessments is situated in the city of Inglewood and within the various named districts and zones heretofore mentioned and was, at the respective dates on which said districts were created or organized, privately owned property, but since the creation and organization of said districts said property has been acquired by said city of Inglewood, and at 12 o'clock noon on the first Monday of March, 1927, the city of Inglewood was and ever since said date has been the owner of the whole of said property, and all of said property on said last-named date was and at all times thereafter has been exclusively devoted to and actually used by said city of Inglewood for public purposes.

The sole question presented on this appeal is whether or not property which was privately owned at the time of the creation of an assessment district under any one of the above mentioned acts, but which subsequently became public property, used for a public purpose, is subject to assessment for the improvement or other work for which the district is created.

The language of the three acts with reference to the assessments, the issuance of bonds, and the property within the respective districts liable for the payment of the assessments levied for the purpose of paying the bonded indebtedness and other charges against the district, while not in the same phraseology, is not materially different and need not be set out in full. It is sufficient to say that there is a provision in each of the three acts which provides for the raising of funds by means of a bonded indebtedness to meet the expense of improvements made by the several districts, and to levy an annual ad valorem tax for the purpose of paying the amount due on the bonds of the district and for the maintenance thereof. In the flood control district this tax is levied "upon the taxable real property in said district" and "all real property in the district shall be and remain liable to be taxed for such payments as hereinafter provided." In the sanitation district this tax or assessment is levied and collected "upon all the taxable real property within the district," and the bonds issued under the provisions of the act governing the organization of said district "shall be a lien upon the real property of the district * * * and all the real property in the district shall be and remain liable to be taxed for such payments as hereinafter provided." In the drainage district the act providing for its organization directs that "the board of supervisors shall annually at the time of making the general tax levy for general county purposes levy special assessment taxes on the land (exclusive of improvements, but inclusive of the land of public utilities) within the several zones theretofore established. The board shall determine the total sum that will be needed to meet the payments of principal and interest on the bonds of the district that will fall due before the proceeds of the next annual levy are available and shall determine the amount to be raised for each zone according to the percentage fixed for each zone. The special assessment tax to be levied in each zone shall be at the rate based on the value of the land in the zone as assessed for the purpose of general county taxation clearly sufficient to raise the amount determined by the board to be raised from such zone."

[1] It will be noted that in the flood control and sanitation districts all "taxable real property" is made liable for the payment of the special assessments which would, of course, include improvements upon real property, while in the drainage district land exclusive of improvements is made the sole source from which revenue is to be derived by the levy of special assessments. Whether any distinction is to be made between "taxable real property" as used in the Flood Control and Sanitation Acts, and "land" as used in the Drainage Act, is not necessary for us to decide in this action.

There is a broad and well-recognized distinction between a tax levied for general governmental or public purposes, and a special assessment levied for improvements made under special laws of a local character. San Diego v. Linda Vista Irrigation Dist., 108 Cal. 189, 41 P. 291, 35 L. R. A. 33; City Street Improvement Co. v. Regents, etc., 153 Cal. 776, 96 P. 801, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451. As to the former, that is, a tax for governmental purposes, property of a municipality is exempt therefrom by express provision of the Constitution of this state and of the Political Code. Constitution of California, art. 13, § 1; Pol.

Code, § 3607. These provisions of the Constitution and Code, however, do not apply to special assessments, and property of a municipality or other property publicly owned may, under certain circumstances, be made liable for special assessments. City of San Diego v. Linda Vista Irrigation Dist., supra, and City Street Improvement Co. v. Regents, etc., supra; Los Angeles County F. C. Dist. v. Hamilton, 177 Cal. 119, 130, 169 P. 1028; City of Pasadena v. McAllaster (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 873. The rule is aptly stated by Judge Cooley in the following language: "While these local assessments are taxed under a taxing power, they are not taxes in the ordinary understanding of that term, and that, consequently, the usual exemptions from taxation will not preclude the property exempt being subject to them." Cooley on Taxation (2d Ed.) p. 650.

[2] Nevertheless, the power to levy a special assessment is the exercise of the same power as that exerted in the levy of an ordinary tax for governmental purposes. Both have their source in the fundamental power inherent in all governments. Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co. (C. C.) 18 F. 385. In this latter case the court said (page 411): "Taxation for local improvements, or for city, county, or town purposes, involves the exercise of the same power which is exerted in taxation for state or general purposes. It is the sovereign power of the state in both cases which authorizes the tax, whether that power be exerted directly by an act of the legislature, or by a municipal body as an instrumentality of the state. 'That these assessments,' says Cooley, speaking of such as are special, 'are an exercise of the taxing power, has over and over again been affirmed, until the controversy may be regarded as closed.'"

[3] While publicly owned and used property is not exempt from special assessments under the Constitution or statutory law of this state, there is an implied exemption of such property from burdens of that nature. This rule is stated by Dillon as follows: "The principle which makes property of the state or any of its political or municipal subdivisions nontaxable under general statutory provisions and in the absence of a positive direction therefor, according to the great weight of authority, also precludes the imposition of a special assessment for a street or other local improvement upon such property, unless there is positive legislative authority therefor." 4 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, p. 2577, § 1446. This rule has been uniformly approved and followed in this state. San Diego v. Linda Vista Irrigation Dist., supra; Witter v. Mission School Dist., 121 Cal. 350, 53 P. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33; City Street Improvement Co. v. Regents, etc., supra; Raisch v. Regents, etc., 37 Cal. App. 697, 174 P. 943;

City of Fresno v. Fresno Irrigation Dist., 72 Cal. App. 503, 237 P. 772; Reclamation District No. 684 v. East Bay Municipal Utility District (Cal. App.) 266 P. 969.

The respondent admits that all property owned by said city of Inglewood and by it devoted to public use at the date of the creation of said several districts was exempt from assessments. At the time of the trial it was stipulated by the parties to this action "that so far as the complaint was based upon payments of special assessments and penalties thereon upon property which was in public ownership and use upon the date of the establishment of the particular assessment district, under and by virtue of which said special assessments were levied, that judgment might be entered therefor for the plaintiff." Respondent, however, insists that a distinction should be made as to property which was in private ownership when such particular district was organized and thereafter was acquired by the city of Inglewood and by it devoted to one or more of the public uses of said city. Respondent contends that to release such property from its proportion of the cost of maintaining said district and of making improvements therein would be to cast upon the balance of the property owners in said district an additional burden without giving them any notice thereof or any opportunity to be heard, and would accordingly amount to the taking of the property of the other landowners in said district without due process of law. Respondent further contends that unless all property in private ownership at the time the particular district was organized continues to be liable for special assessments, even if it thereafter becomes the property of a municipal corporation, devoted to public use, the contract of said district with its bondholders will become unconstitutionally impaired. No direct authority is cited by respondent in support of either of these propositions. Respondent, however, relies upon certain decisions of this and other jurisdictions as declaring principles which if applied to the facts in the present proceeding would compel this court to hold in favor of its contentions. We will discuss some of the more important of these authorities and attempt to show their applicability or nonapplicability to the facts of this case. The first of these in the case of City of Santa Monica v. Los Angeles County, 15 Cal. App. 710, 115 P. 945. That was an action brought to recover taxes paid under protest. The property assessed was privately owned property on March 1, 1903. Thereafter, but before such assessment was levied, the city of Santa Monica acquired said property. The court held with the defendant in said action that the lien of said taxes attached on the first Monday in March of said year and that, "The plaintiff, when it acquired this land, took it subject to the lien for county purposes to the same extent as would a private purchaser." We can see but slight analogy between that case and the one now before us. In the case of the city of Santa Monica, it purchased the property after the taxes for the current year had become a lien thereon and said lien was not affected or destroyed by the property thereafter being devoted to public use. The property of the city of Inglewood, against which said special assessments were attempted to be levied, was purchased by said city and devoted by it to a public use prior to the 1st of March of the year in which said special assessment was levied and therefore before any lien for any assessment had attached thereto.

The next case relied upon by the respondent is Nevada National Bank v. Poso Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 344, 73 P. 1056. In that case it was held that land which was government land at the time of the organization of an irrigation district was no part of said district, and that a subsequent purchaser of said land from the government took said land free from any liability contracted or incurred by the district, including bonds of the district issued for the purpose of making improvements therein. Respondent insists that by the ruling in this case the status of an assessment district is determined at the date of its creation, and subsequent conveyances cannot alter it. We cannot agree with this contention. The grounds of said decision are, as set forth therein, that: "If the grantee of the United States must take the land burdened with the liability of an irrigation district made to include it without the assent of the government or the purchaser, it attaches a condition to the disposal of the property of the government without its sanction or consent, and which must, in such cases, interfere with its disposal." According to the construction placed upon that decision by respondent, if, after the formation of said district the government would decide to locate and build a post office therein, and should purchase for that purpose and construct a post office building upon a lot or parcel of land which was in private ownership at the time of the organization of said district, that said land and premises, even though belonging to the United States government and used by it as a post office, would be liable for all taxes and assessments that might thereafter be levied by said district. There is nothing in said decision to justify any such claim or contention. The case of Lee v. Osceola Imp. Dist., 268 U. S. 643, 45 S. Ct. 620, 69 L. Ed. 1133, cited by respondent, contains nothing so far as we can perceive which is in any way helpful to respondent. That case cites, with approval, Nevada National Bank v. Poso Irr. Dist., supra, and deals with the same question that was involved in that case, as will appear from the following brief statement from the opinion: "It was settled many years ago that the property of the United States is exempt by the Constitution from taxation under the authority of a state so long as title remains in the United States. Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 180, 6 S. Ct. 670, 29 L. Ed. 845. This is conceded. It is urged, however, that this rule has no application after the title has passed from the United States, and that it may then be taxed for any legitimate purposes. While this is true in reference to general taxes assessed after the United States has parted with its title, we think it clear that it is not the case where the tax is sought to be imposed for benefits accruing to the property from improvements made while it was still owned by the United States." These are the principal authorities cited by the respondent in behalf of its contention that property in private ownership at the time of the creation of a district like one of the three districts mentioned herein remains liable for the payment of all assessments thereafter levied by said district, notwithstanding the fact that said property was on the first Monday in March of the year in which said assessments were levied public property and exclusively devoted to public use. In our opinion there is nothing in any of these authorities which would justify us in holding that in considering the property within said districts liable for said special assessments, any distinction should be made between property which was public property at the time of the creation or organization of any of said districts and property which thereafter was acquired by a municipality and devoted by it to public use.

[4-7] As we have already shown, public property of a municipality, that is, property owned by such municipality and by it devoted to public use, is liable for special assessments for public improvements only in case there is a positive legislative authority therefor. In none of the acts under which the three districts involved herein were created or organized is there to be found any such authority. It is true that in two of said acts it is provided that "all real property in the district shall be and remain liable to be taxed for such purposes," and in the other language equally effective is used in reference to the property in the district liable for such assessments. These are requirements which apply generally to property within the districts. But it is well settled that the state and its subordinate agencies, including municipal corporations, are not bound by general words used in a statute. This doctrine was expressly approved by this court in a recent decision, wherein the question, and the authorities applicable thereto, were exhaustively discussed and considered. C. J. Kubach Co. v. McGuire, 199 Cal. 215, 248 P. 676. The intention of the Legislature in respect to making municipal property subject to the assessments levied for the purpose of maintaining said districts and of paying for the public improvements made therein is best determined by an inspection of the acts themselves providing for the creation and organization of said districts. When there is nothing in any of said acts, or in any other statute, which expressly or impliedly provides for the imposition of such liability upon municipally-owned property, then it must be conclusively presumed that no intention existed in the minds of the legislators at the time of the passage of said acts to authorize any tax or assessment upon such class of property. That such omission was intentional, we think, is further made apparent by reference to other acts of the Legislature, the purpose of which was to provide for local improvements and the payment of the same by special assessments. We refer particularly to the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 849), where the legislative body conducting proceedings under said act is expressly authorized to levy assessments for local improvements upon lands of a municipality. This authority is given under section 5 of said act, which provides that, "The lands upon which said special assessment taxes shall be levied * * * shall include all lands belonging to any county, municipality," etc., provided said legislative body might omit any of such lands from the levy and collection of such assessment. The fact that authority to levy assessments against municipal property was expressly given in the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925, and was omitted from each of the three acts involved herein, is an additional circumstance going to show that the Legislature never intended to authorize the levy of assessments against the public property of municipalities under any of said acts. This being so, the property owners in said several districts are conclusively presumed to have known the legal effect of said acts of the Legislature and to have acted in the light of such knowledge at the time of the hearing when their lands were included in said districts and made liable for improvement assessments. Conceding that the assessments of the individual property owners in said districts have been increased by the withdrawal for assessment purposes of the property acquired by the city of Inglewood subsequent to the formation of said districts, yet this was but the legal consequence of the operation of the acts of the Legislature under which said districts were organized, and of which the property owners were fully informed by the provisions of said acts. Their property is not, therefore, taken from them without a hearing and consequently they are not deprived of their property without due process of law.

[8] The bondholders are in a similar position to that of the landowners, as shown above. They purchased the bonds of the several districts with full knowledge that the enabling acts under which the bonds were issued contained no provision authorizing the assessment of municipal property for the purpose of paying said bonds, or for any other purpose. In their behalf we will say that no complaint has come from any of said bondholders as far as the record in this case shows. The bondholders appear to be perfectly content with the situation as it is. Neither are the landholders in any of said districts making complaint regarding the exclusion of said public lands from assessments to pay for the improvements carried on in the several districts. The point is raised by the county of Los Angeles only, the respondent herein. But, conceding that respondent may properly raise the question, we are convinced that its position regarding the validity of the assessments involved herein is untenable and finds no support in the law of this state.

The judgment is reversed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY FLOOD CONTROL DIST. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (CITY OF PASADENA, Intervener). (L. A. 11136.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1929.

1. Drains ☞70—Health ☞4—Levees and flood control ☞23—City held not liable for assessments on property privately owned when improvement districts were created but subsequently acquired by city.

City held not liable for assessments on property privately owned at time flood control, sanitation, and drainage districts were created but thereafter acquired by city and used for public purposes before levy of assessments.

2. Municipal corporations ☞513(1)—Superior court had jurisdiction to determine validity of asserted liens for assessments against city's property in suit in which city asked injunction against collector.

Superior court of Los Angeles county had jurisdiction to hear and determine validity of county's asserted liens against real property of city for assessments for improvement districts, in suit by city against tax collector in which city asked for injunction restraining tax collector from selling property for delinquent assessments and sought to have title quieted.

CURTIS, J. This case was argued and submitted for decision with the case of City of Inglewood v. County of Los Angeles, L. A. No. 10903, 280 P. 360, this day decided. That action involved the validity of certain assessments levied by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, acting for the Los Angeles county flood control district, the Los Angeles county sanitation district No. 5, and the Los Angeles county drainage improvement district No. 8, upon property which was held in private ownership at the time of the creation and organization of said districts, but which had thereafter been acquired by the city of Inglewood and by it devoted to public use, and which was so held and used by said city at the time of the levy of said assessments. In our decision in said action we held that there was no authority for the levy of any of said assessments and that the same were invalid and void. A similar assessment was levied by said board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, acting for and on behalf of the Los Angeles county flood control district, against public property of the city of Pasadena which, at the time of the creation of said flood control district, was held in private ownership, but which subsequently thereto had been acquired by said city of Pasadena and by it devoted to public use. The city of Pasadena refused to pay said assessment, and W. O. Welch, the county tax collector (who was also tax collector of said district), advertised said property of the city of Pasadena for sale for said delinquent assessments. Prior to the date of holding said sale, however, the city of Pasadena brought an action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, in which it asked, among other things, for an injunction restraining W. O. Welch, the said tax collector, from selling said property. A temporary restraining order was issued as prayed for by said superior court, and the defendant in said action, the said W. O. Welch, as such tax collector, appeared in said action and filed a demurrer to the complaint therein and also a motion to dissolve said restraining order. Said demurrer was overruled and said motion was denied. Thereupon the Los Angeles county flood control district instituted this proceeding in the District Court, Second District, Second Division, against said superior court and two of the judges thereof, to prohibit said superior court from "taking any further proceedings against or making any other orders affecting the petitioner herein in said action, other than to dissolve the restraining order previously issued therein." The city of Pasadena asked leave to file a petition in intervention in this proceeding on the ground that it was the real party in interest in opposing the petition for prohibition. Leave to intervene was granted to said city by said District Court of Appeal. The matter came on for hearing before said court, and after argument of counsel both oral and by written briefs, said court rendered its decision denying said writ of prohibition. Upon the petition of the Los Angeles county flood control district, said cause was transferred for decision to this court.

[1] It is the contention of the city of Pasadena that property owned by it and devoted to and actually used by it for public purposes is exempt from all and every kind of assessments levied under the provisions of the Los Angeles County Flood Control Act (St. 1915, p. 1502). The position of the Los Angeles county flood control district is that only such municipally owned and used property which was such at the date of the formation of said district is exempt from said assessments. This question, as we have already noted, was decided by this court in the opinion in the case of City of Inglewood v. County of Los Angeles. Said decision was adverse to the contention now made by the Los Angeles county flood control district. The decision of that question in said action is controlling in this proceeding.

[2] The Los Angeles flood control district makes the further contention that the superior court of the county of Los Angeles had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding brought by the city of Pasadena against the county tax collector to restrain the latter from selling said property of the city of Pasadena for said delinquent assessments.

While the city of Pasadena in the action instituted by it against W. O. Welch, tax collector, asked for an injunction restraining said tax collector from selling its said real property for said delinquent assessments, it also sought by said action to quiet its title to said real property against said invalid assessment liens. That action was similar in this respect to the action of Las Animas, etc., Land Co. v. Preciado, 167 Cal. 580, 140 P. 239. In the action instituted by the Las Animas

Company the prayer of the complaint was as follows: "Wherefore plaintiff prays that the said taxes, and both thereof, be declared not to be a lien or charge upon the said property, or upon any part thereof; that said defendants be enjoined, and restrained from * * * advertising the said property for sale, or selling the same for nonpayment of said tax," etc. In the action instituted by the city of Pasadena against the said W. O. Welch, tax collector, the prayer of the complaint is in part as follows: "Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment that said purported taxes and/or assessments be declared null and void and not a lien upon said property and that defendant be permanently enjoined and restrained from selling said property to said state of California for nonpayment of said taxes and/or assessments." In Las Animas, etc., Land Co. v. Preciado, supra, this court said, at page 241: "There is thus left for consideration the single proposition as to the availability to respondent of the remedy which it has sought, and herein it is argued that, under the authority of such cases as Savings & Loan Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415; Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 647; and, especially the case of Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 87 P. 102, the remedy by injunction is not available to respondent. It might be a sufficient answer to this to say that, irrespective of the injunctive relief sought and awarded, plaintiff had the unquestioned right under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have determined these conflicting lien claims asserted to affect its property, and that, this being done, the fact that an injunction was also asked would be immaterial to the cause of action specifically pleaded." The court then went on to show that the plaintiff in that action was entitled not only to quiet its title against the asserted liens for said taxes, but was also entitled to the injunctive relief prayed for. It is not material in the present proceeding to decide whether or not the city of Pasadena was entitled to an injunction in the action instituted by it against the tax collector of said flood control district. The present proceeding against the superior court of the county of Los Angeles can only be maintained by showing that said court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said action instituted therein by said city of Pasadena. That it had jurisdiction to hear and determine the validity of the asserted liens against the real property of the city of Pasadena for said assessments, we think, is not questioned. If it is questioned, the case of Las Animas, etc., Land Co. v. Preciado, supra, is decisive of the matter. This, we think, disposes of the jurisdictional question presented herein.

The writ is denied.

PROCTOR v. ARAKELIAN et al. ★
(S. F. 12748.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 3, 1929.

1. Brokers ⇨106—Evidence relating to broker's representations while agent for defendant held admissible in action to set aside note and trust deed for fraudulent representations.

In action to set aside note and trust deed on ground of fraudulent representations inducing agreement to exchange real estate, where broker before defendant presented proposed exchange agreement, which was rejected, was defendant's agent to secure exchange of property, testimony bearing on representations made during period of agency prior to presentation of rejected agreement were admissible.

2. Exchange of property ⇨8(4)—False representations made in beginning of negotiations though propositions originally proposed failed, could be considered in determining whether fraudulent representations induced agreement.

Where ultimate object of all negotiations looking to exchange of real estate was finally consummated, false representations intentionally made in beginning of negotiations, even though propositions originally proposed failed, were proper matters to be considered in determining question of fraudulent representations to plaintiff suing to set aside note and trust deed, since where person resorts to false and fraudulent representations of a material fact to gain undue advantage over another, and thereby induces him to believe that representations are true, in absence of showing that false representations were removed, it will be presumed they operated upon mind of person whom it was intended to deceive to his prejudice thereby.

3. Brokers ⇨102—Permitting broker to act as dual agent held not to authorize broker to repeat previous fraudulent representations while acting as agent of party to exchange agreement.

Where, prior to dual agency, broker as agent for one of parties to exchange agreement during negotiations made false representations regarding value of property to be exchanged, subsequent acting in dual capacity did not permit agent to repeat false representations and render principal immune from liability, if it be shown that principal and broker were acting in concert to defraud other party, since agent may become unfaithful to his trust, and, where he does, both agent and third person with whom conspiracy has been formed to defraud another may be called to account in damages.

4. Brokers ⇨102—Gross discrepancy between property values held to charge owner of farm land exchanged for business property with notice that broker in negotiating exchange imposed on other party.

Where there was gross inequality between value of business property and unproductive, unimproved, and unmarketable farm land exchanged, owner of farm land was put upon inquiry and was charged with notice of imposition on owner of business property by broker acting as his agent and trying to negotiate exchange as he would have obtained had he made inquiry.

5. Exchange of property ⇨3(1)—Party to exchange agreement relying on representations of dual agent held not required to make independent investigation of farm property exchanged.

Where party to exchange agreement, operating on large scale in buying and selling city property, but having no personal knowledge of farm property exchanged, relied on representations of other party, a large dealer in agricultural lands, and of dual agent, who had prior thereto acted for him in negotiating several deals and had always been found to be reliable, recovery could be had, in suit to set aside note and trust deed as part of transaction, for fraudulent representations regarding value of farm property, although no independent investigation to determine value was made.

6. Bills and notes ⇨520—Mortgages ⇨86(3)—Evidence in action to set aside note and trust deed for fraud supported finding that loan of $25,000 could not be procured on defendant's property as represented.

In action to set aside note and trust deed given at time of agreement exchanging real estate for fraudulent representations, evidence held to support finding that no bank or disinterested individual would loan $25,000 on defendant's farm property exchanged for plaintiff's business property as represented.

7. Jury ⇨14(4)—Complaint, asking that amount of note and trust deed sought to be set aside be deemed lien, held for foreclosure of vendor's lien precluding jury trial (Civ. Code, § 3046).

Complaint to set aside note and trust deed given in consummating transaction for exchange of real estate on ground of fraudulent representations, and praying that amount of note and trust deed be deemed a valid and subsisting lien upon property exchanged, held to present case for foreclosure of vendor's lien as recognized by Civ. Code, § 3046, precluding jury trial as a matter of right, since enforcement of such liens is a well-recognized function of courts of equity.

8. Jury ⇨14(4)—In matter of jury trial, no distinction is made between vendor's lien for unpaid purchase price and other liens.

No distinction in matter of jury trial is to be made between vendor's lien for unpaid purchase price and other liens.

9. Jury ⇨13(7)—Plaintiff in equitable proceeding is not entitled to jury trial on legal issues of fraud.

Although action for relief which can be afforded only by court of equity may involve questions of fraud and deceit, such as are cognizable in court of law, plaintiff is not entitled to jury trial on such issues when they arise in equitable proceeding.

10. Jury ⇨14(6)—Action for cancellation of note for fraud is equitable as respects jury trial.

Action for cancellation of a promissory note or other instrument on ground of fraud in its procurement is equitable, precluding jury trial as matter of right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Proctor against K. Arakelian and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Bingham, of Stanford University (Ralph W. Arnot, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

Lindsay & Gearhart, of Fresno, and McKee, Tasheira & Wahrhaftig, of Oakland, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in defendants' favor in an action arising from a transaction wherein plaintiff exchanged valuable real property owned by him and situate in the business district of the city of Oakland, at the northwest corner of Clay and Sixteenth streets, 50x75 feet, upon which was located a substantial five-story brick building, with basement, for 1,000 acres of unproductive, unimproved, and unmarketable land, belonging to respondent K. Arakelian, and of the quality known as magnesia alkaline clay, situate in the county of Fresno, and United States Liberty bonds of the par value of $55,000. Said bonds were found by the trial judge to be of the actual market value, including accrued interest, of but $49,614.01. Plaintiff in turn executed in favor of defendant Rosa Arakelian, wife of K. Arakelian, his promissory note for the sum of $30,000 secured by a trust deed upon said Fresno county real property, in which deed respondents K. Arakelian and D. Arakelian, the son of defendants K. and Rosa K. Arakelian, were named as trustees. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was damaged in the amount of $79,535.99 by certain false and fraudulent representations as to the quality, adaptability, and value of the Fresno county lands made to him by said K. Arakelian acting for himself and on behalf of his wife, Rosa K. Arakelian, and that "by reason of said damages as aforesaid the sum of $79,535.99 of the purchase price of said Oakland property has not been paid and the whole thereof, to-wit, $79,535.99, is now unpaid, and that the plaintiff claims to have and has a vendor's lien upon said Oakland property for said sum of $79,535.99, and that the plaintiff is entitled to have said deed of trust and note cancelled and the amount thereof credited upon said sum of $79,535.99."

The prayer of plaintiff was that by reason of the fraudulent representations which induced him to enter into the transaction with K. Arakelian, the note and deed of trust executed by him to Rosa K. Arakelian be canceled, and that said sum of $79,535.99 be deemed to be a valid and subsisting lien upon said Oakland property, and that the usual decree of sale be made, and that the proceeds thereof be applied in payment of the amount found to be due plaintiff, and that defendants be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim, or equity of redemption in said premises, and that plaintiff have judgment against K. Arakelian and Rosa K. Arakelian for any deficiency that might remain after applying all of the proceeds of the sale to the satisfaction of said judgment. The trial court's refusal to grant appellant a trial by jury is also made an assignment of prejudicial error.

An expert chemist familiar with the district in which said Fresno county lands are situate caused borings to be made in various parts of said tract and analyzed the soil taken therefrom and pronounced it unfit for any purpose. Others well acquainted with said lands and the district in which they are situate testified that said lands were low and flat, subject to heavy overflows from adjacent sloughs and streams, and by reason of the impervious clay strata which lies at varying depths below the surface, overflow waters are held in vast quantities upon the surface until late in the summer season; that the soil is so strongly impregnated with alkali and magnesia as to make it impossible to grow any kind of fruit trees or vegetables or cereals known to produce crops in that section of the state. The cost of reclamation and the elimination of superabundant hostile elements would be greatly in excess of the revenue which could be derived from it for any known farm or agricultural uses.

Upon the record before us there is absolutely no other conclusion deducible from the evidence but the one that said lands have but a nominal value. The owner, Mr. K. Arakelian, testified that in placing said real property in the hands of his agent, the Laymance Real Estate Company of Oakland, for exchange purposes, he declined to place a value upon the same when requested to do so by Mr. William J. Laymance, a member of said company who personally conducted the transaction. At the trial neither K. Arakelian nor his son, D. Arakelian, aged 28 years and familiar with said lands, nor his wife, Rosa K. Arakelian, who claims to be the exchange owner of the Oakland real property, gave any evidence as to value. William J. Laymance was deceased at the time of trial. The claim made by K. Arakelian that he placed no value upon said lands to his agent is disputed by the appellant. The inherent improbability that K. Arakelian declined to value said property in the circumstances of the situation and the directions he is reported to have given to his agent, Laymance, on this subject pending negotiations, will be considered later.

The Oakland property at the time of the execution of said agreement to exchange property was leased to L. H. Spotts by lease dated November 1, 1919, for a term of five years,

The rentals reserved for the ground floor and basement were, for the first six months, $500 per month; for the second six months, $550 per month; for the third six months, $600 per month; for the fourth six months, $650 per month; for the third year, $750 per month; for the fourth year, $850 per month; for the fifth year, $950 per month, subject to the owner's right of cancellation. The upper floors were on a straight monthly rental basis of $500 per month. Payment of rentals was secured by a cash interest bearing bond in the sum of $2,000. Said real property was held subject to a mortgage of $100,000 in favor of the Oakland Bank of Savings.

Negotiations were first opened and a proposal of exchange was first made by K. Arakelian in writing on June 4, 1921. At that time said building was earning as rentals \$1,150 per month—\$650 for the ground floor and basement and \$500 per month for the other four stories. The rentals under the transferred lease dated November 1, 1919, were to be increased at the rate of \$100 per month for the third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively. The last year's rental, as provided in said lease, aggregated \$17,400 gross per annum—\$1,450 per month—which was better than interest at $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum computed on \$200,000. Rentals derived from real property are an aid in determining value. Bonnarjee v. Pike, 43 Cal. App. 502, 185 P. 479; Sullivan v. Hefling, 66 Cal. App. 478, 226 P. 803; *Atlas Development Co. v. Appellant Proctor had operated in the purchase and sale of business property in the city of Oakland, but was never engaged in the occupation of real estate broker, and it was his rule not to invest in country properties. Mr. Laymance had been in his office many times in an effort to interest him in the purchase of real properties which he had listed for sale and had acted as his broker in the purchase of other properties. Appellant first learned of the Fresno county property early in the year 1921.

William J. Laymance was the active intermediary in putting the deal through. He first brought said Fresno county property to the attention of Mr. Proctor early in 1921 in what seemed to be a casual conversation, in which Laymance stated that he had a definite offer from Arakelian to exchange said Fresno property for the Mrs. A. A. Moore home, which was located on the opposite side of the street to appellant Proctor's residence in Piedmont. Laymance stated to Proctor that the Moore residence was appraised by its owners at $175,000; that in addition to the Fresno county tract, consisting of 1,000 acres, $75,000 was to be paid in cash or secured by a first mortgage on the Moore property. This deal fell through, as did several others in which the Fresno county property was the main factor in the proposition of exchange. Laymance assured Proctor in subsequent conversations in which he was endeavoring to bring about a deal between him and Arakelian, that K. Arakelian was a man of high standing in Fresno county, a successful agriculturist, and director of banks, and was possessed of much property and means and desired to exchange a portion of his Fresno county property for east bay district real property, as he contemplated removing to the city of Oakland or one of its adjacent districts.

K. Arakelian was, in fact, a man of reputed wealth, being a director of the Fidelity Bank of the City of Fresno, and engaged in carrying on an extensive fruit and melon business in Fresno. As stated in his own words, he owned ranches located "all over the county," naming specifically Fresno, Madera, and San Joaquin counties.

That Laymance, prior to bringing the subject to Proctor's attention, had been actively co-operating with K. Arakelian in an effort to exchange said Fresno property for Oakland property, there is no room for doubt. As early as May, 1921, and upon several subsequent occasions, respondent K. Arakelian visited Oakland, and inspected, examined, and informed himself as to the value of Proctor's Oakland property. Proctor was not familiar with Fresno county property and had not and did not see it until some time after the exchange of deeds had passed. Neither had met the other, nor did they have immediate personal contact during the entire transaction. The evidence as to the false and fraudulent representations alleged to have been made by K. Arakelian through his agent Laymance mainly appears in the testimony given by Proctor, which was afterwards stricken from the record upon motion of the respondents. No evidence was accordingly given by any of the Arakelians in refutation of the main charges made against K. Arakelian and Rosa K. Arakelian by the complaint. The latter was not called to the witness chair for any purpose.

K. Arakelian, we doubt not, was eager to dispose of said Fresno county property for east bay property, and, knowing that Laymance was acquainted with and had had some business transactions with Proctor, he relied upon Laymance to deal personally with him and make replies, rather than to do so himself, to the many inquiries as to soil, productivity, location, improvements, and adaptability to present and future uses that are invariably made by prospective purchasers, none of which could have been frankly answered without blighting the prospects of a trade so far as the Fresno county lands were to be considered as a substantial part of the consideration.

On June 4, 1921, said K. Arakelian, without any personal conference with Proctor, caused to be prepared and placed in the latter's hands a proposed agreement for the exchange of said properties. The proposed agreement contained the provision that the Laymance Real Estate Company was authorized to act as Arakelian's agent in negotiating said exchange, and the further provision that the Laymance Real Estate Company might also act as the agent of Proctor, from whom it might also receive a commission. As a part of the consideration of said proposal, Arakelian agreed to give to said Proctor "fifty-five thousand dollars worth of United States Government Liberty Bonds at par value, divided approximately in first, second, third, fourth and fifth issues," and also secure a loan of $25,000 for said Proctor on said Fresno property on or before August 1, 1921, to be secured by Proctor's note and a first lien deed of trust payable two years after date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. The assignment of the lease on the Oakland property was also a condition of the proposed agreement. The subsisting mortgage of $100,000 on said Oakland property, held by the Oakland Bank of Savings, was expressly recognized. Said agreement also made said Oakland property subject to a second lien deed of trust in the sum of $25,000 to F. A. Marshall, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, due and payable on or before November 1, 1921, which said $25,000 loan said Arakelian assumed and agreed to pay. What purpose this last-mentioned provision was meant to serve is not clear, inasmuch as no such loan was ever made and no trust was created thereunder. It seems to have dropped out of the case, and its purpose was not disclosed. Said proposed agreement in its final clause provided that 10 days were allowed Proctor for "seeing land and acceptance" of said contract. Proctor, upon receipt of the above proposed agreement, offered to accept the same provided the following proposed modifications be made: First, that it be understood that the water rights of the Fresno lands had not been conveyed and were still appurtenant to the said lands; second, that said Arakelian, in addition to the proposition therein made, pay to said Proctor the sum of $25,000 in cash at the time of the transfer of deeds. The above offer and counter offer on the part of the parties thereto did not eventuate in the parties agreeing on all the terms as proposed by the respective parties. Negotiations were then resumed between Proctor and K. Arakelian through said Laymance in accordance with the proposition of K. Arakelian that the real estate firm of which Laymance was the active participant should conduct said negotiations, there being no direct communication as found by the court either by writing or otherwise on the subject between K. Arakelian and Proctor. Said agreement as originally proposed, or as sought to be modified, did not receive the signatures of said parties. Negotiations seemed to have terminated for a time. Laymance made several trips to Fresno county in promoting the trade and put forth his best efforts to put Proctor in a frame of mind favorable to the ownership of the Fresno county property. He telephoned several times to Proctor from Fresno and called on him upon numerous occasions in an effort to stimulate his interest in the Fresno property.

On July 21, 1921, Proctor signed a proposed agreement for exchange of properties, doubtless procured by the efforts of Laymance, which in all material respects corresponded with the first proposal except that it omits any reference to the Marshall loan matter. By this contract Proctor proposed to give Arakelian his note for $30,000 payable substantially at the time, in the manner and at the rate of interest provided in the first proposed written agreement. Parts of said contract not material to a decision of the case such as an adjustment of taxes, insurance, furnishing of certificates of title, etc., are omitted. On July 26, 1921, Arakelian proposed the following modification of said last proposal, which was accepted by Proctor: "And it is understood that said Laymance R. E. Co. may also act as agent for the owner of the first piece of property herein described, from whom they may also receive a commission. It being understood that I, said Arakelian am not to pay any commission."

Deeds to the properties proposed to be exchanged and escrow papers were subsequently executed and deposited with escrow holders and delivered in due course to the respective parties entitled to receive the same. The Oakland property was, upon the request of K. Arakelian, conveyed directly by Proctor to Rosa K. Arakelian, wife of K. Arakelian.

The learned trial judge found that it was true that William J. Laymance was the agent of K. Arakelian for the limited period of seven days beginning with the day he presented his proposed agreement of exchange, to wit, June 4, and ending on June 11, the day on which the court held that negotiations terminated. The court further found it to be true that said Arakelian by his proposed offer of exchange dated June 4, 1921, falsely represented that he could secure a loan of $25,000 upon the real property then belonging to him, and that he then and there knew that no disinterested money lender, whether an individual or corporation, would loan in excess of $5,000 on said real property. It found, on the other hand, that no other false representation was made on said June 4, 1921, or on any occasion thereafter during any negotiations for the exchange of said property by the said K. Arakelian either with the intent to induce Proctor to make said exchange of properties or that he did knowingly, wilfully, and designedly or at all make any representation whatever to Proctor as to the value, character, or condition or capabilities or loan value of said property then belonging to him. The concluding finding on the issue of agency was that the second written agreement was initiated by said Proctor and that from July 21, 1921, to July 26, 1921, the date of its acceptance by K. Arakelian, said Laymance acted as the agent of Proctor, and from the last-named day to the final consummation of the transaction Laymance acted as the agent of both of said parties.

[1, 2] The inference that Laymance was Arakelian's agent to dispose of his property by sale or exchange for other property prior to June 4, 1921, independent of Proctor's testimony to the effect that Laymance had over a period of several weeks attempted to induce him to exchange his Oakland property for said Fresno county real property, is materially aided by the evidence of both K. and D. Arakelian and is the only reasonable and logical inference that may be deduced from a consideration of the transaction itself. D. Arakelian, the son of the elder Arakelian, admitted that he had talked over the Mrs. A. A. Moore deal with Laymance. This testimony was in corroboration of Proctor's reference to the negotiations by Laymance of a trade for the Moore property heretofore adverted to, which incident occurred some time prior to Proctor's knowledge of or connection with the Arakelian property exchange. Again, the elder Arakelian, upon examination to determine what interest, if any, his wife had in the property in suit, made it reasonably certain that Arakelian had authorized Laymance to negotiate an exchange of the Fresno lands at a time before Proctor was brought into the transaction. His evidence as to his conversation with his wife as to the terms of the proposed trade cannot be reconciled upon any other reasonable theory. The finding that Laymance was not the agent in the sale or exchange of the Fresno property for Oakland property prior to June 4, 1921, is contrary to the fact as disclosed by the record. While the trial court held that Laymance was not the agent of Arakelian until June 4, 1921, and that he falsely and fraudulently represented the loan value of his property in his written offer, it further held that inasmuch as the offer was not accepted in the precise terms in which it was made and was not executed as presented, any representations affecting the value of said property, however fraudulently made with a view of inducing Proctor to enter into said proposed agreement, would not be competent evidence for the court's consideration in determining whether the final action of Proctor in entering into the exchange was influenced by said false and fraudulent representations made in an effort to induce him to consent to the terms of the first proposed agreement. We think this position untenable. The ultimate object of all of the negotiations looked to the exchange of the real properties in suit which was finally consummated.

Even though there were lulls in the negotiations at times, they were, nevertheless, resumed and finally terminated in the exchange of said properties, which was the ultimate object from the first sought to be accomplished. Where a person resorts to false and fraudulent representations of a material fact to gain an undue advantage over another and thereby induces him to believe that said representations are true, in the absence of a showing that the said false representations were removed, it will be presumed that they operated upon the mind of the person whom it was intended should be deceived to his prejudice thereby.

In the instant case, whatever false representations were intentionally made in the beginning of the negotiations, even though the propositions originally proposed failed, were proper matters to be considered by the court in determining whether the fraudulent representations unduly influenced the action of Proctor. He testified that he believed said false representations and would not have made the transfer if he had not believed the representations made by Arakelian and his agent Laymance were true. We, therefore, are of the view that any false representations made by Arakelian's agent prior to June 4, 1921, with a view of influencing Proctor to his prejudice, would be material evidence in the case.

Plaintiff testified upon the trial, and his testimony is uncontradicted, that in agreeing to the exchange he relied upon representations of Laymance to the effect that the Fresno county land was valued at $75,000 to $100,000, and could be readily sold for $60,000; that it would sustain a bank loan of $25,000, and had been very conservatively appraised as for bank loan purposes by an appraiser for the Bank of Italy, to whom Arakelian had introduced him, at $45,000. It was further represented, Proctor testified, that the property was unimproved land ready for immediate cultivation and development and was suitable for the raising of alfalfa, rice, and various fruit trees; that Arakelian had not improved it because of his many other holdings, and then wished to dispose of it because he was coming to the bay district to live; that the major portion of the tract was high land, but readily irrigable from the Fresno slough, which passed through the property, and that there was little, if any, alkali in the land; that it was salable as a whole or in subdivision. Laymance exhibited to plaintiff pictures of the land, which he stated had been taken by himself and one of the Arakelians, and explained said pictures as supporting his assertions with regard to the land. D. Arakelian was present when said pictures were taken. They exhibited a likely landscape, but could not have afforded Proctor any information as to the character of the soil. It is claimed that they are misleading.

The unrestrained authority that was conferred upon Laymance by K. Arakelian, as to the value that he might place upon the lands of which Arakelian was the owner and its capabilities, is best illustrated by the testimony of Mr. Arakelian given in support of his claim that he refused to place a value upon it to Mr. Laymance, in whose hands he had placed it for sale or exchange:

"Q. [Directing his attention to the value of the Arakelian land.] Did you have any conversation with him [Laymance] about that matter? A. We had a conversation.

"Q. What? A. We had a conversation.

"Q. What was it? A. Well, he asked me what I valued the land at, and I told him I didn't value it at nothing, to go and see it for yourself, find out yourself. I didn't want to put any price on it.

"Q. You placed no value on it? A. No."

Interrogated as to whether he had had any conversation with Laymance as to crops that had been produced on said lands, his answer was, "No." He admitted that Laymance inquired of him as to how much a bank would loan on said property, and his answer was, "I told him I didn't know, to go and find out for yourself." It would seem most strange and fall far without the usual that a large landowner and a man of affairs offering a portion of his property for sale would refuse to place any value thereon or to give his agent, who is totally unacquainted with his real property, any information as to its capabilities to produce crops or its adaptability for farming or commercial purposes. It would seem that such replies as above shown to have been made to pertinent questions as to value would by inference at least encourage the agent to go to unwarranted lengths in his representations as to values and productiveness of soil.

The theory of the respondents and the court seemed to be that the misrepresentations testified to by Proctor were made before June 4, 1921, and prior to the establishment of agency. The fact that the first agreement offered by Arakelian expressly acknowledged Laymance as his agent is not evidence that he was not his agent prior to said day. The facts and circumstances impel a contrary inference.

The following testimony of Mr. Arakelian supports what is above stated:

"Q. When was the first conversation that you had with Rosa K. Arakelian regarding this deal with Mr. Proctor? A. I don't remember the date.

"Q. Was it previous to the time of the offer of June 4th? A. I don't remember as to that, probably was. * * *

"Q. Any conversation you had with your wife before this deal with Mr. Proctor? A.

Well, I told her that there was a deal over here to trade the Oakland property for the thousand acres I had."

While the time is not as definitely fixed as it should have been and perhaps could have been fixed, we are of the view that reading the case in its entirety there are substantial grounds supporting appellant's contention to the effect that Laymance had the Arakelian real property listed for sale or exchange some weeks before June 4, 1921, and, this being so, the testimony bearing on representations made during this period of agency was admissible and should not have been stricken out.

[3] The findings of the trial court would indicate an attempt to treat the negotiations which began with Proctor's offer of July 21 as independent of previous dealings. We regard this division as artificial, as the inquiry here is whether the intent to commit a fraud was in the mind of the person charged. This issue may be determined by plans previously laid, if any, and all acts leading to its consummation may be shown in evidence. It is true that following the suggestion made by Arakelian in his first offer of exchange Proctor in his subsequent offer provided that Laymance might act as the agent of Arakelian and said offer was accepted with a few modifications. But even if this be so, that would not wipe from the mind of Proctor the false impressions previously made by Laymance, nor would it extend a privilege to Laymance to repeat them or immune Arakelian from liability for the acts of Laymance if it be shown that he and Arakelian were acting in concert to defraud Proctor. An agent may become unfaithful to his trust, and where he does both the agent and a third party with whom a conspiracy has been formed to defraud another may be called to account in damages. Such cases are made out by the facts and circumstances presented.

[4] The great discrepancy of values was enough to put Arakelian on notice that the transaction was grossly unfair if it could be said that he did not have actual knowledge of the misrepresentations that were being made by Laymance. The large earning ability of the Proctor business building situate in the heart of the Oakland business district has already been noticed. Plaintiff produced apparently conservative real estate dealers who were familiar with land values in Oakland who placed the value as high as $200,000 or $201,000. The witnesses called by the defense valued said business building from $140,000 to $150,000. No finding was made as to either Arakelian's or Proctor's respective properties. If the lowest appraisal placed upon Proctor's real property by defendants' witnesses be taken as the basis of valuation, his loss in the transaction would exceed $20,000, and if the values fixed by Proctor's witnesses be the basis of valuation, his loss would approximate $80,000. Any conservative view of the situation that may be taken will show that Proctor's loss is startling, considered with reference to the transaction. This gross inequality between the value of the property Arakelian was to transfer in the trade, and the value of the property he was to receive and which he had inspected was so great that it must have suggested to him that the offer would not have been made except for imposition upon plaintiff by Laymance, whom Arakelian knew had been actively engaged in promoting the exchange, and reliance upon the implication in Arakelian's offer of June 4 that the property was of a value to sustain a loan of $25,000. In such a case Arakelian was put upon inquiry and is charged with such notice of the imposition as he would have obtained had he made inquiry. The action is to be determined as if Arakelian had actual notice of the imposition.

[5] Nor are we of the view that Proctor was precluded from recovery because he accepted as true the positive assertions of Laymance and Arakelian without instituting an independent investigation to determine the value of the Fresno county land. Proctor operated on a large scale in buying and selling city property on his own account and in financing, but he had no personal knowledge of farm lands in Fresno county. Arakelian was represented to him to be and was in fact a bank director and successful agriculturist in Fresno county. He was the owner of large agricultural holdings in Fresno, Madera, and San Joaquin counties. Proctor testified that Laymance had acted as his agent in the purchase of property upon eight or ten occasions, including the purchase of the Oakland property herein involved, and that he had always found him reliable and had confidence in his integrity. He further testified that the press of a large New York business deal he then had under way kept him from making the trip to Fresno county, and but for the representations of Laymance and Arakelian, upon whom he relied, he would have investigated its value and character. Under such circumstances Arakelian cannot avoid liability by asserting that Proctor need not have relied on the representations made. Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 674, 58 P. 271; Harris v. Miller, 196 Cal. 8, 235 P. 981; Faull v. Johnson (Cal. App.) 270 P. 993; French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 217 P. 515; Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 P. 851.

[6] It is the claim of appellant that Arakelian knew, as found by the court, that no bank or disinterested individual would loan the sum of $25,000 on his said property, and before he agreed to secure such a loan he made special investigation as to Proctor's financial standing, and finding it to be sound made the loan, not with the expectation of realizing that amount from a sale of said property, but by compelling its payment by Proctor. The court's finding that no bank or disinterested individual would loan $25,000 on said property is supported by the evidence.

The evidence offered to show that the bonds which were passed in the deal were the separate property of the wife does not satisfactorily establish that claim. It does no more than show them to have been purchased by community property and held in the exclusive possession of the husband. His conduct both before and subsequent to the transaction tends to show that the bonds were held under his control and ownership as other common property was handled by him.

Respondents contend that the appellant was guilty of laches and the court found with them on that issue. The action, which was not one for rescission, but for an affirmation of the transaction and the foreclosure of a lien which arose in a transaction involving fraud, was brought within the statutory period provided by law. The appellant did not make written complaint at once, but did protest the transaction in writing in February, 1923, and attempted to bring about a settlement. The installments of interest paid by him, amounting to $3,150, were paid with a notation that he did not thereby waive any rights in the premises.

[7-10] We are of the view that the appellant was not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right. The complaint presents a plain case for the foreclosure of a vendor's lien. Section 3046, Civ. Code. The enforcement of such liens is a well-recognized function of courts of equity. Clark v. Brown, 141 Cal. 93, 74 P. 548; Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 138 Cal. 257, 71 P. 334. It follows that a jury may not be demanded of right in actions to foreclose liens. Curnow v. Happy Valley Blue Gravel, etc., Co., 68 Cal. 262, 9 P. 149; Walker v. Sedgwick, 5 Cal. 192; Downing v. Le Du, 82 Cal. 471, 23 P. 202; Vance v. Gilbert, 178 Cal. 574, 174 P. 42; Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 12 Cal. App. 572, 108 P. 42; Case v. Copren Bros., 45 Cal. App. 159, 187 P. 772. No distinction in the matter of a jury trial is to be made between a vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase price and other liens. Not only is the action for the foreclosure of a vendor's lien an equitable proceeding, but the right to the lien is a creature of equity, now recognized by statute. Section 3046, Civ. Code; Woolley v. Wickerd, 97 Cal. 70, 31 P. 733; Selna v. Selna, 125 Cal. 357, 58 P. 16, 73 Am. St. Rep. 47; Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171; Royal Cons. Mining Co. v. Royal Cons. Mines, 157 Cal. 737, 110 P. 123, 137 Am. St. Rep. 165. Although an action for relief which can be afforded only by a court of equity may involve questions of fraud and deceit such as are cognizable in a court of law, plaintiff is not entitled to a jury trial on such issues when they arise in an equitable proceeding. Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 64 P. 1091.

An action for the cancellation of a note or other instrument on the ground of fraud in its procurement is likewise equitable. Ballou v. Avery, 175 Cal. 641, 166 P. 1003; Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 64 P. 1091; Rocha v. Rocha, 197 Cal. 396, 240 P. 1010; Pomeroy v. Collins, 198 Cal. 46, 243 P. 657; Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 83, 76 P. 964.

We see no reason on principle why a vendor under facts which are sufficient to establish fraud should not be entitled to a lien in a transaction involving the exchange of real property.

It is not our intention in our discussion of the case as presented to prejudice any defense that respondents may make in case a retrial is had. We have stated the case as presented by the record before us and have drawn the conclusion therefrom which we feel must inevitably follow.

Permission is granted the plaintiff to amend his complaint, if so advised, as to the nature of the relief he may seek.

Judgment reversed.

KNOX v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR RIVERSIDE COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6668.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 27, 1929.

1. Judgment $\Rightarrow$ 153(2)—Trial court, after more than six months from taking of default, is without jurisdiction to vacate default or ensuing judgment.

Where more than six months have elapsed after a default has been regularly taken, trial court is without jurisdiction either to vacate such default or ensuing judgment.

2. Judgment $\Rightarrow$ 176—Plaintiff by amending complaint and setting cause for trial after vacation of default and judgment held not estopped to question trial court's jurisdiction.

Where plaintiff, after obtaining a default and judgment, amended complaint and caused action to be set for trial after order vacating default and judgment, plaintiff was not estopped to raise question of jurisdiction of trial court to proceed thereafter, since plaintiff had right to protect interests in any and every legal matter, and in order that estoppel may operate it is at least essential that person claiming benefits should have been misled to his injury by conduct of opposing party.

3. Prohibition $\Rightarrow$ 3(2)—On application for prohibition where identical question which could be presented on appeal was fully presented and considered, prohibition was granted, notwithstanding remedy by appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1103).

Where, on application for writ of prohibition to prevent trial of certain action pending in superior court in which default and judgment were vacated more than six months after default, precluding jurisdiction in superior court to vacate such default or ensuing judgment, and identical question which would be presented on appeal had been fully presented and considered, prohibition was granted notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1103, providing prohibition may be issued in all cases where there is not plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in ordinary course of law.

Application for writ of prohibition by E. W. Knox, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Riverside County, Hon. Oakley K. Morton and another, Judges thereof, to prevent trial of a certain action pending therein. Writ granted.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Winterer, Combs & Ritchie, and L. S. B. Ritchie, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. So far as this proceeding is concerned, the essential facts are that in an action instituted by petitioner Knox in the superior court of the county of Riverside (No. 17914 of the files of said court) against one Wyman and Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, each of said defendants failed to answer the complaint therein, and the default of each of them was regularly taken and judgment entered. About five months later, under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, as trustee, and one Aamoth, individually (the latter of whom claiming as assignee of the rights of defendant Wyman in the subject-matter of the action), served the plaintiff in said action with a notice that on a specified date, which was more than six months after the default in the action had been taken, they would move the trial court to vacate the default and the judgment entered in the action. On stipulation of the parties, several continuances of the hearing of the motion were ordered by the trial court; but the motion was finally granted. Thereupon, as against Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, as trustee, and Aamoth, individually, the plaintiff filed an amended complaint in the action, wherein, in addition to the original cause of action, he set up a second count. Later, plaintiff moved the trial court to vacate its former order by which the default of the original defendants was vacated, which motion was by the court denied. The substituted defendants then answered the amended complaint and at the same time set up facts from which they demanded affirmative relief. On motion of the plaintiff the cause was then set for trial. Thereafter the plaintiff attempted to file with the clerk of the court a dismissal of the action so far as the amended complaint differed from the original complaint as to parties and subject-matter. The clerk refused to file said dismissal, but, on request of the plaintiff, permitted it to remain in the office of the clerk. In view of such facts, petitioner here seeks a peremptory writ of prohibition in the action pending in the lower court by which said court shall be restrained from proceeding to a trial thereof, or from taking or permitting further or other proceedings therein.

[1] In the case of Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. King L. & I. Co., 162 Cal. 44, 120 P. 1066, it is held that where more than six months have elapsed after a default has been regularly taken the trial court is without jurisdiction either to vacate such default or the ensuing judgment. To the same effect are Wheelock v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 601, 227 P. 931, and Colthurst v. Harris (Cal. App.) 275 P. 868, where other authorities are cited.

[2] Respondents suggest that by the conduct of the plaintiff in the action in the lower court after the order by which default and judgment was vacated, whereby he amended his complaint and caused the action to be set for trial, he is estopped from now raising the question of jurisdiction of the trial court to proceed in the matter. No authorities sustaining such position are cited by respondents; nor has this court been able to discover a principle of equity, or, more particularly, a principle governing the doctrine of estoppel, by which the plaintiff may be deprived of the remedy afforded him by law. It is manifest that whatever may be the legal situation which arose from the order of the trial court in vacating the default and the judgment in the action, plaintiff had the right to protect his interests in any and every legal manner prescribed by the statutes and the practice of the courts. Nor is it apparent in what manner any legal injury has been suffered by the respondents, or the defendants in the action, or either of them, by reason of the aforesaid acts of plaintiff of which complaint is made. In order that the doctrine of estoppel may operate, it is at least essential that the person claiming the benefits must have been misled to his detriment by the conduct of the opposing party.

[3] Respondents also urge that because the plaintiff has the right of appeal from any judgment which may be rendered against him in the action, by the terms of section 1103 of the Code of Civil Procedure he is not entitled to a writ of prohibition in the premises. Although, strictly speaking, such position may be correct, since the identical question which would be presented on appeal has been fully presented to and considered by this court in this proceeding in the interests of efficiency and the saving of expense and inconvenience to the litigants, it may as well be answered in this proceeding as later on appeal. As was said by the Supreme Court in the case of Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 696, 195 P. 390, 393, where a similar situation was present: " * * * While the existence of the right of appeal at that time might have been a sufficient reason for that court to have then refused to entertain the petition (Glougie v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. 675, 147 P. 972), yet in view of the fact that the superior court was then and ever since has been without power or jurisdiction to proceed further in the action, as we have shown, but nevertheless proposes to do so, and that further proceedings of any kind, except to again dismiss the action, would be void, we are disposed to grant the writ, rather than put the parties to further vexation and useless expense by further attempts to prosecute it. The question is largely one of discretion, and we deem it the better policy to terminate the proceedings forthwith." See, also, Col County v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 604, 621, 622, 239 P. 926.

It is ordered that the respondents and each of them be and they are restrained and prohibited from any and all further proceedings in the action to which reference has been had herein.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by Edward G. Rock against Peter Orlando and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Owen D. Richardson and O. H. Speciale, both of San Jose, for appellants.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants Peter Orlando, Joseph Orlando, and Peter Orlando, Jr., from a judgment entered against them upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $3,500.

The facts, as testified to by respondent and his witnesses, are briefly these: On Sunday afternoon, May 15, 1927, at about the hour of 7 p. m., respondent Edward G. Rock and his wife were traveling from Saratoga, in Santa Clara county, to San Francisco, in a Franklin automobile owned and driven by Louis Houle. When they reached a point on the state highway about halfway between the towns of Sunnyvale and Cupertino, the driver stopped on the right-hand side of the highway, and respondent stepped out on the left side of the car, and after looking for approaching cars, proceeded toward the opposite side of the highway, where a fruit stand was located. He continued across the highway until he cleared the paved portion of the road and was about 5 feet off of the paved portion of the highway when he was suddenly struck by a Ford truck coming south on the highway at a high and dangerous rate of speed and off the paved portion of the road, driven by appellant Joseph Orlando. As a result of this collision, respondent suffered a fractured right leg and other injuries and bruises.

The appellants charge respondent with contributory negligence in running suddenly across the highway in front of the Ford truck, making it impossible for the driver to stop the truck in time to avoid the accident.

Appellants' contention is supported by the testimony of Joseph Orlando, the driver of the Ford truck, and Peter Ceflu, who was riding on the truck at the time of the accident, and also by the testimony of one or two other witnesses who were near the scene of the accident.

[1, 2] Therefore, upon the vital question of who was guilty of negligence, the evidence is decidedly conflicting. The jury undoubtedly accepted the testimony of respondent and his witnesses as being a correct statement of the facts and circumstances of the accident, and their evidence amply supports the implied finding of the jury that the accident was caused solely by the negligence of Joseph Orlando, the driver of the Ford truck. The finding of the jury upon conflicting evidence is conclusive, and all reasonable inferences are to be indulged in support thereof. The authorities supporting this well-established rule are legion and need not be here cited.

[3] It is first contended by appellants: "That there is nothing in the evidence to show that Joseph Orlando, the driver of the Ford truck, was the agent, employee, or in any manner, driving the automobile with the permission, authority or knowledge of the owner, Peter Orlando, Jr."

This contention is ignored entirely by respondent in his brief. We think, however, it must be sustained. The record is entirely barren of any evidence that would warrant the jury in finding that the negligence of Joseph Orlando, the driver of the Ford truck, was imputed to Peter Orlando, Jr., the owner thereof, who was not present at the time. The only evidence that we are able to discover in the record accounting for the fact that Peter Orlando, Jr.'s truck was in the possession of his brother, Joseph Orlando, at the time of the accident, was that given by Joseph Orlando himself. He testified in part as follows:

"Q. At that time (at the time of the accident) where were you going? A. I was going to see a friend of mine in Cupertino.

"Q. Were you on any business of anybody's? A. Not exactly.

"Q. Well, exactly, or particularly or any other way, were you on any other business except going to see a friend? A. I was going to see a friend of mine, used to work for him, thought I would go up and see him was all.

"Q. Did anybody give you permission to use that car that day? A. No.

"Q. Where was the car when you took it? A. It was home.

"Q. Was Peter Orlando, Jr., there? A. No, nobody was home but myself. I had just come in from San Juan baseball game. I took the car with my nephew.

"Q. Did you run the Ford to San Juan that day? A. No, the Ford was home. I had gone up with a neighbor of mine."

Therefore it is clear from the evidence that at the time of the accident Joseph Orlando was engaged in a mission wholly his own, and that his use of the Ford truck was without the knowledge or consent of the owner.

Clearly under such circumstances, Peter Orlando, Jr., the owner of the truck, is not liable for the negligence of the driver, Joseph Orlando. Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., 39 Cal. App. 738, 741, 179 P. 697; Maupin v. Solomon, 41 Cal. App. 323, 183 P. 198; Martinelli v. Bond, 42 Cal. App. 209, 212, 183 P. 461; Berry on Automobiles (2d Ed.) §§ 601, 618; Mullia v. Ye Planry Bldg. Co., 32 Cal. App. 6, 161 P. 1008; Mauchle v. Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., 37 Cal. App. 715, 174 P. 400; Gousse v. Lowe, 41 Cal. App. 715, 183 P. 295.

It might be contended by respondent that when Peter Orlando, Jr., admitted in his answer the ownership of the truck, coupled with proof that it was in the possession of Joseph Orlando at the time of the accident, an inference could be drawn by the jury that the driver was acting as the agent or employee of the owner, and within the scope of his employment, and notwithstanding the clear and positive evidence that Joseph Orlando was not so acting. Still a conflict in the evidence was created and the owner's liability was a question of fact for the jury. Such contention would be entirely untenable.

The reasonable inference that might be drawn from respondent's prima facie case against Peter Orlando, Jr., is wholly dispelled when the uncontradicted evidence of Joseph Orlando was introduced, showing that his possession of the truck at the time of the accident was without the knowledge or consent of the owner.

Or, in other words, after the evidence of Joseph Orlando came before the jury and was not contradicted, then there was no conflict of evidence on this point, and the jury could not lawfully draw the inference that Joseph Orlando was the agent or in the employ of the owner of the truck at the time of the accident. Maupin v. Solomon, supra; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., supra; Martinelli v. Bond, supra; Everett v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 45 Cal. App. 332, 339, 187 P. 996; Fahey v. Madden, 56 Cal. App. 593, 598, 206 P. 128; Musachia v. Jones, 65 Cal. App. 283, 298, 223 P. 1006; Dowd v. Atlas Taxicab, etc., Co., 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870; Mar Shee v. Maryland Assur. Corp., 190 Cal. 1, 210 P. 269; Osborne v. Baughman, 85 Cal. App. 224, 227, 259 P. 70.

[4] Appellants also contend that the court erred in giving the jury an instruction on contributory negligence, to the effect that if respondent was guilty of any negligence in crossing the highway, still such negligence on the part of respondent would not bar his recovery against appellants unless such negligence on the part of respondent proximately occasioned or contributed to the injuries he received. This instruction contained a correct statement of the law. Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066. We have carefully examined all the instructions given, and, when taken as a whole, they fully and correctly state the law upon all the issues involved in the case.

[5] Peter Orlando, Sr., is made a defendant for the reason that he signed his son's (Joseph Orlando's) application for a driver's license. Therefore the negligence of Joseph Orlando, the driver of the truck, was imputed to his father. Section 62, subd. b, California Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517).

It follows from what has been said that the judgment against Peter Orlando, Sr., and Joseph Orlando should be affirmed, and the judgment against Peter Orlando, Jr., should be reversed; Peter Orlando, Jr., to recover his costs. And it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

PEOPLE v. HANNA. (Cr. 1539.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 5, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨620(1)—Order consolidating for trial two charges of robbery under two informations held proper (Pen. Code, § 954).

Where accused was charged in two informations with having committed robbery on two different occasions, charges were properly consolidated for trial under Pen. Code, § 954, authorizing court to order informations consolidated.

2. Criminal law ⇨622(2)—Order directing separate trials of two defendants jointly charged in one information with robbery held proper (Pen. Code, § 1098).

Where defendants in one information were jointly charged with having committed robbery, order directing separate trials of two defendants was proper under Pen. Code, § 1098, authorizing separate trials on demand of any defendant or in discretion of court.

3. Indictment and Information ⇨15(1)—Failure to order a new information filed eliminating name of defendant pleading guilty to information jointly charging defendants with robbery held not error.

Where defendants were jointly charged in one information with having committed robbery and one defendant pleaded guilty to charge against him, it was not error to try case without ordering a new information filed eliminating name of defendant pleading guilty, especially where other defendant did not request court to make such order.

4. Witnesses ⇨393(6)—On cross-examination of prosecuting witness in robbery prosecution, ruling requiring portions of transcript of examination in police court to be taken up one at a time held proper.

In prosecution for robbery where defendant's counsel, at time prosecuting witness was under cross-examination, asked that whole examination in police court be considered read into record, and also asked witness to read entire transcript, ruling upon objection that portions of transcript should be taken up one at a time held proper.

5. Criminal law ⇨633(1)—Refusal to hear motion after close of evidence and arguments to jury before instructions in robbery prosecution held not denial of constitutional trial.

Refusal to hear motion, nature of which was not disclosed, after evidence in robbery prosecution was closed and arguments to jury were concluded and court was about to instruct jury, where at conclusion of instructions nothing further was said by either party or court about making motion, held not to deny constitutional trial, since it was not an entire refusal to hear motion, but a refusal to hear it at a particular time, and order of trial court was discretionary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Boyd Hanna was convicted of robbery in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James Davis, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of two robberies in the first degree and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] No point is made as to the sufficiency of the testimony. The points raised relate to procedure. Appellant and William Titlow in one information were jointly charged with having committed robbery on the night of December 24, 1928, and under another information they were jointly charged with having committed another robbery on the night of December 29, 1928. Defendant Titlow pleaded guilty to one of the two charges against him. At a hearing on February 20, 1929, the public defender appearing for and representing appellant, Hanna, the court granted the motion of the people without objection of the appellant that the two defendants be tried separately and that the two charges against appellant Hanna be tried together. These orders appear in the clerk's transcript as well as in the reporter's transcript. After a number of continuances the case finally came on for trial. Appellant was then represented by attorney Ewell. The order consolidating the trial of the two charges against appellant was properly made under the authority of Penal Code, § 954, and the order directing separate trials of the two defendants was properly made under Penal Code, § 1098.

[3] Appellant claims that the court should have ordered a new information filed eliminating the name of defendant Titlow. No authority is referred to in support of this contention, and no part of the record which has been called to our attention shows that appellant requested the court to make such an order.

[4] While the prosecuting witness was under cross-examination, appellant's counsel asked that the whole examination in the police court be considered read into the record and also asked the witness to read the entire transcript. Upon objection made, the court ruled that portions of the transcript should be taken up one at a time. The ruling was correct under the authority of People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 175, 52 P. 307.

[5] After the evidence at the trial was closed and the arguments to the jury were concluded, the cause was continued until the next day. When the court was about to instruct the jury, appellant's counsel, Mr. Ewell, stated that he wished to make a motion. Objection was made upon the ground that the case had been finished, that the court was about to instruct the jury, and that any motions should be made afterwards. The court then refused to hear the motion and proceeded to instruct the jury. At the conclusion of the reading of the instructions nothing further was said or done by either party or the court about making the motion. It does not appear in the record nor in the briefs what motion appellant's counsel desired to make. Several different supposed or possible motions which might have been made have been suggested, but none of them are of such a character that they could not have been made after as well as before the reading of the instructions. The refusal of the court to hear the motion after submission of the cause and before the instructions did not amount to a denial of a constitutional trial. It was not an entire refusal to hear a motion, but a refusal to hear it at a particular time. The order of the trial in this respect was in the control of the court's discretion. Under the circumstances narrated, appellant's counsel should have offered whatever motion he may have had in mind after the instructions were concluded.

Other points on appeal are mentioned but are unsupported by argument or citation of authority and are not well taken.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

STEELE v. MARLBOROUGH HALL CORPORATION. (Civ. 6825.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 5, 1929.

1. Replevin ⇨46—Mortgagee gaining possession of mortgaged property by replevin cannot sell property pending action (Code Civ. Proc. § 509).

Mortgagee gaining possession of mortgaged property by replevin cannot sell property pending action and make it impossible for defendant mortgagor to gain possession in case his rights shall be adjudged superior, as replevin, under Code Civ. Proc. § 509, by which plaintiff or defendant may gain possession before final judgment, is auxiliary proceeding and does not give party claiming full right of possession.

2. Injunction ⇨39—Preliminary injunction restraining mortgagee from selling replevined property was properly granted, where mortgagor had no adequate legal remedy (Civ. Code, §§ 3379, 3380; Code Civ. Proc. § 509 et seq., and § 526, subd. 3).

Where mortgagee gained possession of mortgaged property by replevin as against storage company, mortgagor not having been made a party, and mortgagee threatened to sell property, mortgagor had no adequate remedy at law, as Civ. Code, §§ 3379, 3380, and Code Civ. Proc. § 509 et seq., recognize and protect right of possession of specific personal property, and that right to damages is not full and adequate remedy for deprivation of personal property, and preliminary injunction was properly granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subd. 3.

3. Appeal and error ⇨863—Merits of original foreclosure action could not be determined on appeal from preliminary injunction enjoining lessor from selling lessee's personal property mortgaged as security for rent.

Right of lessees to set off breach of lease by lessor against lessor's claim for rent unpaid, and question of lessee's waiver of lessor's breach by remaining in possession, went to merits of original foreclosure action, and could not be determined on appeal from preliminary injunction enjoining lessor from selling lessee's personal property under mortgage given to secure payment of rent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Della Steele against the Marlborough Hall Corporation. From an order granting preliminary injunction enjoining sale under chattel mortgage, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from a preliminary injunction enjoining defendant and appellant from selling the furniture and furnishings of the Marlborough Hall Apartments under the terms of a chattel mortgage executed to secure the performance of the terms of a lease, particularly the payment of the rent reserved.

Appellant's predecessors in 1920 leased the said apartments to respondent for the term of ten years. The lessee at that time executed to the lessors a chattel mortgage upon the furnishings and furniture contained in the apartment house as security for the performance by the lessee of the terms and provisions of the lease. In September, 1927, appellant brought an action against the respondent for breach of the lease, alleging nonpayment of rent and damage to the apartment house and seeking the foreclosure by court of the said chattel mortgage. The respondent answered, denying that rent was due and unpaid, and filed a cross-complaint alleging breaches of the lease upon the part of the appellant in failing to keep the building and its elevators in repair and asking for damages by reason of such alleged breaches. This action had not been tried at the time of the submission of this appeal. In December, 1927, appellant served upon respondent a three-day notice to quit or pay rent. Respondent vacated and commenced to remove the furnishings and furniture covered by the chattel mortgage. Appellant then applied to the court in said foreclosure action for a restraining order against the removal of the chattels. Both parties were represented at the hearing of this application. A restraining order was issued against the removal of the chattels then still remaining in the apartment house, and an order was issued for respondent to show cause why a mandatory preliminary injunction should not issue requiring respondent to replace the chattels already removed. Upon the hearing of this order to show cause, the requested mandatory preliminary injunction was denied. Appellant states that the court in denying this injunction took the view strongly urged by respondent upon the trial court that appellant had an adequate remedy at law by instituting a replevin action under the terms of the chattel mortgage. Appellant then commenced an action in replevin for the recovery of the chattels against the Bekins Van & Storage Company, in whose warehouse respondent had stored the furniture and furnishings removed from the apartments. Appellant filed a $30,000 bond in claim and delivery proceedings in that action. Respondent, who had not been made a party defendant in that action, filed a third party claim with the sheriff claiming to be the owner of and entitled to the possession of the property and alleging it to be of the value of $35,000. Appellant gave the sheriff an indemnity bond in the sum of $70,000 against this third party claim. Appellant thereupon gave notice that it would sell the chattels under the terms of the chattel mortgage which provided that "if the mortgagor fails to make any payment as provided in said lease, then the mortgagees may take possession of said property, using all necessary force so to do, and may immediately arrange to sell it. * * *". Thereupon the respondent filed the present action against appellant alleging the said facts, pleadings, and proceedings, alleging that no rent was "due or owing" respondent, and praying to be adjudged the owner of and entitled to the possession of the chattels and for a preliminary injunction enjoining the sale of the chattels by appellant. This preliminary injunction, after notice and hearing, was granted respondent upon giving a bond in the sum of $1,000. From the order granting the same the present appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant's claims are: First, that it has the legal right under the terms of the mortgage to take possession of and sell the chattels for breach of conditions of the lease, that possession was essential to such sale, that replevin was the correct method of obtaining such possession, that, having obtained possession by claim and delivery proceedings and bond, it had full and complete legal possession, and that a replevin plaintiff in possession has the right to sell even before the final judgment in the action; second, that in weighing the equities and in exercising its discretion, the court should have denied the preliminary injunction, because respondent is in arrears in rent, because she would not suffer irreparable injury by the proposed sale by appellant, being protected by the large bond given the sheriff to indemnify him against her third party claim, and because she had an adequate remedy at law by instituting a new replevin action, she not having been a party to the appellant's replevin action against the storage company.

The respondent's contentions are: First, that the appellant had no right to sell the chattels because they were in custodia legis while held by appellant under claim and delivery proceedings pending the final judgment in the replevin action; second, that the court properly granted the preliminary injunction to preserve the property pending the determination of the issues joined in the foreclosure action, because otherwise a judgment for defendant would be unavailing, for the property would have passed into the hands of numerous purchasers at the sale.

[1] An action in replevin or in claim and delivery in this state is merely an action for the recovery of the possession of personal property. Code Civ. Proc., § 509. The proceedings allowed by section 509 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which either the plaintiff or defendant may gain or keep possession before the final judgment in the action, are auxiliary proceedings. The possession obtained by the auxiliary proceedings of bond and claim and delivery is a temporary possession and does not operate to give the one so gaining possession the full right of possession like a final judgment in the action. A replevin plaintiff so gaining possession must keep the property so that it may be returned to the defendant in case the final judgment in the action awards it to the defendant. Such plaintiff, therefore, cannot sell the property pending the action and thus make it impossible for the defendant to regain possession in case he shall be adjudged to have the legal right of possession against the plaintiff. To hold otherwise would result in stripping an action for the recovery of possession of personal property of its distinctive character and make of it an action for conversion. To adopt appellant's view would mean that the defendant, who is by the Code given the last opportunity to bond and retain possession, could always force the plaintiff in the action to accept the value of the property instead of the property itself, which in a sense would be to force him to sell.

It has not been directly decided in California that such a replevin plaintiff may not divest himself of such possession by sale, but this result logically follows from those decisions which, in treating of the right to levy upon such property, hold that property thus possessed by a replevin plaintiff is in the custody of the law, that such possession is temporary, and that such plaintiff does not have the right to compel the defendant to accept the money value instead of the specific personal property. These cases are: Hunt v. Robinson, 11 Cal. 262; Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 P. 851; Kneebone v. Kneebone, 83 Cal. 648, 23 P. 1031; Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 190, 62 P. 481; Riverside Portland Cement Co. v. Taft, 192 Cal. 643, 221 P. 357; Hawi Mill, etc., Co., Ltd., v. Leland, 56 Cal. App. 224, 205 P. 485; Bisconer v. Billing, 71 Cal. App. 779, 236 P. 329. There is some diversity in the decisions of other states upon the direct question of whether such a replevin plaintiff may sell and divest himself of possession pending the action, but the weight of authority is opposed to such right. Wells on Replevin, § 476; also, sections 470 and 474 to 480, inclusive; Cobbey on Replevin, §§ 702-706, 712-718, 720, and 722. In Union National Bank v. Moline, Milburn & Stoddard, 7 N. D. 201, 73 N. W. 532, the early cases on the point are compared, and it is stated that the weight of authority is that such plaintiffs may not sell pending the action. Cases directly in point are: Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 63 S. W. 409, 85 Am. St. Rep. 503, overruling Donohoe v. McAleer, 37 Mo. 312, relied upon by appellant herein; Scott v. Standridge, 117 Okl. 111, 245 P. 591; Federal National Bank v. McDonald, 129 Okl. 75, 263 P. 105; Mannausau v. Wallace, 87 Mich. 543, 49 N. W. 1082; O'Brien v. Curry & Whyte, 111 Minn. 533, 127 N. W. 411, 137 Am. St. Rep. 563; Republic State Co. v. Brown, 158 Minn. 396, 197 N. W. 840, but holding otherwise where defendant merely claimed possession as security only, Grattan v. Wilson, 82 Colo. 239, 259 P. 6. The Pennsylvania and Massachusetts cases cited by appellant have been later distinguished. Perishable property and merchandise especially intended for sale have sometimes been referred to as an exception, but we are not here concerned with such property.

[2] Did respondent have an adequate remedy at law? As a third party claimant she could have sued the sheriff for damages for conversion, he being protected by an indemnity bond, but Civil Code, §§ 3379 and 3380, as well as Code of Civil Procedure, § 509 et seq., recognize and protect the right of possession of specific personal property. These sections recognize that the right to recover damages is not a full and adequate remedy for deprivation of personal property. The respondent was not made a party defendant in the replevin suit brought by appellant and could not reclaim possession of the property under Code of Civil Procedure, § 514, since the privilege of that section is given only to the defendant. Appellant does not claim that the statutory right given to a defendant to reclaim by bond would extend to a third party intervening in the action. Merely intervening would not stop the proposed sale by the replevin plaintiff. Appellant contends that respondent could have commenced a new and independent action in replevin against the appellant, but that would be in the nature of a cross-replevin, which has generally been disallowed. Cobbey on Replevin, §§ 708, 1225, and 1226; Wells on Replevin, §§ 257, 258. Replevin with claim and delivery proceedings by a third party against property already seized by the court in a prior replevin action would have little more in its favor than a levy in execution or attachment, which has been disallowed by the California authorities above cited herein. Such an action with claim and delivery proceedings, even if allowed, would be unavailing, since appellant herein, as defendant in such action, could reclaim the property upon a new forthcoming bond and, its possession remaining thus undisturbed, the proposed sale under the chattel mortgage would still threaten. It appears, therefore, that respondent had no adequate remedy at law with which to stop the proposed sale pending the determination of the issues tendered in the original foreclosure action commenced by the appellant.

[3] In that action the defendant, respondent

ent herein, denied that the rent was unpaid and also sought damages for breach of covenant of the lease by the plaintiff therein. Respondent claims that if this damage is allowed, it will offset as a counterclaim any rent unpaid because arising out of the same contract. While appellant claims that the lessee's covenant to pay rent secured by the chattel mortgage is a covenant which is independent of the lessor's covenant to keep in repair, nevertheless a proper counterclaim, if sufficient in amount, would result in no rent being due. Damages for breach of covenant may be offset in an action for rent (McAlester v. Landers, 70 Cal. 79, 11 P. 505), although it may not be done in an action of unlawful detainer (Arnold v. Krigbaum, 169 Cal. 143, 146 P. 423, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 370). The argument upon this point, however, as well as upon the question of whether the tenant waived the landlord's breach by remaining in possession, goes to the merits of the original foreclosure action which are carried into the merits of the injunction action. The ultimate merit of these actions cannot be determined upon this appeal from the preliminary injunction.

The statutory authority for the preliminary injunction appealed from is to be found in Code of Civil Procedure, § 526, subdivision 3, which allows an injunction to prevent a party to an action from doing "some act in violation of the rights of another party to the action respecting the subject of the action, and tending to render the judgment ineffectual."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

COOKE v. DARNELL et al. (Civ. 6768.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 4, 1929.

1. Limitation of actions ☞192(3)—Allegations in complaint to set aside deed held to show discovery of fraud within period of limitations.

Allegation in complaint to set aside deed that plaintiff first began to discover fraud in month of December, 1922, but never fully discovered said fraud until 24th day of November, 1925, sufficiently stated discovery of fraud within period of statute of limitations, and action was not barred by such statute.

2. Deeds ☞211(3)—Evidence held to sustain allegation of fraud and failure of consideration in action to set aside deed.

In action to set aside deed because of fraud of grantee's representative in representing that deed was a temporary affair to raise money to secure medical treatment for grantor's brother, evidence held to sustain allegations of fraud and failure of consideration.

3. Appeal and error ☞173(10)—Laches is a defense and cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Laches is a defense, and not condition of relief, and, if it does not appear on face of complaint, must be affirmatively pleaded and proved by defendant, and cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

4. Cancellation of instruments ☞34(1)—Laches was not available in action to set deed aside, brought within three years after grantee's representative told grantor that grantor had no interest.

Where grantee's representative told grantor in 1922 that grantor had no interest in property, defense of laches was not available in action brought within three years thereafter to set aside deed executed in 1919.

5. Cancellation of instruments ☞34(1)—Prejudice must be established before court will refuse to set aside deed on ground of laches.

In action to set aside deed because of fraud, prejudice must be established before relief will be denied on ground of laches.

6. Judgment ☞707—Judgment in action to set aside deed for fraud held not to affect validity of mortgages, where mortgagees were not proceeded against.

In action by grantor against representatives of decedent grantee to set aside deed because of fraud of representative of grantee in procuring deed, judgment had no effect on validity of mortgages; mortgagees not having been served with summons, nor appeared, and no evidence having been introduced to support allegations of complaint that mortgages were procured by fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by John Cooke against J. M. Darnell, individually and as administrator of the estate of Emma Darnell, deceased, and others. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the named defendant, individually and as administrator, appeals. Affirmed.

E. R. McNamara and Fred W. Carroll, both of Crescent City, for appellant.

George W. Howe, of Crescent City, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant J. M. Darnell, in his own behalf and as administrator of the estate of his deceased wife, Emma Darnell, appeals from a judgment in an action brought by the respondent, John Cooke, to set aside a deed of grant, bargain, and sale whereunder respondent and Walter Cooke, as grantors, purported to convey to Emma Darnell title to a ranch in Del Norte county, containing 100 acres; it being alleged in the complaint that appellant obtained respondent's signature to said deed by fraudulent means and without the payment of any consideration. On stipulation, the action was tried before a jury sitting advisory to the court. Three special issues were submitted, all of which the jury decided in favor of respondent, whereupon findings by the court were waived, and after adopting the special verdicts of the jury the court entered judgment for respondent.

The essential allegations of the complaint relating to the issue of fraud were as follows: "That the plaintiff was on November 26, 1919, a resident of and in Del Norte county, California, and was then unacquainted with legal documents and legal business, and was then on very friendly terms with said defendant J. M. Darnell, and was then and there worrying about the condition of his brother Walter Cooke (who was then and there suffering from a fatal disease), and thereby plaintiff was wholly incapacitated from attending to business, and the defendant J. M. Darnell then and there well knew these facts and conditions, and by reason thereof said defendant J. M. Darnell did then and there on said November 26, 1919, in said Del Norte county, California, take advantage of the plaintiff's said incapacity, and did then and there fraudulently procure the said plaintiff to sign a certain writing, without the payment or delivery to plaintiff of any consideration whatever therefor, which certain writing said defendant J. M. Darnell then and there falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff to be an instrument to be used by said J. M. Darnell in raising money to pay some expenses of said Walter Cooke (who afterwards died, March 30, 1920), and said defendant J. M. Darnell then and there falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that said certain writing and instrument to be signed, and so signed, by plaintiff, at the request of said defendant J. M. Darnell, as aforesaid, was only a temporary affair."

It was further alleged that the representations so made were false, as appellant well knew; that said instrument was in fact a deed conveying all of respondent's interest in said ranch to appellant's wife; and that said deed was placed on record. The date of the recordation of the deed, however, was not stated. It was also alleged that within a few months after the execution of said deed Mrs. Darnell and appellant mortgaged the entire property to the defendant Sorensen to secure a note for $500, and later Sorensen assigned a one-half interest in the mortgage to the defendant Evans; and three years subsequent to Mrs. Darnell's death appellant and his stepson (whose interest does not appear) placed a second mortgage on the entire property to secure the payment of an additional $500, Sorensen and Evans being the mortgagees. Both mortgages, respondent alleges, were also fraudulent.

[1] Appellant demurred to the complaint upon the ground, among others, that the cause of action set forth therein was barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer was overruled, and appellant assigns the ruling as error. It has been held that an allegation that plaintiff did not know, understand, or discover the contents of the instrument at any time prior to the date within the period of the statute sufficiently states the discovery of the fraud within the period. Moore v. Moore, 56 Cal. 89; 4 Cal. Jur. 794. In the present case it was alleged "that plaintiff never knew that said writing [he had signed] was a deed, * * * nor that said deed was of record, until November 24, 1925"; also that "plaintiff first began to discover said fraud, hereinbefore referred to, in the month of December, 1922 (about the 10th day of December, 1922), but plaintiff, because of his poverty and his lack of knowledge of legal documents and legal business, never fully discovered said fraud until the 24th day of November, 1925." We are of the opinion that the foregoing allegations were sufficient to bring the complaint within the rule above mentioned, and that therefore the demurrer was properly overruled.

Answering the complaint, appellant denied the allegations of fraud, including the one charging that he represented to respondent that the instrument respondent was asked to sign was to be "only a temporary affair," and in respect thereto averred that when respondent signed the same he well knew the contents, nature, and legal effect thereof. The answer did not deny, however, the allegation that the instrument was executed "without the payment or delivery to plaintiff of any consideration whatever"; but, while testifying as a witness, appellant claimed, as will hereinafter appear, that he paid a consideration of $600 for the conveyance of said property.

The three special verdicts submitted to the jury and its findings thereon were as follows:

"1. Did John Cooke know on the 26th day of November, 1919, that he signed a deed to his interest in the George Cooke estate? Answer—No.

"2. Did the defendant Darnell make the representations as alleged in substance in the complaint of plaintiff and were those representations false and believed by John Cooke? Answer—Yes.

"3. Do you believe that defendant Darnell paid $600 to Walter Cooke for Walter Cooke and John Cooke for their signing that deed? Answer—No."

[2] We are of the opinion that the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the allegations of fraud and failure of consideration, and also the special verdicts found by the jury and adopted by the trial court. It discloses the following facts: At the time the deed in question was executed, title to the ranch stood of record in the name of George Cooke, the father of respondent, John Cooke, Walter Cooke, and Mrs. Darnell. He died September 7, 1919, leaving surviving him as heirs at law the three children above named, and 2½ months subsequent to his death, and long before any steps were taken to probate his estate, to wit, on November 26, 1919, the instrument in question was executed. It recites the payment to the grantors of a money consideration of $350, and the indorsements thereon show that it was placed on record 2 days after the date of its execution. Walter Cooke died in March, 1920, 4 months after the deed was signed, and Mrs. Darnell's death followed about 2 years later, in January, 1922. Respondent lived on ranches in Del Norte county all his life, 39 years of which was spent on the ranch in question. He had practically no school education, having only finished the second grade, and was entirely unfamiliar with matters relating to the transfer of real property. There is no dispute about the fact that at the time the instrument was signed Walter Cooke was stricken with fatal illness and was seeking special medical treatment, but was unable to obtain the same because of lack of funds. Nor is there any question that the purpose of the transaction involving the execution of the deed was to raise money to secure such medical treatment. But the evidence is sharply conflicting as to the circumstances attending the signing of the deed.

Respondent testified that without previous appointment he met Darnell on the street in Crescent City on the morning of November 26, 1919, the day on which the instrument was signed, and that Darnell asked him to go to the law office of Hersch & McNulty and "sign a piece of paper temporarily," so that he (Darnell) could raise some money to pay for the medical services Walter Cooke was seeking; that, being perfectly willing that this should be done, he accompanied Darnell to said law office without further question, and that there the following occurred: "He [Mr. Hersch] produced a paper on one corner of the desk and walks up close to me and kind of holds it up close to me, reads three or four words, kind of mumbled—I did not hear, and pointed out for me to sign right here. I did not see any other signature only what I put down there. He takes the paper and I gets up and walks out." He further testified that he was not given an opportunity to read the paper, nor did any one read or explain it to him, but relying wholly upon Darnell's representation that it was merely a "temporary paper," which it was necessary for him to sign before money could be obtained to take care of his brother's sickness, he signed the same without question, and that, if he had known that the paper was a deed, he would not have signed it. Darnell denied having made the representations above mentioned, and in that connection testified that several days prior to the date on which the deed was signed he discussed Walter Cooke's condition with respondent, and as a result of such discussion agreed on behalf of his wife to purchase the interests of the respondent and Walter Cooke in their father's ranch for $600, so that Walter Cooke could use the money to obtain necessary medical treatment, and that when he met respondent on the street that morning it was in pursuance of an appointment to consummate the transfer. He further testified that after entering said law office Mr. Hersch, at his request, read the deed to respondent and informed him as to its legal effect, and that thereupon respondent signed the deed. Darnell's testimony as to what transpired in the law office was corroborated generally by the testimony of Mr. Hersch, and to some extent by the testimony of Mr. McNulty.

With reference to the question of failure of consideration appellant admitted that no money whatever was paid to respondent, but claimed that Walter Cooke signed the deed the day before respondent signed it, and was paid $300 as his share of the purchase price, and that later, at respondent's request, he also paid Walter Cooke the remaining $300 due for respondent's share. Respondent denied ever having made any such request, and at the trial appellant was able to produce only one receipt signed by Walter for $300, claiming that the other receipt for a like amount and the original deed to the property had been lost.

In determining the truth of the testimony bearing upon the issues of fraud and failure of consideration, the jury in the first instance, and afterwards the trial court, accepted and acted upon the testimony given by respondent, and there is nothing inherently improbable in such testimony. Therefore the conclusions reached thereon by the jury and the trial court on those issues are final and conclusive on this appeal.

[3-5] Appellant contends, however, that the equitable relief sought by respondent should nevertheless have been denied upon the ground of laches; reliance being placed upon the fact that the deed was recorded within a day or two after it was executed, and upon a conversation which took place between appellant and respondent on the county road in said county in December, 1922, at which time appellant told respondent that respondent had "no more interest" in the property, that he had "signed it all over" to appellant. However, appellant did not plead the defense of laches in his answer, and, as pointed out in discussing the ruling on demurrer, nothing appears on the face of the complaint to warrant the denial of relief on that ground. In that state of the record it would seem that appellant may not raise the question of laches for the first time on appeal because, as held in a number of cases, " * * * laches is a defense, and not a condition of relief, and, if it does not appear on the face of the complaint, must be affirmatively pleaded and proven by the defendants." Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, 184 Cal. 226, 193 P. 243, 250.

Assuming, however, that such defense is available to appellant without having pleaded the same in his answer, we are of the opinion that the facts of the case are not such as demand the application of that doctrine as a matter of law, because there is sufficient evidence to prove that respondent did not in fact learn that the instrument he had signed was a deed, nor that the same was a matter of record, until shortly before the commencement of this action. In this regard he testified that, when appellant told him in December, 1922, that he had no more interest in the property, he was "kind of astonished," and called appellant's attention to the statements made by him at the time the deed was signed, to the effect that it was only a "temporary affair" and would be "straightened out" later, and that in reply Darnell merely repeated his statement and rode away; that consequently he "thought maybe he (appellant) was fooling," and afterwards he "did not think much about it" until the year 1925, at which time the sheriff of the county, during a friendly conversation with respondent, asked him if he did not own an interest in the ranch, and upon relying that he did, the sheriff told him that Darnell was about to probate the George Cooke estate, and suggested that he had better engage a lawyer to look after his interests; that he did so immediately, and soon thereafter was advised for the first time of the true nature of the instrument he had signed, and that the same was on record; and that within a few days thereafter he commenced suit to have the same set aside. The sheriff fully corroborated respondent's testimony with reference to said conversation.

Even though it could be fairly held as a matter of law, as appellant contends, that the conversation between Darnell and respondent in December, 1922, was sufficient to put respondent on inquiry, it would not operate as a bar to recovery, because the record shows that the action was commenced within three years thereafter, and, moreover, there was neither pleading nor corresponding proof of any prejudice having been suffered by appellant or the estate of Emma Darnell as a result of such delay, and such prejudice must be established before equitable relief will be denied upon the ground of laches. Victor Oil Co. v. Drum, supra; Hill v. Garvey, 56 Cal. App. 98, 205 P. 61. Appellant suggests the loss of the testimony of Walter Cooke and Mrs. Darnell, occasioned by their death; but the record shows that they died long before said conversation took place, and the delay mentioned could not have retarded the settlement of the estates of Mrs. Darnell and George Cooke, because appellant did not seek to probate either until shortly prior to the commencement of this action.

The case of Blaisdell v. Leach, 101 Cal. 405, 35 P. 1019, 40 Am. St. Rep. 65, cited by appellant, is essentially different from the present one, and therefore not in point. The action there was one by Blaisdell as mortgagee against Leach and his wife, to foreclose a mortgage executed by Leach, covering property standing of record in his name, and at the trial it was disclosed that the deed under which Leach claimed to have acquired title from his wife was a forgery. However, she had acknowledged the instrument before a notary public, believing it to be a lease, and it was held, therefore, that since she acknowledged the instrument, without informing herself as to its purport and effect, she was estopped from assailing its validity against the rights of the mortgagee, who had, in good faith and without any other knowledge than was conveyed by the instrument, parted with his property on the strength thereof. But in so holding the court clearly indicated that as between Mrs. Leach and her husband the deed was voidable on the ground of fraud.

[6] Here the action is between the grantor and the legal representative of the deceased grantee, and the rights of innocent third parties are not involved. True, the mortgagees were made parties defendant to the suit, and the judgment declares said mortgages to be inoperative against respondent's undivided one-third interest, and grants certain injunctive relief against the enforcement thereof against said interest; but, so far as the record shows, neither of the mortgagees was ever served with summons in the action, or ever appeared therein voluntarily by demurrer, answer, intervention, or otherwise; neither was there any evidence whatever introduced in support of the allegation of the complaint that said mortgages were fraudulent, nor any finding made by the jury or trial court with reference thereto. Manifestly, therefore, the judgment has no legal effect whatever upon the validity of said mortgages or the rights of the respective mortgagees thereunder, and in so far as its provisions purport to adjudicate those matters they are wholly nugatory.

Furthermore, the question whether or not appellant's fraudulent acts in procuring respondent's signature to said deed were binding upon his wife and her estate is unimportant, because, as shown, the answer filed by appellant in his own behalf and as administrator of his wife's estate admits that the conveyance to her was made without the payment to plaintiff of any consideration, and the jury and the trial court so found.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re KECK et al. (Civ. 6940.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

Parent and child $\Rightarrow$ 3(2)—Where it was not shown that money furnished by father was inadequate, mother, as guardian, was not entitled to deduct maintenance for children from their estates (Civ. Code, § 196; Code Civ. Proc. § 1757).

Mother, as guardian of children, was not entitled to deduct from estate of children maintenance for them, where it was not shown that sum furnished by father was not adequate to maintain family, or that father was unable to furnish greater amount, if necessary, as, under Civ. Code, § 196, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1757, estates of children cannot be resorted to for their maintenance, so long as parents are able adequately to support them.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Final accounting of Lizzie B. Keck, guardian of the persons and estates of Ella, George O., and John A. Keck. From the disallowance of certain items, Lizzie B. Keck appeals. Affirmed.

James P. Sweeney, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Farnsworth, Burke & Maddox, of Visalia, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from an order settling final accounts of guardian and disallowing certain items of account.

Appellant, Lizzie B. Keck, the mother of the above-named minors, was the legally appointed guardian of their persons and estates from January 8, 1923, to January 15, 1927. On the last-named date she was by order of the court removed as such guardian, and her husband appointed in her place. She filed final accounts of her guardianship of the estate of each minor, and in each of said accounts credited herself with $1,650, being $60 per month maintenance for each minor for 27½ months. By an amendment to said accounts she also sought credit for $288 for the purchase of a motorcycle for George and John, which she purchased subsequent to the court's order removing her as guardian. The amounts claimed by the appellant for maintenance of the minors were not actually withdrawn from the bank until after notice received of her removal.

The evidence received upon the hearing of the accounts and the objections thereto shows that during this period of four years the appellant received, directly and indirectly, from the father of said minors, funds aggregating over $20,355.56, which were available for the support of herself and the said minors. No showing was made that this sum was not adequate to maintain the family in the manner in which they had been accustomed, or that the father was unable to furnish a greater amount, if necessary. The capital of each minor, according to the accounts, amounted to $2,546.12.

Parents are primarily liable for the support of their children (Civ. Code, § 196), and the estates of the children may not be resorted to for that purpose, so long as the parents are able adequately to perform this duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 1757). The items of $1,650 were, therefore, properly disallowed.

No showing was made as to the necessity of purchasing the motorcycle, and appellant makes no argument against that part of the order disallowing it.

The order is affirmed.

In action, under Pol. Code, § 3324, on auctioneer's bond, required by section 3285 to secure performance of auctioneer's duties under sections 3306-3308, 3310 by assignee of seller of musical instruments under conditional sales contracts, which instruments auctioneer purchased and resold, evidence held insufficient to show sale of instruments by auctioneer at auction.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Chauncey Tramutolo and Lemuel D. Sanderson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, J. This is an appeal from a judgment given against the defendant upon a statutory bond executed by it, conditioned upon the faithful performance of the duties of C. H. Bossong as an auctioneer in the city and county of San Francisco. The bond is required of an auctioneer by the provisions of Pol. Code, pt. 3, tit. 7, c. 13, § 3285. Section 3324 of the same chapter provides: "Any one aggrieved or damaged by any act of an auctioneer in violation of or contrary to the provisions of this chapter, has an action against him and his bondsmen on his official bond therefor." Other sections of chapter 13 make it the duty of such an auctioneer to keep books, in which he must enter a record of all sales (Pol. Code, § 3306), to make quarterly reports to the county auditor of certain details of his business and sales (Pol. Code, § 3310), to give previous notice in public newspapers of every auction sale (Pol. Code, § 3307), and to hold all public auctions in the day time (Pol. Code, § 3308).

Appellant's point on appeal is that the evidence at the trial was insufficient to show a violation by the auctioneer, Bossong, of any of the duties imposed upon him by the law above referred to, and that therefore no liability of appellant upon the bond was proven. The evidence relied upon by respondent to support the judgment is as follows:

Mrs. Bauer purchased upon conditional sales installment contracts numerous musical instruments from numerous music stores in San Francisco. Plaintiff is the assignee of these stores. Mrs. Bauer paid a small amount down upon each instrument, but never completed payment upon any one of them, so that each remained the property of the music stores. She communicated with Mr. Bossong in response to his newspaper advertisement, in which he offered to buy musical instruments. Bossong called at her residence about 17 times, each time taking away with him one or more instruments, paying her cash in full for the same. Officers in charge of the licensing departments of the city testified that the only license issued to Bossong, or which he possessed, was that of an auctioneer. One of these officers testified that Bossong's business was auctioning goods. Sergeant Bohr, of the police department, testified: "He was a furniture man." "He handled secondhand furniture. He was an auctioneer, and he had a place on the corner out there. He also handled new furniture and secondhand furniture." He also testified that Bossong never at any time showed the records of instruments recovered or disposed of, although Bohr asked him for such books and records. Sergeant Bohr repeated some declarations of Bossong made to him, indicating that Bossong had sold or in some manner disposed of some of the instruments, but this testimony was stricken out upon motion as not responsive.

Appellant also claims here, of course, that it was hearsay, so far as the appellant is concerned. Bossong was not a witness at the trial. Sergeant Gaughran testified in part as follows:

"Mr. Tramutolo: Q. What conversation did you have with him with regard to the books, Mr. Gaughran?

"Mr. Lund: That is objected to—"The Court: Now, we are not interested in the conversation as much as we are interested in the books themselves.

"Mr. Tramutolo: Q. Did he produce any books? A. He did not.

"Q. Did you demand to see any books that he may have had? A. I did.

"Q. And what did he say with respect to the request for the books, if anything? A. He asked me what I was particularly interested in, and I told him. He showed me the books, and he had no record whatever of ever purchasing an instrument from Mrs. Bauer. * * *

At the conclusion of the respondent's evidence, appellant moved for a nonsuit. The motion was denied, and appellant offered no evidence. The finding of the court was that Bossong sold said instruments at public auction, and that each of the several assignors of respondent was damaged by the failure of Bossong to keep a record of the sale of the instruments.

Respondent argues that the evidence is sufficient to show a sale at auction by Bossong, because he had no license for any other kind of business. Appellant argues that the evidence shows that Bossong was also in the furniture business, and that if the instruments were sold by him in the capacity of a furniture dealer his surety upon his auctioneer's bond is not liable, and, further, that inasmuch as he had first purchased the goods from Mrs. Bauer, any sales made by him were sales as of his own goods, in which event it is contended he would not have been acting as an auctioneer, and his failure to make entries of such sales would not be a violation of the statute or a breach of the condition of his bond.

The evidence in this case is not such as to call for a decision of whether an auctioneer is by statute required to keep a record of the sale of goods which he has first purchased from a purported owner. No evidence is indicated, and we have found none, which shows that Bossong made any sale of the instruments whatever, whether as auctioneer or otherwise. That the instruments were not to be found after having been traced to his possession may be said to have been fairly established. Whether he concealed, destroyed or sold them, however, is merely a matter of conjecture, under the evidence remaining in the record. Bossong's auctioneer's license did not compel him to auction or sell all goods coming into his possession. Applying to him, with some misgivings, the presumption of fair and lawful conduct, would not result in the conclusion that he disposed of the goods by auction, since a licensed auctioneer, outside of his business as auctioneer, enjoys the same freedom of contract as other individuals.

We conclude that the evidence received was insufficient to support the judgment. The judgment is reversed.

EDDY v. DEMICHALIS. (Civ. 6952.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

1. Easements ⇨37—Whether plaintiff's possession or user of adjoining landowner's property for turn row was adverse, giving easement, held question of fact.

In action for damages and injunction based on claim of easement for use of land of adjoining landowner as turn row for purpose of turning teams and tractors drawing cultivating machinery, question whether plaintiff's possession or user was adverse was one of fact for trial court.

2. Easements ⇨36(3)—Finding of absence of adverse possession, relied on to establish easement for use of adjoining land for turn row, held justified, though defendant's predecessor gave plaintiff permission to use property.

In action for damages and injunction based on claim of easement in land of adjoining landowner for use thereof as turn row for purpose of turning teams and tractors drawing cultivating machinery, finding of trial court that there was no adverse possession or user was justified, notwithstanding conversation whereby defendant's predecessor gave plaintiff permission to use the land.

3. Easements ⇨8(2, 3)—Prescriptive title cannot arise out of permission, but must be acquired adversely.

Prescriptive title cannot arise out of an agreement or license or mere neighborly accommodation, but must be acquired adversely.

4. Adverse possession ⇨112—Clear evidence of adverse possession is necessary to overcome presumption in favor of paper title.

Presumption of ownership is with the paper title, and clear evidence of adverse possession is necessary to overcome this presumption.

5. Easements ⇨8(1)—Adverse claim must be proved to have been communicated by claimant to owner, to establish title by adverse possession.

To support claim of title or easement by adverse possession, adverse claim of right must not only exist in mind of claimant, but must be proved to have been communicated to the owner, so that his failure to object may be taken against him as an acknowledgment or acquiescence in the right claimed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff by this action sought damages and an injunction based upon his claim of an easement upon the land of the defendant, an adjoining landowner. The easement claimed was the right to use as a turn row an open strip of land or avenue, which had been left unplanted to trees or vines, upon and along the boundary line between the lands of the two parties to this action. A turn row is understood by the parties as a place used, while cultivating the land, for the purpose of turning teams and tractors drawing cultivating machinery. Plaintiff is the owner of lots Nos. 30 and 31. Defendant is the owner of lot No. 32. The turn row is between lots Nos. 31 and 32. Plaintiff claimed the easement by adverse user and prescription. The court gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] Substantially the only point argued at the trial and upon this appeal is the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to show that his use and possession of the strip of land for the purpose of a turn row was adverse, as contended by plaintiff and appellant, or merely permissive, as contended by defendant and respondent. No point is made as to the sufficiency of the complaint to present this issue, either at the trial or on this appeal, and accordingly we will treat it in the same manner.

Practically all the evidence at the trial came from the witnesses called by the plaintiff. Appellant indicates certain testimony introduced by him which is uncontradicted and which he claims entitled him to a decision that he was the owner of the claimed easement by adverse possession. The plaintiff testified that in 1903 he purchased lot No. 31 from Shepherd-Teague & Co., who was then the owner of lots Nos. 30, 31, 32, and other lots. In 1906 plaintiff, a resident of Chicago, Ill., was visited by Teague, of Shepherd-Teague & Co., and was persuaded to purchase an additional lot, No. 30. In their conversation plaintiff testified that he inquired about the expense of building fences, and Teague said: "You don't need any fences." I asked him what about the straying of the cattle, wouldn't they destroy things, and I asked him about that, and he said, "No, it is not necessary, because, out there, if they come on your property, and do any damage, the owner has to pay for the damage they do." So, in that way he persuaded me not to put up any fences. 'But,' he said, 'there is an avenue around the lot, and,' he said, 'I own all the land, and you have access to come across the land and turn on the property adjoining your field, to turn back again in the avenue in the opposite direction, and the party on the other property adjoining has the same right to go on your land and turn around to go back there, and,' he said, 'That avenue is private property of both parties to use that way, and the party on the other property has always the privilege to come across on your land for the purpose of turning around and going back, in working the field there, and you have the same privilege, that is what it is for, and,' he said, 'it has been used that way in the neighborhood of twenty years.'

In 1907 Shepherd-Teague & Co., under contract with plaintiff, planted lot No. 31 to grapevines, leaving a strip unplanted at the boundary between lots Nos. 31 and 32. Plaintiff arrived in California in August, 1908, and took possession of his land. From 1908 to 1916 he cultivated the land through an agent, and from 1916 to date has personally occupied and cultivated it, always using the turn row until objection and interference by defendant shortly before the commencement of this action, in 1925.

The ownership of defendant's lot No. 32 remained in Shepherd-Teague & Co., from 1903 to 1910, when it was sold to Sprague and Thureau, who owned it until 1918, at which time it passed to the defendant and respondent herein. The plaintiff was instrumental in helping Shepherd-Teague & Co., sell lot No. 32 to Sprague and Thureau in 1910, being a friend and fellow workman of Sprague. He testified that he told Sprague at that time about the turn row, and repeated to Sprague what Teague had told him in 1906. When lot No. 32 was planted in 1910 by Sprague & Thureau, an open avenue was also left at its common boundary with lot No. 31. The open space is thus partly on lot No. 32.

Appellant's testimony of his conversation with Teague and of his having repeated it to respondent's predecessor Sprague was uncontradicted; neither Sprague nor Teague appearing as a witness at the trial. Appellant claims that this testimony conclusively establishes the adverse character of his user, and cites authorities to the effect that a parol grant, though invalid, is a sufficient basis for the acquisition of the right by adverse possession. Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 396, 35 P. 1008; Alper v. Tormey, 7 Cal. App. 11, 93 P. 402.

Whether the appellant's possession or user was adverse was a question of fact for the trial court. Franz v. Mendonca, 131 Cal.

205, 63 P. 361; Pinheiro v. Bettencourt, 17 Cal. App. 111, 118 P. 941; Alper v. Tormey, supra. The question is, not whether the evidence would have supported a decision in favor of the appellant, but whether the decision made finds support in the evidence.

[2, 3] The conversation with Teague as narrated by appellant does not demand the interpretation of a parol grant. It is also fairly susceptible of being interpreted as a license or permission given as a matter of accommodation or as a description of a custom. The plaintiff's complaint was not put in evidence, and we will not refer to it as evidence, but it may be mentioned to illustrate the point that plaintiff's report of his conversation with Teague is fairly susceptible of being understood otherwise than as a parol grant. The wording of the complaint shows it was understood otherwise by those drafting and verifying the complaint. The only statement of plaintiff's claim of easement found in his complaint is in paragraph IV. It is: "That from the year 1907 until the year 1925 by mutual agreement between the plaintiff and defendant * * * there was maintained in common a turn row * * * (describing it and its use)." A prescriptive title cannot arise out of an agreement; it must be acquired adversely; it cannot be adverse when it rests upon a license or mere neighborly accommodation. Pinheiro v. Bettencourt, 17 Cal. App. 111, and cases cited at page 119, 118 P. 941, 945.

[4, 5] Likewise the conversation with Sprague does not demand the interpretation of notice of adverse user under claim of right. The user itself was not of such a character as to compel the conclusion that it was hostile to the rights of the defendant and his predecessors. The use of a turn row partakes so much of the nature of a custom as generally to excite no suspicion that it is hostile to the neighboring landowner. The presumption of ownership is with the paper title. Clear evidence is necessary to overcome this presumption. The adverse claim of right must not only exist in the mind of the claimant, but must be proven to have been communicated in some way to the owner so that his failure to object may be taken against him as an acknowledgment of or acquiescence in the right claimed. Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 P. 10; Tarpey v. Veith, 22 Cal. App. 289, 134 P. 367; Heenan v. Bevans, 51 Cal. App. 277, 196 P. 802.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Partnership ⇨64—Name of individual trader followed by word "company" was not fictitious, and individual trading under that name could sue without filing certificate (Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468).

Sole trader's use of his name and initials, followed by word "company," did not necessitate filing of certificate stating name and place of residence under Civ. Code, §§ 2466, and 2468, as condition to maintaining action, since name adopted was not fictitious, in view of fact that individual business, and not partnership business, was involved.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Action by W. S. Wetenhall, doing business under the name and style of the W. S. Wetenhall Company, against the Chas. S. Mabrey Construction Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellants.

G. R. Perkins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendants, Charles S. Mabrey Construction Company and Globe Indemnity Company, from a judgment entered against them upon the pleadings. This is an action by plaintiff against the contractor as principal and the bonding company, above named, as surety, for materials furnished to the contractor and used in the construction of a building in San Bruno, Cal.

Appellants rely upon two special defenses which are set forth in their answer: First, "that plaintiff has failed to comply with the provisions of section 2466 to section 2468, inclusive, of the Civil Code of the State of California, and for that reason said action is barred." Paragraph I of the complaint is as follows: "That plaintiff now is and was at all times herein mentioned doing business under the name and style of W. S. Wetenhall Company, with his office and principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco." Section 2466 of the Civil Code provides: "* * * Every person transacting business in this state under a fictitious name and every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the county in which his or its principal place of business is situated, a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all members of such partnership and their places of residence."

The first question, therefore, to be determined is whether the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is a fictitious name. An examination of the following authorities fully convinces us that the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is not fictitious. Spreckels v. Grace Darling Hospital Ass'n., 28 Cal. App. 646, 648, 153 P. 718; Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 P. 659; Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 601, 26 P. 597; McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644, 647, 26 P. 596; Lamberson v. Bashore, 167 Cal. 387, 391, 139 P. 817; Andrews v. Glick (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 587; Hall et al. v. King (Cal. App.) 279 P. 814.

If the name "W. S. Wetenhall Company" is not fictitious, then he does not come within the purview of section 2466 at all, for the reason that he is an individual doing business under the name and style of "W. S. Wetenhall Company," and is not a partnership. That portion of section 2466 of the Civil Code reading "or a designation not showing the names of persons interested as partners in such business," etc., refers only to partnerships and not to an individual. Or, in other words, if the name used by W. S. Wetenhall is not fictitious and no other person is interested with him in the business, he does not have to comply with said section 2466. This section is not susceptible of any other reasonable interpretation. Our conclusion is strengthened by the language used in the latter part of section 2468 of the Civil Code, which reads: "No person doing business under a fictitious name, * * * nor any persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of this article, * * * shall maintain any action * * * until the certificate has been filed and the publication has been made. * * *"

We are not unmindful of the fact that in such cases as Andrews v. Glick, supra; Hall v. King, supra; North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 P. 1037; Schwarz & Gottlieb, Inc., v. Marcuse, 175 Cal. 401, 165 P. 1015; Nicholson v. Auburn Gold Min., etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 547, 92 P. 651, and similar cases, the courts have held that the various names used, while not fictitious, were designations not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in the business, and therefore were required to file the certificate under section 2466 of the Civil Code. An examination, however, of these cases will show that in all of them two or more persons were interested in the business. We have been unable to discover any case in which a single individual who was doing business under a name not his own, but one which was not fictitious, was required to comply with said section 2466, before he could maintain an action, notwithstanding, from the name used alone it might be impossible to determine how many persons were interested in the business.

The second contention made by appellants is wholly without merit. The portion of the answer relied upon does not raise any issue whatever, and needs no special discussion. We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

MILO v. PRIOR. (Civ. 6728.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Oct. 7, 1929.

1. Judgment $\S$ 562—Judgments not on merits are included in judgments which are not res adjudicata in whole or in part.

Judgments not res adjudicata in whole or in part include judgments which are not on the merits.

2. Judgment $\S$ 197—Judgments not res adjudicata in whole or in part are without prejudice, and it is proper, though not necessary, for judgment to so state.

Judgments which are not res adjudicata in whole or in part are without prejudice, and it is proper, although not necessary, for judgment itself to so state.

3. Judgment $\S$ 197—Judgment without prejudice is not proper where cause is tried and submitted only on merits.

A cause which is tried and submitted only on the merits should not result in judgment without prejudice.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 223—Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits should not be affirmed on technical points court might find which were not raised in support of reservation.

Where judgment without prejudice was rendered in personal injury action, and on appeal, plaintiff assigned no reason for, or in support of, reservation in judgment, reservation should not be affirmed on any technical points court might be able to find which were not raised or mentioned in any way.

5. Judgment $\S$ 197—Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits held not entirely void.

Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits was not entirely void, since such a reservation may be properly made where evidence in proceedings at trial warrants such a judgment, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 581, subd. 1, providing action cannot be dismissed by plaintiff after its submission.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 175(1)—Appellate court will not render final judgment against respondent where it would deprive respondent of right to appeal from final judgment on merits originally entered in appellate court.

Where plaintiff, in action for personal injuries, did not appeal from judgment which was satisfactory to her as a whole, appellate court, in reversing part of judgment appealed from, will not render a final and nonappealable judgment in favor of defendant on merits, where to do so would have effect of depriving plaintiff of right to assign errors and to appeal from final judgment on merits entered in appellate court for first time.

7. Appeal and error $\S$ 839(1)—Where part of judgment appealed from is not severable from remainder of judgment, court may review whole judgment.

Rule that only part of judgment appealed from will be reviewed by appellate court is subject to an exception when such portion is not severable from remainder of judgment.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 839(1)—Without prejudice provision in judgment held not severable from entire judgment, and therefore appellate court on appeal from such part could review entire judgment.

Where defendant in personal injury action appealed from part of judgment without prejudice after trial on merits, part of judgment appealed from was not severable, and therefore appellate court could review entire judgment, since reservation entered into and qualified each and every part of entire judgment.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This action was for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff in an automobile collision alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. This action and two other actions between other parties based upon the same automobile collision were tried together upon the same evidence by the court sitting without a jury. After the causes were submitted and briefed, the court gave judgment in each case, denying relief to each of the several plaintiffs and cross-complainants. In this action judgment was announced for defendant without prejudice. Thereafter both plaintiff and defendant waived findings of fact, and after that a judgment was signed by the judge and filed. After stating the usual recitals and waiver of findings, it ordered judgment in favor of defendant "without prejudice to plaintiff's bringing a new action herein if so advised." Defendant appeals from that part of the judgment alone which we have just quoted. The record contains the judgment roll of this case and the reporter's transcript of the testimony taken at the trial of the three cases, but does not contain the judgment roll in the other two cases nor any findings of fact.

At the time of the collision, the plaintiff, a minor, was riding in an automobile with Norma Furlong and Harry Deller, a minor, who was driving. The other automobile in the collision was driven by the defendant, Leland S. Prior, who was accompanied by his wife, Florence M. Prior. This action was by Hazel Milo against Leland S. Prior alone. The defendant denied negligence, and alleged negligence of Deller and contributory negligence of plaintiff. The other two actions, according to the briefs, were as follows: First, Leland S. Prior against Deller and his parents, for personal injuries and damage to Prior's automobile. In that action Deller's father filed a cross-complaint for damage to the car driven by his son Harry Deller. Second, Florence Prior against Deller and his parents for personal injuries. In that action Deller's father also filed a cross-complaint for damages to his car. In those two actions no one was awarded damages. This might mean that the court decided that both drivers were negligent or that neither was negligent. A final judgment upon the merits for defendant in Hazel v. Leland S. Prior might also mean either that Prior was not negligent or that both Hazel Milo and Leland S. Prior were negligent.

[1-3] Appellant contends that, the action having been fully tried and submitted, the judgment should have been a final judgment between the parties, and not merely a judgment without prejudice. He cites a number of California cases to the effect that a plaintiff may not dismiss an action without prejudice after the case has been tried and submitted, and from this argues that the court cannot decide the cause without prejudice after it has been submitted. Simply because a plaintiff is not permitted by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1) to dismiss the action after its submission, it does not follow that in no case and under no circumstances may a court give a judgment without prejudice. Respondent cites a number of cases to the point that, where a judgment is not upon the merits or expressly provides that it is without prejudice, such judgment is not res adjudicata, the reservation itself being res adjudicata and prevents the raising of any question as to the right to maintain a subsequent suit. These authorities, which are collected in 34 Corpus Juris, 797, note 65, show, however, that such a reservation has been treated as valid in many instances. In Ahlers v. Smiley, 11 Cal. App. 343, 104 P. 997, such a reservation in a judgment is referred to and its effect considered, although the propriety of the reservation is not directly passed upon. The reservation there was in respect to an issue of damages which could not be decided on account of the insufficiency of the pleadings. Many judgments are not res adjudicata in whole or in part. It will be sufficient for this case to say that they include judgments which are not upon the merits. 15 Cal. Jur. 124 et seq. Such judgments are without prejudice, and it is proper, although perhaps not necessary, for the judgment itself to so state. Lloyd v. Imperial Mach. Stamping & Welding Co., 224 Mass. 574, 113 N. E. 456. A cause which is tried and submitted only upon the merits, however, should not result in a judgment without prejudice. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. 806.

[4, 5] There was no motion for dismissal or nonsuit in this case. No findings were made, and so we cannot look to them to find the reason for the reservation. Respondent has suggested no reason for the reservation which he is willing to support, and the reservation should not be affirmed for any technical points we might be able to find, but which were not raised or mentioned in any way. The appeal is therefore well taken. The part of the judgment appealed from, however, is not entirely void, because such a reservation may be properly made where the evidence and proceedings at the trial warrant such a judgment.

[6-8] Supplementary briefs were filed in this court in which the appellant contends that the judgment of this court upon this appeal should have only the effect of eliminating that part of the judgment appealed from and leave the remainder stand as a modified judgment so that there would be a final and non-appealable judgment in favor of the defendant upon the merits. Respondent goes to the other extreme. She contends that the evidence wholly fails to show any negligence on her part, but that the evidence, as well as the court's decision in the companion cases, shows that the defendant was negligent. She therefore asks this court to enter judgment in her favor, or at least that an entire new trial be ordered by this court. As the respondent is not an appellant here, we may not adopt either of these courses upon assignment of errors by her. On the other hand, she should not be penalized for not having taken an appeal from the judgment or from a part thereof when it was satisfactory to her as a whole. For this reason we should not adopt appellant's suggestion, as it would have the effect of depriving respondent of her right to assign errors and to appeal from a final judgment upon the merits entered against her in this court for the first time. The rule that only the part of the judgment appealed from will be reviewed by the appellate court is subject to an exception when such portion is not severable from the remainder of the judgment. In re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 704, 251

P. 205; Whalen v. Smith, 163 Cal. 360, 125 P. 904, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1319. In the instant case the part appealed from is not severable. The reservation enters into and qualifies each and every part of the entire judgment. Wanzer v. Self, 30 Ohio St. 378. The merit of this appeal is, not that such a reservation may never be made, but that the appellant was entitled, according to the record presented here, to have a judgment entered upon the merits either for or against him instead of a judgment which amounts only to a dismissal or nonsuit. According to the record, the case was fully tried and submitted upon its merits, but no judgment upon the merits has been rendered. A judgment which is erroneous because not on the merits is the only one which has been rendered.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and it is ordered that the trial court proceed to render and enter a new judgment upon the merits in the action according to the views herein expressed.

BEAVER v. CARPENTER et al. (Civ. 6555.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

Appeal and error ⇨773(2)—On failure to file brief or points and authorities, excepting reply affidavit in opposition to motion to dismiss, appeal was dismissed.

Where appellants did not attempt to file brief or points or authorities within 30 days from time of filing transcript in appellate court, as provided by rules of court, excepting reply affidavit in opposition to motion to dismiss, and no sufficient reason was given for failure to comply with rules of court nor extension of time granted, appeal was dismissed.

Action by A. D. Beaver against W. T. Carpenter and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

C. J. Novotny, of San Diego, for appellants.
Liggett & Liggett, of San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This matter comes up on motion of respondent to dismiss an appeal taken by the defendants in the above-entitled action on the grounds: (1) That no opening brief and points and authorities have been served or filed in the above-named court within 30 days from the date of the filing of the transcript herein, or at all, as provided by the rules of this court; (2) that no extension of time for the filing of the same has ever been granted, either by stipulation or affidavit, or at all.

The appellants have not even attempted to file any brief or any points or authorities, excepting only the reply affidavit of C. G. Novotny in opposition to the motion to dismiss. In said reply affidavit there is no sufficient reason given for the failure to comply with the rules of the court.

The appeal is therefore dismissed.

JOHNSON v. PEARSON. (Civ. 6964.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 5, 1929.

1. Damages ⇨96—New trial ⇨74—Damages for personal injuries are within sound discretion of jury, and trial judge's discretion in ruling on motion for new trial.

Amount of damages in actions for personal injuries is committed first to sound discretion of jury, and then to discretion of trial judge, who, when ruling on motion for a new trial, may consider evidence anew, determine anew facts, and set aside verdict, if it is not just.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1)—On appeal, award for personal injuries cannot be set aside, unless plainly and outrageously excessive, suggesting at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5).

On appeal, decision of trial court and jury on amount of damages for personal injuries cannot be set aside, unless verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption on part of jury, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5, allowing new trial for excessive damages appearing to have been given under passion or prejudice.

3. Appeal and error ⇨932(1)—On appeal attacking verdict of jury as being excessive, every conflict in evidence must be resolved in favor of respondent.

Where verdict is attacked as being excessive, court on appeal must treat every conflict in evidence as resolved in favor of respondent, and must give respondent benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of claim.

4. Damages ⇨32—Nervousness, when reasonable result of physical injuries, is always an element of damage.

Nervousness, when reasonable result of physical injuries, is always an element of damage, and evidence relating thereto may be properly submitted to jury.

5. Damages ⇨132(3)—Verdict for $4,000, for injuries to face, shoulder, knee, spine, nervous shock, and minor injuries, held not excessive.

In action for damages for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, where plaintiff was thrown through glass window of automobile, and sustained injuries to her face, dislocation of right shoulder, laceration and contusion of knee, injury to lumbar region of spine, so as to cause impingement of nerves in the locale spine, and severe nervous shock and minor injuries, verdict for $4,000 was not excessive.

6. Appeal and error ⇨216(1)—Defendant in personal injury action, not requesting instruction separating general damages from special damages, cannot complain of instruction failing to do so.

In action for damages for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, if defendant desired instruction separating general damages from special damages, it was incumbent on counsel to have presented such instruction and requested court to give it, and, having failed to do either, defendant cannot complain of instruction which did not separate damages.

7. Appeal and error ⇨932(1)—Appellate court will presume sum awarded for personal injuries, where instruction did not separate general from special damages, was for injuries received, and not for special damages.

Where court, in action for personal injuries, gave instruction which did not separate general damages from special damages, appellate court will presume that sum awarded was for injuries received and pain and suffering endured, and that amount did not include anything for special damages.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1032(3)—Giving of instruction on future damages for personal injuries did not warrant reversal, where defendant wholly failed to show he sustained injury by such instruction.

Where defendant, sued for injuries arising in automobile accident, wholly failed to show that he sustained any injury by instruction on future damages, giving of such instruction did not warrant reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by Vivia D. Johnson against George C. Pearson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages for personal injuries. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $4,000. From the judgment entered upon this verdict, the defendant, George C. Pearson, prosecutes this appeal.

An automobile driven by plaintiff collided with an automobile driven by defendant at the intersection of Peralta avenue and School street in the city of Oakland. As a result of the collision, plaintiff was thrown through the glass window of her automobile and sustained the following injuries: Her face was lacerated and contused. Her right shoulder was dislocated. Her left knee was lacerated and contused. The lumbar region of the spine was bruised, contused, and so sprained as to cause an impingement of the nerves in the locale spine. She also received a severe nervous shock and minor injuries.

Each party charged the other with negligence; the principal act of negligence charged to the appellant being the excessive rate of speed that he was traveling at the time of the collision. Appellant concedes that the evidence is conflicting, and there is some evidence to support the verdict. For this reason no attack is made upon the judgment on that ground.

Appellant first contends that the amount of the verdict is grossly excessive, and was based upon passion and prejudice. A motion for a new trial was made upon several grounds, among them being "excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5. The motion for a new trial was denied.

[1] The rule is well established that the amount of damages in this kind of an action is committed first to the sound discretion of the jury, and next to the discretion of the judge of the trial court, who, in ruling upon the motion for a new trial, may consider the evidence anew, determine anew the facts, and set aside the verdict, if it is not just.

[2] Upon appeal, the decision of the trial court and the jury on the subject cannot be set aside, unless the verdict is "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 262 P. 1100, 1102, and cases cited. The evidence on the character and extent of plaintiff's injuries is decidedly conflicting; still there is ample evidence in the record, which the jury and trial judge undoubtedly accepted as true, that the plaintiff received severe and painful injuries, and as a result of such injuries she has become extremely nervous, and at times hysterical.

Appellant, in contending that the award of damages is excessive, lays great stress upon the fact that two physicians, who had examined respondent at his request, testified that respondent was not permanently injured, and that her only trouble was a nervous ailment, known as hysteria. In other words, appellant seems to contend that, because the respondent did not receive any broken bones in the collision, but only received cuts and bruises and a nervous shock, she could not have received any serious injury.

[3] This testimony did nothing more than raise a conflict in the evidence, which conflict was undoubtedly resolved in favor of the respondent, and the rule is well settled that, in considering an attack upon a verdict as being excessive, we must treat every conflict in the evidence as resolved in favor of the respondent, and must give to her the benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of her claim. Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 273, 104 P. 312; Riffel v. Letts, 31 Cal. App. 428, 160 P. 845; Reneau v. Hirsch, supra.

[4] Furthermore, nervousness, when the reasonable outcome of physical injuries, is always an element of damage, and obviously evidence relating thereto may properly be submitted to the jury. Kuhns v. Marshall, 44 Cal. App. 588, 591, 186 P. 632; Easton v. United Trade School Con. Co., 173 Cal. 199, 203, 159 P. 597, 600, L. R. A. 1917A, 394; Latky v. Wolfe, 85 Cal. App. 332, 343, 259 P. 470; Sloane v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co., 111 Cal. 668, 44 P. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193; Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 P. 315; Freiburg v. Israel, 45 Cal. App. 138, 142, 187 P. 130; Jones v. Key, 54 Cal. App. 677, 202 P. 478.

In Easton v. United Trade School Con. Co., supra, the court said: "While touching the nature of the injuries in the case at bar it may be added that it is very properly declared in Warren v. Boston Ry. Co., 163 Mass. 484, 40 N. E. 895, that 'it is a physical injury to a person to be thrown out of a wagon, or to be compelled to jump out, even though the harm done consists mainly of nervous shock.'" It is also a fact, well within human experience, that suffering from the disruption of the nervous system of the human body may be, and often is, more intense and severe than most any other form of suffering.

[5] We have carefully examined the entire record, including the evidence, and there is nothing in the record to show or suggest that the verdict was not the result of the fair and honest judgment of the jury. The award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court is not large. We think, when the extent and character of the injuries received by respondent are all considered, the award is not at all disproportionate to the compensation reasonably warranted by the facts.

[6] Appellant next contends that "the court erred in instructing the jury as to the maximum amount the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The trial court erroneously failed in such instruction to segregate the items of special damage from the item of general damage." There is no merit in either of these contentions. The complaint was originally in three counts: The first for general damages on account of physical injuries in the sum of $15,000; the second for special damages in the sum of $1,500 for the loss of earnings of the plaintiff as a real estate saleslady for the three months intervening between the happening of the accident and the filing of the complaint; and the third for $350 for property damage to plaintiff's automobile. The third count was dismissed by the plaintiff on the first day of the trial. The plaintiff, by permission of the court, filed an amendment during the course of the trial, praying for the sum of $406 for nurses, physician, and X-ray bills.

The instruction complained of was given at request of respondent, and clearly and correctly stated the law, and, if appellant desired an instruction separating the general damages from the special damages, it was incumbent upon his counsel to have presented such an instruction and requested the court to give it. Having failed to do either, appellant is in no position to complain of the instruction given. Wirthman v. Isenstein, 182 Cal. 108, 111, 187 P. 12; Weaver v. Carter, 28 Cal. App. 241, 248, 152 P. 323; O'Connor v. United Railroads of S. F., 168 Cal. 43, 48, 141 P. 809; Townsend v. Butterfield, 168 Cal. 564, 143 P. 760; Putnam v. Pickwick Stages, etc. (Cal. App.) 276 P. 1055; Hardy v. Schirmer, 163 Cal. 272, 124 P. 993.

[7] Furthermore, if there is no evidence to support a judgment for special damages, as appellant contends, there is, however, ample evidence in the record to support a judgment for $4,000 for general damages, and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must presume that the sum awarded respondent of $4,000 is for injuries received and the pain and suffering endured, and nothing for special damages.

Lastly, it is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury as to future damages, because there was no evidence that respondent's injuries were permanent. This contention is likewise without merit. There is abundant evidence in the record from which the jury might well have concluded that respondent's nervous condition would be permanent.

[8] If, however, we concede that there was no evidence whatever that respondent's injuries were of a permanent nature, still the giving of the said instruction under such circumstances would not warrant a reversal of the judgment, because appellant has wholly failed to show that he has sustained any injury by the giving of such instruction. Hardy v. Schirmer, supra.

We think the instructions, when taken as a whole, clearly and correctly state the law applicable to all phases of the case.

It follows, from what has been said, that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PARNAY v. E. C. AMLING CO. (Civ. 5377.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 10, 1929.

Corporations §410—Purchase of nursery stock by president of corporation engaged in business of buying and selling cut flowers was binding on corporation.

Purchase of nursery stock by president of corporation engaged in business of buying and selling cut flowers was binding on corporation, as president of corporation may transact business for it and bind it in all matters coming within ordinary course of business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Hripsime Parnay against the E. C. Amling Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Smith and J. Gilbert Fall, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Carter & Webster, of Pasadena, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for the purchase price of certain nursery stock alleged to have been sold and delivered by respondent to appellant corporation. The sole question involved is the authority of the president of the corporation to make the purchase on its behalf.

There is evidence to establish the fact that E. C. Amling was president of the E. C. Amling Company and held a majority of its stock. About December 20, 1921, Amling, accompanied by his son Harold R. Amling, secretary, treasurer, and general manager of the corporation (the business of which was buying and selling cut flowers), went to the nursery of respondent at Pasadena and priced heather plants, inquiring particularly as to special rates on quantity lots, and finally agreed to purchase 1,500 heather plants in various sizes. This conversation was followed by a written order on the letterhead of the corporation, "confirming our conversation of yesterday," specifying delivery at Sawtelle, and inclosing a check for $500 on account. It was signed, "E. C. Amling Co., E. C. Amling." Later on, and prior to delivery, E. C. Amling again visited the nursery, examined the plants, and agreed on cutting them back. He also attended to the delivery, sending trucks for that purpose. Harold Amling, the son, testified that he knew nothing about the order at the time; but this is negated by the testimony of respondent's manager as to the former's presence with E. C. Amling when the verbal order was given.

The purchase seems to have been made in the ordinary course of business, and as was said in Newhall v. Joseph Levy Bag Co., 19 Cal. App. 23, 124 P. 875, 880: "It is a fact of common knowledge that a very large part of the mercantile business of the country is, as a matter of convenience, if not, indeed, as a matter of necessity, carried on by corporate organizations rather than by partnerships. It would greatly hamper their usefulness if all the daily current purchases and sales of merchandise could be made only by resolution of directors, or that the public dealing with their officers would do so at the peril of having their contracts repudiated when they might happen to be unfavorable to the corporation, or less profitable than was anticipated when made. Suppose an incorporated mercantile house of San Francisco should, in its corporate name, signed by its secretary, and on the verbal authority of the president and one other of the five directors, cable an order to a Paris house for a bale of dry goods of a kind and value previously purchased from the latter by the former. Must the Paris house demand and receive an authenticated copy of a resolution by the board of directors of the San Francisco house, authorizing the order for goods, before the Paris house could safely fill the order? Suppose the Paris house should ship the goods, and on arrival it happened that they had depreciated in value, and the San Francisco house repudiated the contract, claiming their right to do so under the rule now contended for. A system of law that would tolerate such an evasion of responsibility would be unworthy of a civilized people."

In Leitch v. Marx, 21 Cal. App. 208, 213, 131 P. 328, 330, the rule is thus stated: "Under all the authorities, the president or manager or other officer having direct superintendence of the affairs of a corporation may transact for and bind it in all matters coming within its ordinary course of business."

We are satisfied that the order was binding on the appellant corporation.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by J. H. Burk and wife against the Extrafine Bread Bakery and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joe Crider, Jr., and Elber H. Tilson, both of Los Angeles, and Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiffs, husband and wife, instituted this action to recover damages for severe personal injuries sustained by the wife, and for consequential damage to the husband, occasioned by the plaintiff wife being struck by a motortruck owned by the defendant bakery and operated by its employee, the defendant Harry B. Way. The case was tried by a jury, which rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs in the sum of $10,750. Judgment was entered in that amount, and the defendants have appealed, urging that the evidence establishes contributory negligence on the part of the injured wife, as a matter of law, and that the trial court erred in instructing the jury.

[1] Appellants argue that all of the credible evidence establishes that the wife was guilty of contributory negligence. The contention calls for but little consideration, for the evidence bearing on the actual happening of the accident is hopelessly conflicting, and presents a case for the consideration of the trial court and the jury, and not one for an appellate court. The testimony on the part of the plaintiffs abundantly supports the verdict of the jury; the testimony on the part of the defendants would support a verdict in their favor. The accident happened on Holt avenue, a highway leading from Pomona to Ontario, in the county of San Bernardino, between 4 and 5 o'clock on a foggy morning, July 3, 1926. It is the theory of the plaintiffs that while Mrs. Burk was walking along the left side of the avenue in an easterly direction, and distant two or three feet northerly from the paved portion of the highway, the defendants' motortruck, also proceeding in an easterly direction, without any occasion therefor, left the concrete pavement, swerved to the left, also in a northerly direction, and, after striking Mrs. Burk, ran on for some distance until it came to an orchard bordering the highway, where it overturned. Mrs. Burk was severely injured on the left side of her head, body, and limbs. The theory of the defendants is that plaintiffs had stopped their automobile on the south half of the paved portion of Holt avenue, and were standing on the paved portion on the left, or northerly, side of the automobile; that defendants' truck, approaching from the west, to avoid running down the plaintiffs, turned to the left, whereupon Mrs. Burk ran suddenly out upon the north half of the pavement, and the driver, Way, swerved the motortruck still farther to the left in a northerly direction to avoid striking her; that Mrs. Burk ran directly into the side of the motortruck as it was being swerved to the left, and was knocked down by the collision; that had she remained standing beside the automobile on the south half of the pavement she would not have been struck.

The evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs placed Mrs. Burk, after being struck, as lying unconscious, on the northerly graveled portion of the highway, almost in the gutter alongside the orchard, and immediately behind the overturned truck. The evidence for the defendants is that, following the accident, she was lying in the center of the paved portion of the roadway. Both plaintiffs testified that their automobile had been in collision with an automobile driven by an unnamed party just prior to the injury to Mrs. Burk; that they had driven their automobile on to the right graveled side of the paved highway, had stopped, and had gone back to talk to the driver of the other machine, which was on the north side of the roadway and west of Ramona avenue; that Mrs. Burk was walking back from that place to their own automobile, but was traveling on the north side of the highway on the graveled portion, and a number of feet north of the paved portion. Mrs. Burk testified that, after crossing Ramona avenue she was suddenly aware of a light about her on the highway; that she looked behind her, saw the lights of an automobile, and in less than a second's time was run down by the truck approaching her from the rear. Mr. Burk testified that when he was standing by the automobile with which his own had been in collision, he saw the truck approaching from the west and some distance away. It was coming rapidly along the center of the paved portion of the highway; that, after crossing Ramona avenue and before reaching the place where the automobile of the plaintiffs was standing, the truck turned to the left and north and off the paved portion of the roadway, striking Mrs. Burk. The defendant, Way, driver of the truck, testified that the automobile of the plaintiffs was stopped on the southerly paved portion of the highway; that the plaintiffs were standing by it; that after crossing Ramona avenue he saw the standing automobile, and gradually veered to the left to avoid striking the plaintiffs; that Mrs. Burk ran suddenly into the path of his truck, and was struck by the side of the machine as he swerved it still farther to the left to avoid hitting her. Aside from other contradictions in the testimony, the defendant Way was contradicted by plaintiff Mr. Burk and by a disinterested witness, Olsen, as to a conversation, immediately after the collision, in which Way stated that he did not see Mrs. Burk before she was struck.

The jury could take any view of the facts justified by the evidence, and on appeal, and with a record like the one now before us, we must assume that it adopted the theory of the plaintiffs, which finds support in the evidence, and which accords with the verdict. Simmons v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 60 Cal. App. 140, 143, 212 P. 641.

[2-5] The appellants complain of certain instructions. The plaintiffs both testified that Mrs. Burk was walking in an easterly direction along the graveled portion of the roadway, and several feet off the paved portion. The truck approached from the west, and behind the plaintiffs. If those were the facts, and, in order to arrive at the verdict, the jury must have accepted them as the established facts, Mrs. Burk was in a situation which justified the trial court in instructing the jury that Mrs. Burk, "as a pedestrian was under no legal duty to keep a constant lookout back or constantly watch behind her to see whether she was in danger of being struck or run down by any vehicle approaching her from the rear; therefore she was not guilty of negligence or contributory negligence in not doing so, even should [the jury] find she did not." By another instruction the jury was told that: "It is the settled law in this state that pedestrians, meaning persons walking upon the highway, have a right to travel anywhere upon the public highway, and it is, therefore, not negligence for them to do so." That is the law in this state. Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 95, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027. Therefore, a pedestrian is not guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, because of a failure to look behind him and discover an approaching car which may heedlessly run him down. Devecchio v. Ricketts, 66 Cal. App. 334, 226 P. 11. A person traveling on foot on a part of the road, and under circumstances where he may reasonably look for vehicles approaching him from in front, but may not contemplate that an automobile will come up behind him, is not under a legal obligation to look back to see whether he is in danger of being struck from behind (Raymond v. Hill, 168 Cal. 473, 482, 143 P. 743; Fahey v. Madden, 58 Cal. App. 537, 539, 209 P. 41), and the fact that one does not keep a constant watch behind for an approaching vehicle while walking near the paved portion of the highway, does not show a want of ordinary care on his part, nor constitute negligence per se (O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 49, 141 P. 809).

[6] At another point in the charge, the court told the jury that it was the duty of the driver of defendants' automobile to anticipate that he might meet persons at any point on the highway, and he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, "keep a proper lookout for them, and keep his machine under such control as would enable him to avoid a collision with another person using care and caution," and that a failure, if any, on his part to use that care was negligence. Objection is made by appellants to the use of the words "proper lookout," it being argued that their use permitted the jury to speculate upon what might or might not constitute a proper lookout, without regard to what an ordinarily prudent man would have done under the circumstances. This instruction was, no doubt, based upon the law as decided by this court in Rush v. Lagomarsino, 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066; and what was said in the case of Ballos v. Natural (Cal. App.) 269 P. 972, concerning the use of the words "proper lookout," may well apply here. It was there held (page 973) that the employment of the word "proper" to indicate the care required of a defendant means only the exercise of that degree of care which a prudent man should use under like circumstances, and which is the degree of care which the law imposes upon the other. In this, as in that case, the jury was fully and fairly instructed as to the degree of care required of both parties. Therefore, the instruction was not misleading, or unduly subject to speculation.

[7] The court also instructed the jury that if, after taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances proved in the case, it should "find that the plaintiffs have established their case as charged in the complaint," it should find damages in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants. Appellants contend that this instruction omits entirely any requirement that the negligence alleged in the complaint should be the direct and proximate cause of the injuries complained of, and omits any condition that plaintiffs should have been free from contributory negligence. We do not regard this portion of the charge as such a formula instruction as to require all the elements of an instruction of that nature to be present. The court read to the jury the charge of negligence contained in the complaint, and told it "that if you find that the defendants were guilty of the negligence thus charged and that the same was the sole proximate cause of any injuries to the said Emma Burk, then you will find damages in favor of the plaintiffs. * * *" In other instructions the jury was correctly and fully informed on the law of proximate cause and contributory negligence, and of the rights of persons using the highways, and as to the proper application of the law to the facts and circumstances of this case.

[8, 9] Lastly, it is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury respecting the damages to be allowed to the plaintiffs. The instruction to which this complaint is addressed is one relating only to the consequential damages to be allowed to the husband and coplaintiff of the injured woman. It is as follows: "If you should conclude that the plaintiffs, J. H. Burk and Emma Burk, should recover herein, and if you further find that Emma Burk before the accident in controversy was in charge of the household of, and performed the usual duties therein for her husband, J. H. Burk, and shall further believe that she has been unable since said accident, and will be unable in the future for any length of time, to perform the same services by reason of any injuries received in the accident in controversy here, then I instruct you that you may find for the plaintiff, J. H. Burk, such sum in damages as will reasonably and fairly compensate for such loss of services, and in addition thereto you will allow him such sum as the evidence shows he has necessarily and reasonably incurred or paid in employing physicians and surgeons to treat his said wife, together with any reasonable and necessary amount paid or incurred for hospital and ambulance bills, in all not exceeding the amount alleged therefor, to-wit, $10,198.00." Exception is taken to the use of the words "believe that she * * * will be unable," as contravening section 3283 of the Civil Code, which provides that damages may be awarded in a judicial proceeding for detriment resulting after the commencement of the action "or certain to result in the future." The complaint is that the jurors were not told that they could consider damages certain, or reasonably certain, to result in the future, but were left to speculate as to the result of the injuries, "or believe that she would be unable" to render the same services for her husband and family as before the accident. The instruction was loosely drawn, but, read in the light of all the instructions comprising the charge, the criticism becomes highly technical. In the first place, as noted, the instruction relates to the consequential damages resulting to the husband and coplaintiff of the injured wife through loss of her services in the household and for the expenses incidental to her care and treatment. There was much testimony concerning the extent of the injury suffered by Mrs. Burk, and her physical condition before and after she was injured. That she was severely injured is not disputed. There was considerable evidence touching her inability to perform her household duties to the extent she did before she was hurt. Touching her personal injuries, the jury was properly instructed that it should consider their extent and nature and to what extent any of them were permanent in character, as well as the physical pain and mental anxiety which she "has suffered, or will certainly suffer in future because of her injuries." Objection to the use of the word "believe" is hypercritical. It was used in the same sense as the words "conclude" and "find" which preceded it. "To believe is to exercise belief in; to credit upon the authority or testimony of another; to be persuaded of the truth of; * * * to regard, accept, or hold as true." Webster's International Dictionary. Language used by this court in Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 113, 117, 91 P. 522, cited by appellants as sustaining their criticism, must be read in connection with the record in that case which we have had produced from our files. We find that the court was there considering instructions which told the jury that it might consider the pain and anxiety and the physical and mental suffering which the plaintiff there "may suffer in the future." The citation, Pennsylvania Co. v. Files, 65 Ohio St. 403, 62 N. E. 1047, in the Melone Case, was not properly explained, for all that the Ohio court said that was germane to the Melone Case was: "The jury in assessing prospective damages should have been confined to such as were reasonably certain to follow from the injury complained of." In this case, if the jury "concluded" that the plaintiffs should recover, and "believed" that because of her injuries Mrs. Burk would be "unable in the future" to perform the same services that she had theretofore rendered in her household, all as instructed by the court, it must have been persuaded that the loss of her services was a detriment "certain to result in the future." However, we see no reason why experienced counsel will persist in asking trial courts to give inartificially drawn instructions, only to be called upon to spend much of their own energy and our time in defending them.

[10] An appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The appeal in this case from such order is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CROCE. (Cr. 3231.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1929.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 273—General plea of guilty of murder, first degree, foreclosed any question of defendant's sanity when homicide was committed (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, $\S$ 4).

Where, on day of trial, defendant through his counsel was permitted to withdraw his general plea of not guilty and special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity and enter a general plea of murder in the first degree, any question of defendant's sanity at time homicide was committed was thereby foreclosed, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, $\S$ 4.

2. Homicide $\S$ 270—Evidence held insufficient as matter of law to create doubt as to sanity, and refusal to submit question to jury was not abuse of discretion (Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 1367, 1368).

In prosecution for murder, in which accused entered general plea of guilty of murder, first degree, evidence held insufficient as a matter of law or fact to create in mind of court a doubt as to the sanity of defendant, within Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 1367, 1368, and trial court's refusal to submit question of defendant's present sanity to jury did not constitute abuse of discretion.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 331—Burden of proving insanity is on one asserting it.

The burden of proving insanity is on the party asserting it.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Mario Croce was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Thomas and Will Van Dyke, both of Ukiah, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Chas. Jones and Lionel Browne, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Lilburn I. Gibson, Dist. Atty., of Ukiah, for the People.

SEAWELL, J. Upon the plea of guilty to an indictment charging the defendant with murder, the trial court, upon a hearing conducted for the purpose of fixing the punishment which the defendant should suffer, determined that he was guilty of murder in the first degree and adjudged that as the penalty therefor he should suffer death. Section 190, Pen. Code.

Three grounds of appeal are presented: First, that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence; second, that the finding that the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree is not sustained by the evidence; third, that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a suspension of judgment and refusing his request for a trial by jury for the purpose of determining, as provided by sections 1367, 1368, Penal Code, the question as to the defendant's sanity at the time of trial. Said sections read as follows:

"1367. A person cannot be tried, adjudged to punishment, or punished for a public offense, while he is insane.

"1368. If at any time during the pendency of an action up to and including the time when defendant is brought up for judgment on conviction a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant, the court must order the question as to his sanity to be submitted to a jury; and the trial or the pronouncing of the judgment must be suspended until the question is determined by their verdict, and the trial jury may be discharged or retained, according to the discretion of the court, during the pendency of the issue of insanity."

The specific act charged against the defendant was the taking of his wife's life at Elk, more commonly known as Greenwood, situated in the county at Mendocino, this state, on the 26th day of December, 1928. Both the defendant and his wife had arrived at middle life and were natives of Italy, where their eldest daughter was born. The other five children were born in this country. The husband and wife resided at Greenwood for a number of years with their family, and finally acquired the property known as the Union Hotel, which they conducted for some time; the wife doing the cooking and the greater part of the work incidental to such a business. The property was incumbered. On February 1, 1928, both joined in a lease of said property to one Vellutini upon negotiations conducted by the defendant. The lease contained a provision that the deceased should "continue to work in said place and attend to the kitchen and board the family, receiving in compensation sixty dollars per month for her services in said place." The lease provided for an option to purchase said hotel property. The terms and conditions of said lease and option having no bearing on the questions presented by the appeal, no further consideration will be given to that subject.

The domestic relations of the defendant and his wife had, for many years prior to the homicide, been frequently openly disturbed. The evidence is overwhelming that he was unusually cruel in his general course of treatment of his wife and children, and upon several occasions in bursts of anger, aroused by an excessive use of intoxicating liquors, he inflicted physical injuries upon his wife and on one occasion upon his eldest daughter. His children held him more or less in dread. His notion, as expressed by him, was that he should keep them reminded that he was the "boss." He was also addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. The wife had made repeated complaints to the justice of the peace of the township in which Greenwood is situate that her husband had made threats against her life and she feared he would execute his threats, but when told that nothing could be done unless she made a formal criminal charge against him, she refused to make such charge, giving as her reason that she did not want her husband in jail, and that she would not do it. He was arrested and detained in jail for a short time upon one occasion for a battery made or assault committed upon said daughter.

The wife finally filed an action for divorce against defendant in the superior court of the county of Mendocino, charging him with treating her extremely cruel. The defendant consulted a lawyer upon several occasions, and, while he made no formal appearance and his default was entered, he was present at the hearing of the proceeding. Following the conclusion of the proceeding, to wit, on October 31, 1928, the court made its interlocutory decree, which was thereafter filed with the clerk, granting the wife a decree of divorce from the defendant and appellant upon the ground of extreme cruelty. The decree awarded the care, custody, and control of the minor children to the wife and also directed that defendant pay to his wife the monthly sum of $50 for the care, education, and maintenance of said minors. The hotel property, found to be community property, was assigned to the wife absolutely as her separate property.

For some time prior to the homicide the defendant was in and out of Greenwood, visiting in San Francisco and elsewhere. In August or September, 1928, he fell from a fruit tree while engaged in gathering fruit near Santa Cruz and suffered a fracture of the leg and received minor bruises about the shoulder and head. Said injuries in no way affected his mentality.

Subsequent to the execution of said lease, defendant began to suspect that undue intimacy existed between Vellutini and his wife. Mrs. Croce and her children occupied rooms on the ground floor adjoining the kitchen. Several of her children shared the room with her. Vellutini occupied a room on the second floor facing the stairway. The defendant claims that upon one occasion he and a friend of his made an unexpected entry into the lower floor of the hotel and Vellutini made a rapid exit from Mrs. Croce's room. Other incidents which were related by him would likely have a tendency to arouse suspicion in a husband who had reasoned himself into the belief that his wife had transferred her affections from him to another. Those who were in the best position to generally observe Mrs. Croce's actions, as well as her children, resented the suggestion that there was any ground for defendant's belief that the relations between her and Vellutini were improper. Her reputation for chastity seems to have been above suspicion so far as the neighborhood was concerned. It is clear from the evidence presented upon said proceedings that the defendant grew more suspicious as time went on, and upon one occasion Vellutini ejected him from the hotel because of his accusations as to said improper relations with Mrs. Croce. Throughout all of the period of domestic trouble and practically at all other times mentioned herein, the defendant was more or less affected with intoxicating liquors. He was seldom, if ever, in a condition of total incapacity, but was habitually under its irritating influence. He complained bitterly to others upon a number of occasions of being deprived of the care, custody, and control of his children and the orders assigning the community property to his wife and requiring him to pay the sum of $50 for the education and maintenance of said minors. The wife, he claimed, was training the children to have nothing to do with him and he was not allowed to visit with them. He had made threats against the lives of both Vellutini and his wife. About a month prior to the homicide he purchased a pistol and cartridges. Returning to Greenwood about a week before the homicide with a friend, he took a room next door to the Union House. He sent his friend to talk with his wife and inform her that if she would give him $250 he would leave Greenwood, knowing that she was in an uneasy state of mind as long as he was near her. She replied to the request or demand that before giving it to him she would burn it in her kitchen stove. This answer was conveyed to defendant and seemed to have perceptibly stung him, as did other refusals of his propositions.

On Christmas day he met one of the children and asked the child if he could eat Christmas dinner with the children and the child replied that it did not know. His testimony is that he went to his room in the hope of being called when dinner was to be served, but he waited in vain for a call. Afterwards he ate with a friend. That night he went to bed at an early hour, meditating upon what his course should be. He arose at his usual waking hour, at about 5:30, armed himself, and placed himself at the kitchen door, knowing that his wife would resume her duties at about that hour. His testimony was that he intended to shoot either Vellutini or his wife, whichever he should first see. The wife was the first to present herself. Without uttering a word, standing at a distance of not more than a few feet from her, he began firing at her and fired four bullets into her body, in rapid succession, two of which inflicted mortal injuries. She ran to her eldest daughter's bedroom, mortally wounded, screaming: "He killed me; he killed me; I knew he would do it some day." The suddenly awakened daughter laid her across her bed where she expired a few minutes thereafter. The defendant being familiar with the adjoining premises, ran to and concealed himself in the lower room of a tankhouse, located some 75 feet from the place where he fired the shots, where he remained until discovered some three hours and a half thereafter. He had reloaded his pistol and remarked thereafter that he had plenty of cartridges left for Vellutini had he appeared. He was observed in the tankhouse by a little girl, and soon thereafter Sheriff Byrnes, who had arrived from Ukiah, the county seat, in company with another officer, Conway, walked out to the tankhouse and the sheriff called to him that he wanted to see him, and the defendant answered, "All right," and came out. He said he had been waiting for the sheriff to arrive to surrender himself to him. He was placed under arrest and on the following day made a statement in which he specifically detailed the grounds upon which he predicated charges of his wife's infidelity, and he went at some length into what he claimed to be the causes that led to his separation from his family and prompted him to commit the crime. The causes stated by him were put in the light most favorable to himself and may be epitomized in the following excerpt taken from his somewhat lengthy statement:

"Then Christmas come, the 25th, and my brother come in from Santa Cruz to have Christmas with the family, because my brother he loan me the money to buy the hotel. I tell my kids on the outside, 'You think Mama let me go inside and eat dinner with you kids and my brother too, like we used to do before?' Last Christmas I was in the hospital, and those kids say 'I don't know,' and I say 'That's all right'—I get disgusted.

"Q. That was on Christmas morning? A. And all of the people say 'What's the matter they don't let you go inside?' and I say if I catch Vellutini there I shoot Vellutini and if I catch my wife I shoot her—which one show up first. I wanted to clean up the scandal.

"Q. You had it in your mind that you were going in there and find Vellutini—if you found him you would shoot him and if you didn't find him you would shoot your wife? A. Yes.

"Q. And early yesterday morning you made up your mind you were going in the hotel and if Vellutini was there you would shoot him and if not you would shoot her, is that right? A. Yes.

"Q. So you went to the hotel? A. In front of the back door at five o'clock in the morning and she open the door and I see my wife and I shoot her.

"Q. What did you have? A. Pistol—thirty-two; I never thought to kill her with a small pistol like that.

"Q. She opened the door and you just shot her? A. I shot her two times and after I look I see four shells; I was crazy.

"Q. When she came to the door you didn't look for Vellutini at all? A. She was alone; Vellutini was not there; he don't get up.

"Q. What did you do then? A. I just shoot her in front of the door and I run around to the tankhouse and wait for the sheriff to come down; I could tell the sheriff's voice and then I come out.

"Q. Was she facing you when you shot her, —were you looking at her or she looking at you? A. To tell you the truth I don't know nothing about it.

"Q. Had you been drinking? A. No, sober.

"Q. Hadn't had a drink all night. A. No, I make up my mind to finish that scandal, that's all.

"Q. When did you make up your mind to do that—to kill one of them,—yesterday morning or day before? A. Christmas night.

"Q. When you asked the children if they would let you and your brother eat dinner and they said they didn't know, then you made up your mind soon after that you would kill them? A. Yes, that's right."

[1] Three attorneys of recognized ability and high standing at the bar of this state were appointed by the court to represent the defendant, and a fourth attorney, ranking equally as high, was added in place of one who had withdrawn from the case. Without hope of compensation they devoted themselves unsparingly to defendant's cause, and became earnest, if not exceptionally zealous, advocates in his defense. Upon arraignment the general plea of not guilty was entered and also the special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Upon the day of trial, after mature deliberation, the defendant, through his counsel, was permitted to withdraw his former general plea of not guilty and the special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity and enter a general plea of murder in the first degree. This action under the statute foreclosed any question of defendant's sanity at the time the homicide was committed. Section 1026, Pen. Code (as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, § 4). On this issue, however, it is proper to observe that there was no question but that the defendant was legally responsible for the crime committed, as the testimony of many witnesses, including his own testimony, indisputably proved that he fully understood the nature and quality of the act he committed and he knew it was wrong and a violation of law to commit it.

[2] At the proceedings had upon the withdrawal of said pleas the defendant was personally interrogated by the trial judge as to whether or not he desired to enter a plea of guilty, and he replied that he did, and, when asked what his plea was, replied: "I plead guilty, I shoot her, but don't intend to kill her." The court, not being satisfied with that sort of plea, asked the defendant the pointed question as to whether he pleaded guilty to the charge of murder, and the defendant gave the following qualified answer: "Not murder; I don't know what I was doing." Again the court insisted that he must enter an unqualified plea to the charge of murdering his wife, and the defendant replied: "I plead guilty, but I don't try to do that." Again the court asked the defendant if he pleaded guilty to the charge of murder, and the defendant responded, "No, not murder; I plead not guilty to cold blood." At this point one of the attorneys interceded and explained to the court that the defendant wished to enter a plea of guilty provided he be permitted to produce evidence in mitigation of the punishment. The trial judge then said he wished to know if the defendant entered a plea of guilty to the charge of murder. The defendant thereupon replied: "Yes; I want my witnesses and everything." The court informed him that he could have his witnesses at the hearing and again asked if he pleaded guilty to the crime charged against him and the defendant answered, "Yes." It is very clear from the proceedings that the defendant, before entering his plea of guilty, wanted to be assured that he would have the right to offer evidence in order to reduce the punishment from the death penalty to life imprisonment or a lesser punishment and did not purpose to prejudice any right in that respect by his plea. The plea having been entered, the jurors present to try the cause were dismissed. The prosecution thereupon proceeded with its witnesses to establish the facts and circumstances of the crime and the defense was allowed until the following day to offer evidence in mitigation of the punishment. At the conclusion of the proceeding conducted for the purpose of determining the degree of the murder of which the defendant was guilty and whether there existed any facts or circumstances which would warrant the court in mitigating the punishment from the death penalty to imprisonment, during which much evidence was adduced directed to the mental status of the defendant, the trial judge announced that nothing appeared in the evidence that would warrant him in relieving the defendant from the extreme penalty of the law, as the evidence showed without conflict that the defendant was guilty of willful, deliberate, and premeditated murder. The court thereupon determined that the defendant must suffer death for his crime and set a day certain for pronouncing judgment, on which day counsel for defendant, upon the reconvening of court, moved for the arrest of further proceedings, particularly the pronouncing of judgment, and requested that the question as to the present sanity of the defendant be determined by a jury under the provisions of section 1368, Penal Code, and other kindred sections. Counsel, in making his motion, stated that the defense had no further evidence to offer touching the issue of defendant's present sanity, but thought the evidence taken in the proceedings was sufficient to create a doubt in the mind of the court as to the sanity of the defendant and specially stressed the testimony of one of the attorneys for the defendant in the case and the testimony of another attorney who had withdrawn from the case. The ground urged was that said attorneys testified that they were not able to get rational assistance from the defendant in the preparation of his case and believed his mind to be impaired. The argument stressed in the court below and repeated here is that the defendant, by slaying his wife, "thought he was righting a worse wrong in correcting the scandal going on in connection with his family." At the conclusion of full arguments on the motion to submit the issue of defendant's then mental condition to a jury, the court denied the motion and pronounced the formal judgment that defendant suffer death as the penalty for the murder of which he stood convicted.

We have read the entire record of the proceedings had in the trial court, which includes the testimony given by the defendant at the hearing, and fail to find any substance in the contention that the evidence was sufficient as a matter of law or fact to create in the mind of the court a doubt as to the sanity of the defendant. Applying the rules by which human motives are ordinarily determined, the act of the defendant was attributable to a feeling and was consummated with a purpose of avenging the losses which he had sustained in both property and family relationship from causes which he insisted at the hearing he was not the author of and from which he should not be made to suffer. The testimony of the defendant is a complete refutation of the claim that he was unable to give assistance to his attorneys in the conduct of his case. The familiar rule formulated by Blackstone and since restated by appellate courts of this state (People v. West, 25 Cal. App. 369, 143 P. 793, 794), is in these words: "Also, if a man in his sound memory commits a capital offense, and before arraignment for it he becomes mad, he ought not to be arraigned for it, because he is not able to plead to it with that advice and caution that he ought And if, after he had pleaded, the prisoner becomes mad, he shall not be tried—for how can he make his defense? If after he be tried and found guilty, he loses his senses before judgment, judgment shall not be pronounced; and if after judgment he becomes of nonsane memory execution shall be stayed, for, peradventure, says the humanity of English law, had the prisoner been of sound memory he might have alleged something in stay of judgment and execution."

[3] The foregoing rule does not fit the appellant's case. He showed a good memory and was able to reason from cause to effect and recounted his domestic difficulties covering a series of years with meticulous detail. He fixed dates and named places and persons in the narration of his matrimonial troubles with more than ordinary accuracy, and he gave his story at least the show of plausibility. Aside from the strength of his own testimony as to his sanity, witnesses were called who had known the defendant for a number of years and gave added evidence of his present sanity at the hearing, as well as at all other times during their acquaintanceship with the appellant. It is the law that the burden of proving insanity is upon the party asserting it. There could exist no doubt as to the soundness of the trial court's determination of this issue if the rule had been the reverse.

In two comparatively recent cases, People v. Gilberg, 197 Cal. 306, 240 P. 1000, 1002, and People v. Sloper, 198 Cal. 238, 244 P. 362, we had occasion to construe section 1368, Penal Code, which cases may be cited in affirmance of the trial court in the instant case. In People v. Gilberg the court said: "The existence of a doubt as to the sanity of the defendant means, of course, any doubt that may be created in the mind of the trial court arising from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances which the situation may disclose, and he may, upon his own motion, in the exercise of a sound discretion, submit the question of the defendant's sanity to the determination of a jury. Such a doubt must be supported by facts and circumstances of a substantial character. This right does not arise merely because the defendant asserts insanity, however baseless the claim may be. To justify the dismissal of the jury or the suspension of a trial the court must entertain a doubt founded upon substantial grounds. In other words, there must exist reason to believe that the claim of insanity made on behalf of the accused is genuine and not simulated as a means of defeating or delaying the law's penalties in cases where all other means of evading punishment would seem hopeless. People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 150 P. 341, is in point."

On the question of judicial discretion the decision continues: "In the determination of this question, as in that of any other fact from oral evidence, he [court] of necessity, must be conceded to be the best judge of what the evidence shows, since he has before him many elements of fact which cannot be transmitted to paper, but which enable him to more correctly weigh the evidence, and exercise a wiser discrimination as to what it shows than one who reads but a naked statement of the evidence, without the presence of the witness. And so it has been held, and wisely, that the trial judge is to be accorded wide discretion and latitude in this respect; and his ruling will not be disturbed except where the evidence is so lacking as to leave no just room for question that the discretion has been improperly exercised. People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53; Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 414, 29 P. 1101; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 516, 36 P. 16; People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 52, 39 P. 204."

There is no room for the claim that the court in any manner abused its discretion or acted arbitrarily in the slightest degree. On the other hand, the court was patient, indulgent, and liberal in its rulings and conducted the proceedings in a manner which well becomes a trial court sitting in a hearing in which the right of a human being to live is the issue to be decided. We find that the defendant was denied no substantial right.

Judgment and orders affirmed.

GOODSPEED v. ASSOCIATED ALMOND GROWERS OF PASO ROBLES.
(L. A. 10019.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1929.

Vendor and purchaser — Evidence held to sustain finding that sale of land was made from unauthenticated map, and contract of sale was therefore void (St. 1907, p. 290, § 8).

Where contract of purchase described land as lots 10 and 12 and purchaser testified that vendor located land by use of unrecorded map, in action to rescind contract and to recover amounts paid thereunder on ground that contract was void because made in violation of provisions of St. 1907, p. 290, § 8, which required that no person shall sell land by reference to map unless such map has been certified, evidence held to sustain finding that sale of land was made from unauthenticated map.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Edith I. Goodspeed against the Associated Almond Growers of Paso Robles.

From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Griffith & Thornburgh and Wm. G. Griffith all of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Webster & Lyon, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

On June 25, 1920, respondent contracted with defendant to purchase 20 acres of land set to almond trees, described in the agreement of purchase as follows: " * * * And the said Buyer agrees to buy and pay for twenty acres of almond land situated in the Paso Robles District, California, which said land is described as follows, to wit: Lots 10 and 12 of Associated Almond Orchards, Loma Robles Tract, containing 20 acres of 4 year old trees."

Plaintiff visited the tract, and appellant's salesman showed her the property supposed to be covered by the contract, identifying its location, she claims, by the use of an unrecorded map in his possession and by pointing out its dimensions from certain individual trees in the tract. She paid the installments due on the purchase price of $16,000 until June 24, 1923, on which date her total payments aggregated $9,857, including interest and taxes. Thereafter she brought this action to rescind the contract and to recover the amounts paid thereunder upon the ground that it was null and void because made in violation of the provisions of the act of 1907 (St. 1907, p. 290, § 8), which require that no person shall sell or offer for sale any parcel of land by reference to any map or plat, unless such map or plat has been made, certified, indorsed, acknowledged, and filed in all respects as therein provided. Defendant by its answer denied that said sale was made by reference to an unrecorded map.

The court, however, found that the term "Lots Ten and Twelve" as used in said contract of purchase was intended by the defendant to and did indicate and designate two lots or subdivisions of a certain tract as delineated on the survey of said land and the map or plat thereof made by defendant prior to execution of the contract; that said map was used by defendant in offering for sale and selling plaintiff said property; that it had not been filed or recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Luis Obispo county or elsewhere; and in fact that no map or plat of said lands had ever been filed in the office of the said county recorder. The court accordingly gave judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant has appealed.

The description itself, as it appears in the contract, calls for the use of some map or plat for identification of the property, without which said description is plainly unintelligible and perhaps void for uncertainty. In short, an examination of the evidence shows that it is ample to sustain the findings made by the court that the sale was made from an unauthenticated map or plat, and hence brings into operation the rule many times stated by this court, that a contract to sell lots described only by reference to an unrecorded map, contrary to the provisions of the statute hereinabove referred to, is void and unenforceable and the purchaser thereunder may recover the amount paid by him. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14; Smith v. Bach, 54 Cal. App. 236, 201 P. 611; White v. Jacobs (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 1087; Hartzell v. Doolittle (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 527; *Krause v. Marine T. & S. CARLSON v. LANTZ. (L. A. 10014.) ★

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 14, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨426—Special administrator had authority to maintain action to have attorney declared trustee of property alleged to have been obtained from deceased by fraud.

Special administrator, appointed to preserve personal property and manage real estate and maintain all suits necessary to carry out these powers, had authority to maintain action to have attorney alleged to have obtained property from deceased by fraud, declared trustee of such property.

2. Trusts ⇨107—If relation of attorney and client existed, burden, in suit to declare trust, was on attorney to negative fraud in transaction in which he obtained property from deceased.

In action to have defendant declared trustee of property alleged to have been obtained from plaintiff's deceased by fraud of defendant, if relation of attorney and client existed between defendant and deceased, burden was on defendant to negative fraud in transaction.

3. Trusts ⇨110—Evidence, in suit to establish trust, held to support finding that attorney had gained advantage over aged client from whom he had obtained realty.

In action by special administrator of deceased to have attorney declared trustee of property, where attorney promising that he would see that client, since deceased, would not be in want of necessities of life, obtained property from aged client, weak in mind and easily influenced, evidence held to support finding that attorney had gained advantage over client.

4. Trusts ⇨110—Evidence, In suit to establish trust, held to show that attorney and client from whom attorney had obtained property had not dealt at arm's length.

In action by special administrator to have attorney declared trustee, where attorney obtained such property from aged client, since deceased, weak in mind and easily influenced, and had not suggested to client that she might obtain advice independent of his counsel, and there was indication that client had not consulted any other counsel, evidence held to show that parties had not dealt at arm's length.

5. Trusts ⇨377—Cost of photographs incurred in one action could not be taxed as cost of another action between same parties, although photographs were used in other action.

Where cost for photographs was incurred in will contest case between special administrator of estate and devisee under will, such cost could not be taxed in action by administrator to have such devisee declared trustee of property belonging to estate, although not itemized as cost in will contest case and used in case to have devisee declared trustee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by Harold Carlson, special administrator of the estate of Bertha Carlson, sometimes known as Bertha Carlson Witt and Bertha Schubert Witt, against Charles Lantz. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and an order taxing cost, defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed; order modified, and as modified, affirmed.

Newby & Newby and Winslow P. Hyatt, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Marshall Stimson and Noel C. Edwards, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff entered on the trial court's findings of fact and conclusions of law.

The plaintiff is a son of Bertha Carlson Witt, sometimes called Bertha Carlson or Bertha Schubert Witt, and sues in his representative capacity as special administrator of her estate. Bertha Carlson Witt died about February 5, 1923. Thereafter and about the 21st day of February, 1923, a will dated January 5, 1921, by which the decedent devised and bequeathed all of her property to the defendant, Charles Lantz, was filed by Lantz for probate. A proceeding contesting the probate of that will was instituted by the plaintiff. On March 9, 1923, the plaintiff procured letters as special administrator, and on December 4, 1923, he filed the original complaint in the present action. On May 14, 1924, a jury in the proceeding contesting the probate of the will returned three special verdicts, namely: (1) That said Bertha Carlson was of unsound mind on the 5th day of January, 1921; (2) that the alleged will of January 5, 1921, was procured by undue influence of Charles Lantz; (3) that the alleged will of January 5, 1921, was procured by the fraud of Charles Lantz. The judgment in favor of the contestant in that proceeding, who is the plaintiff here, was affirmed by this court. Estate of Witt, 198 Cal. 407, 245 P. 197.

[1] After the trial of the issues raised in the will contest, the plaintiff in this action by leave of court amended his complaint to conform to the facts adduced in that proceeding. There is no serious objection that the trial court, sitting as a court of equity, did not have the power and discretion to grant leave to file the amended complaint. Neither is the plaintiff's capacity to sue in his representative capacity seriously brought into question. The grant of power to collect and preserve all the personal property and all the rents, etc., of the real and personal property and all claims and demands of the estate, and take charge of and manage the real estate, and preserve the same from damage, etc., and commence, maintain, and defend all suits and other legal proceedings necessary to carry out these powers, contained in the order appointing the plaintiff as special administrator, was sufficient authority to commence and maintain the present action. These points will therefore not further be noticed.

The amended complaint, among other allegations, in substance alleges that at the time of her death Bertha Carlson Witt was the equitable owner and in the possession of certain described real property which comprises several lots and parcels of land in Carlson terrace, Elysian Heights tract, and Angeleno Heights tract in the city of Los Angeles; that in April, 1920, the decedent employed the defendant as her attorney to act for her in matters relating to the property described; that the decedent at that time was ill and frail, mentally and physically, and, imposing upon the confidence which the decedent reposed in him, the defendant, with fraudulent intent to obtain for his own gain all of the described property, by various described transactions procured the legal title either in himself or for his benefit in one Thomas A. Davis, a cousin of the defendant who resided at Goshen, Ind. The details of these transactions as alleged and proved are more fully stated in the opinion in the Estate of Witt, supra, which may be referred to for greater particularity. The complaint also alleges the conditions surrounding the execution of the will and the fact that the petition for probate of the will described as the estate left by the decedent only some personal property valued at about $250. The plaintiff sought to have the defendant declared a trustee of the legal title to the real property described and for an accounting. The trial court found that the decedent was the equitable owner and in the possession of the real property described and entered its judgment that the defendant holds the legal title of said property as trustee for the plaintiff as special administrator of the estate of Mrs. Witt and directing the defendant, or the county clerk in the event of his refusal, subject to a lien in defendant's favor in the sum of $6,816.16, payable within a year, to execute within 15 days a deed conveying the property described to the plaintiff as such administrator.

The main contentions made by the defendant by his answer, at the trial, and on this appeal, are that he was not acting as the attorney for Mrs. Witt, but was in fact acting only as her banker or other such agent to finance the recovery or redemption of the properties involved for their mutual benefit, and that the burden was therefore not on him to negative fraud in the transactions, but that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively the existence of any fraud on the defendant's part; that the plaintiff has not sustained that burden; that therefore the defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have been granted; that, at any rate or from any view, the transactions were fair and the parties were dealing at arm's length.

[2] As to the first contention, that the defendant was not acting as attorney in the matters and therefore the confidential relationship of attorney and client did not exist, it might be stated at the outset that the basis offered by the defendant for that assertion is his own opinion which he testified he arrived at after mature consideration, as against the trial court's finding based on other sufficient evidence in the record to support it that the relationship did exist at all times, and the admissions of the defendant on the will contest that he was acting as attorney for Mrs. Witt. However, looking only at the factual evidence produced at the trial of the present action, we are satisfied that, whatever may be its nominal designation, such a fiduciary and confidential relationship was established between the defendant and Mrs. Witt throughout all the transactions involved as to make it incumbent upon the defendant so to conduct himself that no suspicion could be cast in his direction. If therefore such a relationship or the relation of attorney and client did exist, the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

We are compelled to the conclusion, from a review of the record, that the trial court's finding that the relationship of attorney and client did exist at all times is fully supported by the evidence. Whether, therefore, such fraud was alleged or proved as would sustain the rulings and judgment in the absence of any such relationship is not necessary to be considered. The well-settled law as to the duties and burdens of an attorney in his relationship with his client are summarized by the following language used by this court in Estate of Witt, supra, at page 419 of 198 Cal., 245 P. 202: "All dealings between an attorney and his client for the benefit of the former are not only closely scrutinized, but are presumptively invalid on the ground of constructive fraud and such presumption can be overcome only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence. Not only must the attorney offer clear and satisfactory evidence that the transaction between himself and his client was fair and equitable and no advantage was taken by him, but he must also offer proof that the client was fully informed of all matters relative to the transaction and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length. Kissling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 91 Am. Dec. 644; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 105 P. 981; Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918." See, also, Civ. Code, §§ 2224, 2235.

[3] Whether the defendant planned or intended to gain an advantage over the fair value of his services is a question for the trial court, and if he did gain such an advantage then the burden was upon him to show that the transaction was fair. Pomeroy v. Collins, 198 Cal. 46, 69, 243 P. 657. There is sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the court's finding "that in all of the transactions between himself and Bertha Carlson, as evidenced by the various agreements between the said Charles Lantz and Bertha Carlson, * * * said Charles Lantz was seeking his own advantage rather than that of Bertha Carlson." The evidence fully supports the finding that an advantage was gained by the defendant. If the advantage be gained, then the burden is upon the defendant to show that the transactions were fair and that the parties dealt at arm's length, and unquestionably the defendant has not sustained that burden. It is claimed by him that four contracts dated May 17, 1920, whereby he was to receive certain shares or interests in the proceeds or profits realized from property redeemed or recovered were merged into and were superseded by a later agreement comprising what is designated as the "Happy New Year" letter written by Mrs. Witt on January 3, 1921, and the defendant's acceptance thereof. In the "Happy New Year" letter, so called because it contained that greeting before the salutation, Mrs. Witt expressed her realization that, due to illness, her days were short, that "something might happen rather suddenly," and requested the defendant to prepare a "paper" by which she would bequeath all of her property to him, leaving trinkets, etc., to her two boys. She expressed the assurance that Mr. Lantz, during her lifetime, would never see her in want, but that he or his successor would see to it that she would be supplied with the necessities of life and that provision would be made for her burial in Rosedale Cemetery; that she would, in case she sold anything, report to him the sale and "hand over" to him the proceeds therefrom, "or if in need hold or ask part of it, just as I or he sees best for me." In this letter Mrs. Witt also stated that "all of property which comes through Borden can be transferred at once," and closed with the statement, "Mr. Lantz will know best how and what else to write, as I have complete trust and confidence in him, God bless him." By his letter of acceptance, also dated January 3, 1921, the defendant agreed, in consideration of the proposed bequest and the request that he "perform certain services," that he would see to it that Mrs. Witt should not be in want, "that she will have substantial, of the necessities of life," that when she passes away he will comply with her wishes as to her burial, and expressed the desire that his son fulfill the agreement in the event of his death before Mrs. Witt's demise. It will be noted that it was at about this time that the will was executed. Pursuant to the arrangement set out in these letters the defendant paid to Mrs. Witt $60 a month up to the time she died, that is, for about two years, and paid her doctors' and nurses' bills. The court found that during that period he collected $2,409.25 in rentals and advanced in all $8,976.41 in connection with the property and to and for Mrs. Witt personally; that he was entitled to a fee of $250 for services rendered in a foreclosure proceeding, leaving as the net amount of advances the sum of $6,816.16. The evidence fairly supports the finding that, though the properties were partially incumbered, the defendant stood to gain many more times, the value of his net advances, and his services; that, as the trial court stated, "the value of the interest of Bertha Carlson in and to the property described * * * and to which the defendant obtained title, was many times greater than any consideration which the defendant furnished to the said Bertha Carlson." It was also in evidence that the properties had increased considerably in value since the defendant obtained title thereto and before Mrs. Witt's demise. In view of the seriously impaired condition of her mind and body and the short expectancy of life of Mrs. Witt, known both to herself and to the defendant, the so-called agreement cannot be said to bear the earmarks of a conscionable "trade."

[4] Neither is there any evidence in the record that the parties were dealing at arm's length. The defendant at no time during the transactions appeared to be interested in Mrs. Witt's obtaining advice independent of his counsel. He admitted that at no time did he suggest to her that she might do so and there is every indication that she did not consult any counsel outside of Mr. Lantz's office. The finding of the trial court that Mrs. Witt did not have any independent advice in connection with any of the transactions involved is sustained by the record. For the defendant merely to state that Mrs. Witt was free to seek independent advice had she so chosen does not sustain the burden on him of showing that the parties dealt at arm's length. A statement which is very pertinent to the case before us was made by this court in Pomero v. Collins, supra, at page 70 of 198 Cal., 243 P. 667: "Surely, a transaction such as has been outlined should command the close scrutiny of a chancellor. Whether the transactions contain within themselves the seeds of an iniquitous purpose is a question solely for his conscience, and his decree will not be disturbed if there be any substantial evidence to support his conclusion, even though an opposing conclusion may find some support in conflicting or contradictory evidence."

The trial court in the present case found that the allegation that Mrs. Witt was of unsound mind during the times involved was not true, but did find that she was weak in mind and easily influenced. This court in Estate of Witt, supra, doubted that the evidence sustained the jury's verdict of unsoundness of mind, but concluded that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict on the grounds of fraud and undue influence. Estate of Witt, supra, at page 414 of 198 Cal., 245 P. 197. But as suggested by this court in that case (page 419 of 198 Cal., 245 P. 197), the evidence of weakness of mind is nevertheless illuminating on the issues of fraud and undue influence. The defendant is fearful that this court will be swayed in its conclusions by the decision in the Estate of Witt, and that that case on the issues of fraud and undue influence will be considered res judicata of the issues in the present action. We have, however, carefully reviewed the record presented here without considering the question whether the judgment in Estate of Witt is res judicata on any of the issues involved in the present case, and the record compels the independent conclusion that all of the trial court's findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence and that no prejudicial error in the rulings and orders of the court was committed. Other points made on the case in chief do not require specific notice.

[5] There is also an appeal from the order taxing costs made on the motion of the defendant to tax the same. The motion was granted, but further items not stricken from the bill are not objected to. Item 31 in the sum of $28 was not incurred in this action, but was incurred for photographs in the former case (Estate of Witt, supra), in which case it was properly taxable. The fact that it was not itemized in the former case did not, we think, justify its inclusion in the present case even if the photographs were used herein. The other items objected to appear to have been properly included.

The judgment is affirmed. The order taxing costs is modified by striking therefrom item 31 in the sum of $28. As so modified, the order is affirmed.

SUN OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. UNION DRILLING & PETROLEUM CO.
(L. A. 9695.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 8, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨878(6)—Defendant, failing to appeal from part of judgment awarding balance on cross-complaint, was without right on appeal to review as respected further recovery.

Where defendant, in action for injunction alleging breach of contract to drill oil well, recovered a balance on its cross-complaint, and failed to appeal from that part of judgment, thereby presumably accepting payment of amount allowed, it was without right on appeal to review, in so far as right to recover damages or to recover on quantum meruit was concerned, since it was required either to seek a reopening of the whole issue or be precluded by amount awarded.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1172(1)—Appellate court cannot, where provisions of judgment are interdependent, reverse part complained of and permit remainder to stand.

Where provisions of judgment are interdependent, appellate court may not properly reverse judgment as to part complained of and permit the remainder to stand.

3. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Company, agreeing to drill oil well to depth of approximately 3,600 feet, was not entitled to recovery on failure to drill to specified depth.

Company, agreeing to drill oil well to an approximate depth of 3,600 feet under contract providing that, in event it should cease to perform work on well for period of 30 days, that owner could enter on premises and take over operation of well without any compensation, was not entitled to recovery on failure to drill well to specified depth, and thereafter attempting to put well on production by means constituting menace to property, with probability of injury.

4. Contracts ⇨278(1)—Recovery cannot be had under contract requiring full performance until completion, unless performance was excused or unavoidably prevented (Civ. Code, § 1511).

Where person agrees to do a thing for another for specified sum of money to be paid on full performance, he is not entitled to any part of the sum until he has himself done the thing agreed to do, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, or by operation of law, act of God, or public enemy, as specified in Civ. Code, § 1511.

5. Evidence ⇨129(6)—Court did not abuse discretion in refusing to allow proof of previous contract, as bearing on issue of necessity of drilling oil well to specified depth.

Where issue under contract to deepen oil well to depth of approximately 3,600 feet was whether well was to be completed to actual depth of 3,600 feet, in order to recover compensation therefor, the refusal to allow proof of previous contract between parties, showing acceptance of well drilled within 270 feet of approximate depth, held not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action by the Sun Oil Company of California against the Union Drilling & Petroleum Company, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion, in 277 P. 350.

Newby & Palmer, and Nathan Newby, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John B. Haas, John D. Home, and Oliver O. Clark, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The judgment is affirmed. This conclusion clearly results from the following statement of facts, taken from the findings of the court and properly supported by the evidence adduced upon the trial:

On February 7, 1924, plaintiff was the owner of well No. 5, located on block 1904 of the Vista Del Mar tract at Huntington Beach, Cal. On said date, said well being then 2,914 feet deep, plaintiff in writing engaged defendant to deepen it to "an approximate depth of 3,600 feet," defendant to be paid $40,000 for said work out of 50 per cent. of the gross first production from said well after its completion. The work was to be done in accordance with the rules, regulations, and orders of the California State Mining Bureau. Plaintiff was to furnish the rotary equipment, including approximately 3,200 feet of used 4-inch drill pipe, also fuel, light, and water, and to allow the use of its boilers for generation of steam, and was to do and perform certain other specified acts, but was to furnish no "labor, fixtures, material or otherwise" "than provided" in connection with said work, and was not to be put to any expense whatever for the drilling of said well, "except as hereinabove provided." Defendant was to furnish all other material, supplies, and services necessary and needful to drill and complete the said well to said depth, and specially covenanted to supply the necessary casing, etc., therefor.

Pursuant to said contract, defendant forthwith went into possession of said property and deepened said well to a depth of about 3,330 feet, reaching said depth on or about July 18, 1924. Between said date and the date of the filing of this suit, December 8, 1924, defendant remained in possession of said property, endeavoring by the use of various devices to put the well on production, and during said period a small quantity of oil was produced, which was sold and the proceeds divided in accordance with the plan prescribed by said contract. The well was never accepted by plaintiff as being completed at said depth, and plaintiff never in any respect waived full performance of said contract by defendant, and never relieved defendant from carrying out the agreement as originally drawn. Defendant failed, refused, and neglected, and continued to so fail, refuse, and neglect, to drill said well to any depth greater than 3,330 feet, and likewise refused to furnish the casing required to drill said well to said depth of 3,600 feet, and on November 25, 1924, it notified plaintiff that it did not intend to drill said well to said 3,600 feet, or to any greater depth than 3,330 feet. On the 8th day of December following, plaintiff brought the present action against defendant for an injunction, alleging breach of said contract on the part of defendant, and further that the work of defendant had been unskillfully done, and, unless defendant was restrained from experimenting with said well, it would be in such shape that it could never be completed, and praying for a permanent injunction and for damages.

Answering said complaint, defendant alleged that plaintiff acquiesced in and consented to the cessation of drilling at said depth of 3,330 feet, and consented to the attempts made by defendant to put said well upon production, and further pleaded that it had put said well on production by said acts, to which plaintiff had consented; that on or about July 18, 1924, plaintiff accepted possession of said well as completed, and continued in such possession until October 25, 1924, at which time defendant alleged it again took possession of said well for the purpose of attempting to improve the production thereof, which possession under said arrangement continued until the restraining order in this action was served upon it. Defendant admitted that the well had not been drilled to a depth of 3,600 feet, but denied that the contract made it necessary for it to drill to said depth. It further pleaded that it was the duty of plaintiff to furnish an additional string of casing to bring said well to said depth of 3,600 feet; that plaintiff had refused to comply with a request therefor, and further that oil to the value of $6,329.58 had been abstracted from said well; that defendant had received only $664.79 thereof, and was entitled to the balance of 50 per cent. of the gross amount received from said production; and asked for an accounting.

At the same time defendant filed its cross-complaint, claiming completion of said well and delivery of possession thereof to plaintiff on July 18, 1924; alleging that the $40,000 called for by said contract had been earned and should be collected from the production of said well, but that $664.79 only had been paid thereon, whereas $2,500 or more, at least, should have been paid to it on account. As a second cause of action, defendant pleaded the completion of said well under said contract, delivery of possession thereof to plaintiff as above set forth, and then set up the issuance of said injunction, with alleged resultant interference with production of oil in said well on account thereof; further, that had plaintiff allowed defendant to supervise the production therefrom, it would have received oil of a value sufficient to satisfy said contract; that for that reason defendant had been damaged in said sum of $40,000, less $664.79 paid thereon.

Answer was made to said cross-complaint, putting in issue all the material allegations thereof. The cause went to trial. Plaintiff was granted the injunction prayed for, and, while the court found that plaintiff had suffered damages, it also found that they were difficult to estimate, and so difficult that none were allowed. Defendant was denied all relief, both under its answer and cross-complaint, except the sum of $5,000 awarded it by the judgment, as a matter of equity, as and for the value of a 6¼-inch water casing placed in said well by order of said State Mining Bureau, the court holding in this respect that plaintiff had been benefited by this casing. Likewise defendant was allowed to retain the $664.79 received out of the sale of oil from the well. Defendant appealed from all of the judgment entered in said cause, except so much thereof as awarded it said sum of $5,000.

The only reasonable construction that may be put upon the findings of the court is that the court found that the operations conducted by defendant upon said property of plaintiff were not performed in a skillful or a good and workmanlike manner, and that they were hazardous and a menace to the property, with the probability of injury resulting to said well therefrom, and, if not restrained, they would prevent it ever being deepened to 3,600 feet, or any other depth. The deduction is also clear that, weighing the damages suffered by plaintiff on account of the failure to perform against the benefits resulting from partial performance the court declared a balance of $5,000 in defendant's favor. But defendant expressly failed to appeal from this portion of the judgment. Nevertheless it urges that it should have either damages to the extent of the balance of the contract price, or at least a quantum meruit recovery on the principle of acceptance by plaintiff of work done and material furnished that was beneficial to it, and to this end it invokes the doctrine of certain cases, which announce an exception to the general rule against recovery, to wit, cases where one party acting in good faith has partially performed, and the other party has accepted the part performed, and the same was of value to him and he is denied a recovery on the contract, but permitted a quantum meruit remuneration, citing Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 319, 19 P. 523, 1 L. R. A. 826; Jones & Laughlin, etc., Co. v. Doble Co., 162 Cal. 497, 505, 123 P. 290.

[1, 2] It is our conclusion that, in so failing to appeal from all the judgment and presumably accepting payment of the $5,000, appellant may not have reviewed either of these contentions, and, in fact, presents little, if any, substance for consideration on this appeal. This award was allowed at defendant's own request, and must be held properly allocated to one or the other of the contentions made by it. If so, this item is either damages for a breach of the contract by plaintiff, or it is a quantum meruit recovery for materials furnished in good faith that were of benefit to plaintiff and accepted by it. Upon either theory, it is the complete award allowed to defendant by the court, and disposes of the whole issue. Defendant expressly accepted this part of the judgment and omitted to appeal from it. By thus accepting expressly the benefit of this award on its cross-complaint, it may not be allowed to hold fast to that which it hath and appeal to the court for more relief in kind. It must seek a reopening of the whole issue, or be precluded by the amount awarded. Where the provisions of the judgment are interdependent as here, an appellate court may not properly reverse the judgment as to the part complained of, allowing the remainder to stand. This is the principle announced in the following cases: Walnut Irr. Dist. v. Burke, 158 Cal. 165, 110 P. 517; Preluzsky v. Pac. Co-op. Co., 195 Cal. 290, 293, 232 P. 970; Turner v. Markham, 152 Cal. 246, 92 P. 485. The case of Murphy v. Spaulding, 46 N. Y. 556, expounds the principle under facts similar to those of the case before us.

Under this holding, whether plaintiff did or did not breach the contract is immaterial, as is also the question of whether the injunction was or was not properly allowed. It would seem, therefore, that the propriety of the item of costs is about the only thing reviewable under this notice of appeal as drawn. However, no attack is leveled at the cost bill.

[3] But, viewing the case on its merits, under the finding of the court, a judgment for plaintiff and a denial of all relief to defendant would have been justified. The case as found offers no room for the principle of benefits received and accepted by plaintiff from partial performance. The contract was entire and indivisible, and contained the following covenant: "It is further understood and agreed that in the event said party of the second part shall cease to perform work upon said well for a period of 30 days, then and in that event the party of the first part may enter on said premises and take over the operation of said well without any compensation to the party of the second part. * * *"

[4] Defendant did not substantially perform, but after a partial performance refused to proceed further under its covenants. The case is, therefore, one within the general rule, stated by this court as follows: "Where a person agrees to do a thing for another for a specified sum of money to be paid on full performance, he is not entitled to any part of the sum until he has himself done the thing he agreed to do, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, or by operation of law, or by the act of God or the public enemy, as specified in section 1511 of the Civil Code." Carlson v. Sheehan, 157 Cal. 692, 696, 109 P. 29, 30. See, also, Snow Mt. W. & P. Co. v. Kraner, 191 Cal. 312, 325-327, 216 P. 589; Marchant v. Hayes, 117 Cal. 669, 49 P. 840; Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 170, 65 P. 391; Gale v. Dixon (Cal. App.) 267 P. 342.

[5] There is no ambiguity in the contract respecting the furnishing of casing. Defendant specifically covenanted to do this. Nor is there any room for the contention that 3,330 feet is "approximately" 3,600 feet. The court did not abuse its discretion in failing to allow proof of a previous contract between the parties, wherein a well drilled within 270 feet of the approximate depth was accepted as completed by the plaintiff. Special reasons may have existed for this action, one of which could have been the finding of production at the lesser depth. Be that as it may, no basis can be found for the review of the trial court's discretion in this behalf.

This disposes of all the questions urged by appellant.

BENGEL v. TRAEGER. (Civ. 6826.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 10, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 347(2)—Sixty days for appeal commences to run from date of entry on minutes of order granting nonsuit, though judgment of nonsuit is postponed (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 581, 664, 672, 939).

Sixty-day period for appeal from entry of judgment or order under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 939, held applicable to judgment of nonsuit, under section 581, from date of entry of nonsuit on minutes, and not from date of entry of judgment pursuant thereto, since section 581 makes entry on minutes effective for all purposes when so entered; judgments entered and docketed in compliance with sections 664 and 672 being decisions of the court.

2. Judgment $\S$ 270—Nonsuit is not decision in favor of either party as regards provisions for entry and docketing of judgments (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 664, 672).

If nonsuit is granted, no decision is rendered in favor of either of parties within requirements of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 664 and 672, relative to entry and docketing of judgments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge pro tem.

Action by E. M. Bengel against William I. Traeger. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for the motion.

Chas. M. Easton, of Los Angeles, opposed.

CRAIG, J. An action of the appellant against the respondent was tried in the superior court of Los Angeles county on October 25, 26, 29, and 30, 1928, on which last-mentioned date, the respondent's counsel having moved for a nonsuit, the minutes of the clerk recite: "Defendants' motion for nonsuit as to defendant Wm. I. Traeger in case No. 201623 is by the court granted." A formal judgment of nonsuit was signed and filed in said court on January 2, 1929, and was entered in book 701, at page 224, of Judgments, on the day following.

[1] The plaintiff appealed on March 26, 1929, "from that certain judgment of nonsuit therein made, rendered and filed in the said superior court, and docketed and entered therein on January 3rd, 1929." The respondent moved this court for a dismissal of the appeal, assigning as grounds therefor that it was not filed until after the judgment had become final, and that the time for appeal expired 60 days after October 30, 1928. The appellant contends that such time did not commence to run until the judgment was entered.

Both parties rely upon section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

"An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered, in the following cases: * * *

"5. By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. * * *

"The dismissals mentioned in subdivisions three, four and five of this section must be made by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered; but the clerk of the court must note such orders in his register of actions in the case." (Italics ours.)

It is contended by the appellant that the "entry" of the fact that a nonsuit is granted must, for the purposes of appeal, be made in the same manner as is done in rendering any judgment upon the merits of the case effective for that purpose. Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

"An appeal may be taken from any judgment or order of a superior court from which an appeal lies under any provision of this code, or of any other code, or under any other statute, within sixty days from the entry of said judgment or order." (Italics ours.)

Conceding, for the sake of argument, that appellant's theory was correct, it would not aid him, since he admits that the formal judgment was entered in the office of the clerk on January 3d, and that he did not appeal until March 26th. But we think the reading of the sections quoted is too plain to require extended discussion. Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that an appeal be taken within 60 days from the entry of a judgment or order. Section 581 provides that a judgment of nonsuit may be entered upon the minutes of the court when the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case, and, while the clerk must note it in the register of actions in the case, the entry upon the minutes is "effective for all purposes when so entered." This interpretation of section 581 was expressed in Commis v. Guaranty Oil Co., 29 Cal. App. 139, 154 P. 882, 883, wherein it was said:

"It would seem under the present state of the law that none of the orders or judgments provided to be made by section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, need be entered in the judgment book at all or appear in any record except that containing the minutes of the court. This conclusion is sustained by the decisions of Matthai v. Kennedy, 148 Cal. 699, 84 P. 37, and Pacific Paying Co. v. Vizelich, 141 Cal. 4, 74 P. 352. We do not believe that a formal judgment of dismissal must follow the order or judgment of nonsuit, for the judgment of nonsuit in itself constitutes a dismissal of the action."

[2] It may also be said that, in addition to making an entry in the minutes effective for all purposes, said section merely specifies a clerical duty of noting it in the register of actions. Judgments entered and docketed in compliance with sections 664 and 672 of the Code of Civil Procedure are decisions of the court. If a nonsuit be granted, no decision is rendered in favor of either of the parties. Ferris v. Baker, 127 Cal. 520, 59 P. 937, cited by appellant, reserved decision of the question before us, and is not applicable.

The facts here are different from those presented in Gullick v. Interstate Drilling Co. (App.) 279 P. 828, where entry of a minute order did not appear to have been entered.

The motion to dismiss is granted. The appeal is dismissed.

GILES v. WELLING et al. (Civ. 6949.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

1. Brokers ⇐4—Broker's bond given prior to 1925 amendment held not to cover conversion or misappropriation of client's funds by broker (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended; St. 1925, p. 962).

Complaint declaring on broker's bond, given pursuant to provisions of St. 1917, p. 673, as amended and prior to amendment of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 962), alleging that defendant sold securities for plaintiff, and out of proceeds kept $7,000, and fraudulently failed to reinvest such sum or return it to plaintiff, held not to state a cause of action, since such bond did not cover case of conversion or misappropriation.

2. Brokers ⇐4—Where broker's bond was given pursuant to statute before amendment, cause of action which arose after amendment did not bring action on bond under amendment (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended; St. 1925, p. 962).

In action on surety's bond given pursuant to St. 1917, p. 673, as amended, where complaint alleged that defendant sold securities of plaintiff, and out of proceeds kept $7,000, fact that plaintiff's cause of action did not arise until after amendment by St. 1925, p. 962, did not bring action on bond under amendment, where bond was drawn under and worded according to the act as it existed prior to the amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Harriet Giles against R. N. Welling and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants the Ætna Casualty & Surety Company and another, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco (Geo. F. Snyder, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Redman, Alexander & Bacon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment which was given in favor of defendant upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings made upon the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The complaint declared upon a broker's bond executed by respondent for defendant Welling, on May 7, 1925, pursuant to the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended). The bond was therefore given pursuant to the provisions of that act as it existed prior to the amendment of 1925, which was approved May 23, 1925 (Stat. 1925, p. 962), and which took effect 90 days after the Legislature adjourned. The complaint alleged that plaintiff in May, June, and July, 1925, employed defendant Welling to sell for her "certain stocks and bonds," and to reinvest the proceeds thereof; that said defendant sold said securities, and out of the proceeds thereof kept $7,000, and fraudulently failed and refused to reinvest said sum or to return said sum to plaintiff upon demand.

[1] The motion for judgment upon the pleadings was properly granted, because the complaint did not state a cause of action upon the broker's bond. All the points raised by appellant have been directly passed upon by the decisions of the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal. The broker's bond given pursuant to the Corporate Securities Act, as it existed prior to the amendment of 1925, has been held not to cover cases of breach of contract, conversion, or misappropriation. Mitchell v. Smith (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 540; Blumenthal v. Larson, 79 Cal. App. 726, 251 P. 241; Anthony v. Van (Cal. App.) 274 P. 563.

[2] Appellant also contends that her claim for the return of the money did not arise until the date of her demand, which date is alleged in her complaint to be August 5, 1925, which is subsequent to the effective date of the amendment of 1925; but that fact would not bring her cause of action upon the bond under the amendment, because the bond was drawn under and worded according to the act as it existed prior to said amendment. Anthony v. Van (Cal. App.) 274 P. 563.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE, on Complaint of BOURDETTE, v. CITY OF BELMONT et al. (Civ. 6378.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 11, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 10, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨12(4)—Affidavit of three qualified electors certifying genuineness of signatures to petition for municipal incorporation held sufficient to authorize supervisors to proceed (Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2).

Where affidavit of three electors residing within the limits of proposed municipal corporation certifying to genuineness of signatures to petition for incorporation was filed with petition, board of supervisors had jurisdiction without further evidence to proceed, in view of Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5233), providing that affidavits of three qualified electors residing within proposed limits certifying to genuineness of signatures filed with petition shall be prima facie evidence of requisite number of signers.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨12(4)—Petition for incorporation of municipal corporation held sufficient, although dates when various electors signed petition were not affixed (Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2; Pol. Code, § 1083a).

Where clerk examined petition under Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5233), for proposed incorporation of territory into a municipal corporation, and found signers of petition to be qualified, clerk's determination, in absence of fraud, is final, notwithstanding dates when petition was signed by various electors were not affixed beneath their signatures, since Pol. Code, § 1083a, requiring signers of any petition to affix thereto date of such signing, although mandatory on petitioners, is only for benefit or convenience of clerk.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨12(7)—Determination that territory included within proposed municipal corporation does not include center of population or other prohibited territory held exclusively for supervisors (Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2).

Under Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5233), providing for the incorporation of territory into a municipal corporation, determination of question whether any portion of included territory is included within any existing municipal corporation, or whether boundaries contain center of population subdivided into town or other lots or an area of ranch land or outside acreage, owners of which have not petitioned to be included within limits of proposed corporation, is exclusively within jurisdiction of board of supervisors.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨12(12)—Extent and character of territory to be included in proposed municipal corporation is exclusively for supervisors, and courts will only interfere for fraud or illegality (Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2).

Under Municipal Corporation Bill, § 2 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5233), providing for incorporation of territory into a municipal corporation, question of extent and character of territory proposed to be included in corporation is exclusively within jurisdiction of board of supervisors, and courts will only interfere where some substantial provision of law has been violated or where fraud was perpetrated in matter of boundaries.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action in quo warranto by the People, on the complaint of John W. Bourdette, against the City of Belmont and others, to set aside incorporation of defendant city. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Roger Sherman, of San Francisco (Donovan O. Peters, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

William J. Locke, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment in which it is adjudged that defendant city of Belmont is not now and never was incorporated or organized as a municipal corporation, and has not now and never had any legal existence. The action is one in quo warranto brought against the city of Belmont to set aside the incorporation on the grounds that plaintiff's (Bourdette's) three lots, consisting of an undivided parcel of 30 acres of land, had been included within the incorporated boundaries without his petition, and that the city's petition for incorporation is illegal, in that the dates the signers signed the petition were omitted after the signatures thereto.

The complaint contains three causes of action. Inasmuch, however, as plaintiff is not urging his third cause of action, and no finding thereon was made by the trial court, we are concerned only with the first and second causes of action: The first placing in issue the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors to act on the petition by reason of the omission of dates opposite the signatures thereon, and the second placing in issue the authority of the board to act by reason of the inclusion of plaintiff's ranch land or outside acreage within the boundaries of the incorporated area without his petition or acquiescence.

[1] The petition was filed with the board on August 2, 1926. Section 2 of the Municipal Corporation Bill then provided, and still provides (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5233), that a petition signed by at least 50 of the qualified electors of the county residents within the limits of the proposed corporation shall be presented to the board, and that the affidavit of three qualified electors residing within the proposed limits "certifying to the genuineness of the said signatures, filed with the petition, shall be prima facie evidence of the requisite number of signers." The sufficiency of the petition with respect to the signatures was not required to be certified or determined by the county clerk, but the question was one to be determined by the board, and the affidavit of the three electors filed with the petition, in so far as jurisdiction depended upon the number of signatures, was sufficient without further evidence to give the board power to proceed. Hoffecker v. Board of Supervisors, 23 Cal. App. 405, 138 P. 371.

The court found "that none of the signers of said petition for incorporation affixed to said petition the date of signing the same either at the time of so signing or at any time thereafter, or at all," and further, "that in the territory embraced within the boundaries of said alleged corporation there were at the time of said election, and still are, certain portions thereof more densely populated than others which had been subdivided into town or other lots and delineated upon a recorded map under the map law of March 15, 1907, as amended; that the territory within said boundary also contains areas of ranch land or outside acreage including the aforesaid lands of plaintiff which the board of supervisors included within said boundaries, in addition to said subdivided area, notwithstanding the fact that the owners of said ranch land or outside acreage including plaintiff had not petitioned to have said lands included therein."

[2] As to the failure of the signers to affix the dates on which they signed the petition, it may be said that the fact is undisputed that the clerk satisfied himself that such signers were qualified electors. Plaintiff does not in his complaint or otherwise question the fact that at the time of signing the petition the signers were qualified electors, but contends that the provisions of section 1083a of the Political Code, which provides that the signers of all petitions shall put down the date of signing the same, is a mandatory requirement. In the recent case of Carter v. Green (Cal. App.) 276 P. 120, 121, in which case a rehearing in the Supreme Court was denied, this court said: "Respondents contend, however, that section 1083a of the Political Code, which provides that 'wherever, by the Constitution or laws of this state, any initiative, referendum, recall or nominating petition or paper, or any petition or paper, is required to be signed by qualified electors, * * * such signers shall at the time of so signing such petition or paper affix thereto the date of such signing,' not having been complied with by a number of the signers equal to one-fourth of the qualified electors of the municipality, the petition was properly rejected. The purpose of the statute was to guard against signatures by persons who were not qualified electors at the time of signing the petition (Chester v. Hall, 55 Cal. App. 611, 619, 204 P. 237), and it has been held that noncompliance therewith is a justification for refusal by the proper officer to certify as sufficient the names of the signers as to whose signatures the dates of signing are not affixed (Boggs v. Jordan [Cal. Sup.] 267 P. 696; Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation Dist., 57 Cal. App. 155, 206 P. 773). But, as was in effect held in the above cases, where the officer whose duty it is to determine the sufficiency of the petition from the registration records found the same to have been signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, the fact that the dates of signing were not affixed by them but by another will not render void the proceedings based thereon. This was not equivalent, however, to holding the above provision to be merely directory, or that such officer would be bound to act notwithstanding the signers had failed to comply with the statute; for, as the court said in Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation Dist., supra: "The requirement is, of course, plain and unequivocal, within the power of the Legislature to prescribe, and there is no good reason for holding it to be otherwise than mandatory." In other words, the provision of the statute requiring signers to petitions to "affix thereto the date of such signing," while mandatory on the petitioners, is for the benefit or convenience of the clerk whose duty it is to check the signatures on the petition with the registration records to determine whether or not the persons signing are qualified electors, and, while the clerk is not required to go beyond an examination of the petition itself (Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrig. Dist., 57 Cal. App. 155, 206 P. 773), he having done so, and having found the signers of the petition to be qualified, in the absence of fraud his determination of this question is final, as the statute imposed upon him the duty, and vested in him the authority, to examine the petition which was filed with him, and from the great register ascertain whether or not such petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors of the territory described therein. Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 173 P. 183; Good v. Common Council, 5 Cal. App. 265, 90 P. 44; Beecham v. Burns, 34 Cal. App. 754, 168 P. 1058; Williams v. Gill, 65 Cal. App. 129, 223 P. 559; Chester v. Hall, 55 Cal. App. 611, 204 P. 237.

As is said in People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 637, 84 P. 205, 210: "As was said by the same author in the section already quoted (Freeman on Judgments, § 523) 'the only difficulty in cases of this class is in deciding whether the board is vested with authority to determine that it is properly signed, or, in other words, whether it is empowered to decide upon its own jurisdiction. This power need not be conferred in express terms.' This court has repeatedly held that statutes of a similar character give such power to the tribunal to which the petition is presented, and that the very act under consideration gives such power to the board to which the petition is presented, and that its conclusion thereon is beyond review and final so far as quo warranto proceedings are concerned, was definitely decided in People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, 65 P. 749. Under the decisions, the order of the board calling the election must here be taken as conclusive evidence that the petition presented, sufficient on its face, was, in effect, sufficiently signed by electors to confer the requisite power, and that the finding of the board to that effect, be it express or implied, was sustained by satisfactory proof." Here, the board "did resolve, ascertain and determine that said petition was regularly signed and subscribed by the prescribed number of legally qualified petitioners." Further, "the making of the order for the election implies not only the determination, as we have already seen, but also that such determination was reached upon proofs satisfactory to the board. The statute makes no provision as to the character of proof essential in such a case. Whatever may be the rule applicable in certiorari, which is a direct attack upon the particular order alleged to have been in excess of jurisdiction (see Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 P. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350), the decisions in this state compel us to hold that even an implied finding is conclusive in a quo warranto proceeding, or in any case where the order is collaterally attacked." People v. Town of Ontario, supra.

The Municipal Corporation Bill (Act 5233, General Laws), after setting forth the number of inhabitants required to organize a municipal corporation, in section 2 of the act provides: " * * * And provided further, in the case of municipal corporations of the sixth class that in the event that the proposed boundaries of such corporation contain both a center of population subdivided into town or other lots delineated upon a map recorded as provided by an act entitled 'An Act requiring the recording of maps of subdivisions of land into lots for the purpose of sale, and prescribing the conditions on which such maps may be recorded and prohibiting the selling or offering for sale of land by reference to said maps unless the same are recorded,' approved March 15, 1907, as amended, and an area of ranch land or outside acreage, the said board of supervisors shall include within said proposed boundaries in addition to said subdivided area only such portion of said area of ranch land or outside acreage as the owners thereof shall have petitioned to have included within the limits of said proposed corporation. The boundaries so established by the board of supervisors shall be the boundaries of such municipal corporation until by action, authorized by law for the annexation of additional territory to, or the taking of territory from, said municipal corporation, such boundaries shall be changed. * * *" or outside acreage included within the proposed boundaries be a necessary prerequisite, two conditions must exist: One, there must be a center of population; and the other, the center of population must be subdivided into town or other lots delineated upon a recorded map. Here no point is made respecting the recording of the map; the controversy, in so far as the question now being considered is concerned, turns upon whether or not the proposed boundaries contain a center of population. As to this fact there is a conflict in the testimony. The plaintiff testified that there is a center of population, while George A. Kneese, the county surveyor, and Donald S. Mulford, assessor for the sanitary district which includes the area of Belmont, both testified that there is no center of population in the city of Belmont, but that there are some portions more densely populated than others. On this issue the only finding of the court is: "That in the territory embraced within the boundaries of said alleged corporation there was at the time of said election, and still are, certain portions thereof more densely populated than others which had been subdivided into town or other lots and delineated upon a recorded map under the map law of March 15, 1907, as amended," and no finding is made as to whether or not there existed a center of population. As we view the case, however, this question becomes unimportant, as the board of supervisors determined as a fact "that no portion of said territory within said boundaries is a part of or included within any existing municipal corporation nor do said boundaries contain a center of population subdivided into town or other lots and an area of ranch land or outside acreage, the owners of which have not petitioned to be included within the limits of said corporation," and the determination of this question is left exclusively to such board.

In People v. City of Los Angeles, 154 Cal. 220, 225, 97 P. 311, 313, the court says: "Under the Constitution all questions as to population and extent and character of territory to be included in the incorporation of cities or towns is left entirely to the Legislature, and that, under its power to provide for the incorporation of such municipalities, the question of the extent and character of territory proposed to be incorporated is left, under the general Municipal Incorporation Act, as the Legislature was authorized to leave it, exclusively to the board of supervisors of the county in which the city is to be incorporated, and that the courts have no control of the subject." In People v. Town of Loyalton, 147 Cal. 776, 781, 82 P. 620, 623, in considering the question of the refusal of the court to permit plaintiff to show that the board of supervisors mistakenly thought certain property was included in the proposed boundaries, and as to population, at the time it heard and determined the eligibility of the signers to the petition, the court concludes:

"But we think such proposed evidence was entirely immaterial. As we have seen, it was for the board of supervisors to finally determine both of these matters from the evidence submitted to them, and neither the evidence nor the mental processes by which their conclusion was reached are reviewable here."

[4] The action appears to have been brought on the mistaken theory that this question was an original one for the court to decide, and, as there is nothing in the record showing what evidence was taken by the board of supervisors upon which it determined that there was not a center of population, we cannot say that its judgment lacks support. If, however, upon the hearing before the board, the same evidence was presented as was presented to the trial court with the same conflict, the board's finding would not be disturbed by the court, as the question of the extent and character of the territory proposed to be included in the corporation is left exclusively to the board of supervisors, and the courts have no control of the subject. With the wisdom of the board's determination in the matter the courts cannot interfere. They only interfere where some substantial provision of the law has been violated, or where fraud was perpetrated in the matter of the boundaries (People v. Los Angeles, supra), and here no fraud is pleaded or claimed.

Upon the record as presented, the judgment must be reversed, and it is accordingly ordered.

McINTYRE v. HICKS et al. (Civ. 5469.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 10, 1929.

1. Principal and agent §183(2)—Owner of paper route, who made contract for advertising space in his own name, was real party in interest and as such capable of maintaining action to recover therefor in his own name (Code Civ. Proc. § 369).

Owner of paper route, who solicited and made contract in his own name with third party for publication of advertisements in paper and was liable to publisher for space, was real party in interest and as such capable of maintaining action in his own name to recover for advertising space alleged to have been purchased from him by defendants, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 369, person in whose name contract is made for benefit of another may sue without joining with him persons for whose benefit action is prosecuted.

2. Principal and agent §183(2)—Agent who is liable to principal for price of thing sold may institute in his own name action for purchase price.

Agent who is liable to principal for price of thing sold may institute in his own name action for purchase price.

3. Appeal and error §1071(5)—Finding that owner of paper route, who made contract in his own name with third party for advertising space, was independent contractor, if error, held harmless.

Finding that owner of paper route, who made contract in his own name with third party for advertising space, was independent contractor, if error, held harmless, as owner was nevertheless proper party plaintiff, as contract had been made in his name, and he was therefore entitled to sue in his own name as trustee of express trust.

4. Contracts §28(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that corporation had agreed to pay owner of paper route for advertising.

Where owner of paper route testified that he submitted copy of advertisement to president of defendant corporation and president said he would pay for such advertisements and did pay for part thereof, evidence held to sustain finding that corporation had agreed to pay owner for advertisements.

5. Damages §68—Allowance of interest on amount recovered on express agreement to pay for advertising space was proper (Civ. Code, § 3287).

In action based on express agreement to pay for advertising space, allowance of interest on amount found due was proper, under Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that person entitled to recover damages certain is also entitled to interest thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by N. E. McIntyre against Hendri Hix, Mox, Incorporated, and another. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the second named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel H. French and F. H. Snyder, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur Crum, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by the owner of a newspaper route to recover for advertising space in the Los Angeles Times, claimed to have been purchased from him by the defendants. From a judgment for plaintiff, one of the defendants, Mox, Incorporated, has taken this appeal.

There is no dispute as to the fact of publication of the advertisements or as to the amount of the bill therefor, but appellant contends that respondent was not an independent contractor, but a mere agent for the Times, and hence that not he but the publisher of the newspaper was the real party in interest and, under the provisions of section 367 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the only party capable of instituting and maintaining the action. Appellant further argues a lack of evidence to support the finding that it ordered or agreed to pay for the advertisements.

As to the first of these points, it appears without contradiction that respondent owned a Times route or, as it is referred to in the written contract between himself and the Times-Mirror Company, publishers of that newspaper, a "carrier service district or agency of the Los Angeles Times." This contract is silent upon the question of advertising, the agreement as to the handling of that part of the business being oral and as follows, according to the testimony of Mr. Denning, assistant credit manager and chief clerk of the Times-Mirror Company: The purchaser and owner of such a route is to solicit advertising "at will," the Times charging all such advertising to the account of the route owner, who receives a percentage commission thereon. The route owner "is his own solicitor and his own credit man," with no right to extend credit on behalf of the newspaper. If the advertiser fails to pay, the loss is his, not that of the Times, which knows "no one connected with the advertising except the agent himself." This then, was the relationship with respect to advertising which existed between the respondent and the Times. His was the responsibility for payment; to him alone was the credit extended.

[1] "An independent contractor is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished." Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337, 339. Whether or not respondent falls within this definition it is unnecessary for us to decide, since it is obvious that he is "the real party in interest" and as such capable of maintaining the action in his own name as plaintiff. Even if we are to adopt appellant's theory that McIntyre was merely an agent of the Times and the advertising was received by him for the benefit of that newspaper, we are brought squarely within the purview of section 369, Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that a trustee of an express trust "may sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted," and adds the definition: "A person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another, is a trustee of an express trust, within the meaning of this section." Thus in Tandy v. Waesch, 154 Cal. 108, 97 P. 69, 70, the plaintiff had entered into a contract for the purchase of land in his own name but for the benefit of a third party. In an action instituted by him in his own name it was contended that not he but said third party was the real party in interest. Holding adversely to this contention, the Supreme Court said: "Tandy, however, was a proper party plaintiff. To the general rule laid down in section 367, Code Civ. Proc. that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, there are certain exceptions specified in section 369, Code Civ. Proc. That section authorizes the trustee of an express trust to sue without joining the beneficiary, and declares that a person with whom, or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, is a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of this section. The contract having been made in Tandy's name for the benefit of Garland, Tandy thus became the trustee of an express trust and entitled to maintain the action"—citing many California cases on this point.

In Harris v. Clayton, 186 Cal. 445, 199 P. 776, 778, the action was by the assignee of a salesman to recover for goods sold by him for his firm. Passing upon the contention that the agent had no right to assign the account in his own name and that the firm was the real party in interest, the court said: "We are satisfied under this state of the evidence that the plaintiff could maintain this action as the assignee of Conroy either on the theory that he was the real party in interest, or, if an agent, was acting with authority to carry and collect the account in his own name, and thereby became a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of section 369, Code of Civil Procedure." To the same effect are the decisions in Lauer v. Williams, 32 Cal. App. 590, 163 P. 687, where it was held that a cashier of a bank who has taken a note and mortgage in his own name but for the bank's benefit may foreclose the mortgage without joining the bank as a party plaintiff, and Kelley-Clarke Co. v. Leslie, 61 Cal. App. 559, 215 P. 699, where the plaintiff was agent for an undisclosed principal.

[2] Both by reason of statutory enactments similar to section 369 of our Code of Civil Procedure and on well-known principles of law it has been almost universally held that an agent who is liable to his principal for the price of the thing sold may institute in his own name an action for the purchase price. A typical case is that of Lamb v. Connor, 84 Wash. 121, 146 P. 174, where the plaintiffs, agents for certain insurance companies, sued the insured for unpaid premiums on policies written by them. The court held the contention that the agents were not the real parties in interest untenable, saying: "It is quite generally held—in fact, it seems to be held in all late cases—that an agent who, in discharge of his obligations to his principal, pays the debt of the other contracting party to his principal, may be subrogated to the right of the principal to maintain an action. * * * The testimony shows that the insurance companies held respondents responsible for their payment of the premiums on all policies written by them." To the same effect are the decisions in the following cases: Waters v. Wandless (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 184; Bang v. Farmville, etc., Co., 2 Fed. Cas. 585, No. 838; Willey v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. (C. C.) 77 F. 961; Gaysville Mfg. Co. v. Phoenix Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 67 N. H. 457, 36 A. 367; Overholt v. Dietz, 43 Or. 194, 72 P. 695; Carruth v. Port Hudson Oil Developing Co., 159 La. 236, 105 So. 302; Winter v. Lewis, 132 Ark. 399, 200 S. W. 981; King v. Farmers' Grain Co., 194 Iowa, 979, 188 N. W. 720; Shirai v. Blum, 239 N. Y. 172, 146 N. E. 194, 38 A. L. R. 603; and Chambers v. Independent Asphalt Paving Co., 90 Wash. 380, 156 P. 14.

[3] Respondent thus being a proper party plaintiff, it is immaterial whether or not the trial court was justified in finding that he was an independent contractor, since even if the finding had been otherwise a different conclusion would not have necessarily followed. Trout v. Ogilvie, 41 Cal. App. 167, 182 P. 333. Conceding for argument's sake, but not so deciding, that the finding was erroneous, it was at most a finding on an immaterial fact, and as such would of itself furnish no cause for reversal of the judgment. Faure v. Drollinger, 60 Cal. App. 594, 213 P. 724; Dougherty v. Coffin, 69 Cal. 454, 10 P. 672; Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160.

[4] As to the second point urged by appellant, namely, the lack of evidence to support the finding that it had agreed to pay plaintiff for the advertising published, we think it is without merit. Appellant and a Miss Thomas, who was admittedly merely a dummy for one Hicks, had entered into a contract whereby appellant agreed to furnish all materials for the construction of houses on eight lots to be secured by Thomas (Hicks) from the Mercantile Investment Company. Hicks was to act "in the capacity of general manager, superintendent and designer," appellant was "to pay for all labor, advertising and other expenses connected therewith," and on the sale of the lots and houses the net receipts were to be divided between the contracting parties. The advertisements in question were of the houses built pursuant to this contract. They were ordered from respondent by Hicks, at whose direction respondent charged them to appellant. Before the advertisements were published in the Times, appellant, according to his testimony, submitted the copy to Mr. Mox, president of appellant corporation, and to Mr. Johnson, its secretary, and Mr. Mox said that he would pay for the advertisements and did, in fact, pay $486.80 on the bill. Respondent's stepson, a Mr. Shelton, at respondent's request, called Mox, Incorporated, on the telephone to verify the authority of Hicks to order the advertisements and charge them to appellant, and was told that "it was O. K. to run them." Hicks himself testified that he "took up the matter of inserting these advertisements in the Los Angeles Times with * * * Mox, Incorporated. Mox agreed to let me go ahead," and said he would pay for the advertising. While appellant's witnesses disputed some of this testimony, it was for the trial judge to determine the facts, and we are satisfied that his findings are amply supported.

[5] Appellant's claim that the allowance of interest on the amount found due was erroneous is untenable. The action was not for recovery of an uncertain or unliquidated amount, but was based upon an express agreement, and the court below found in accordance with this theory. Interest was properly allowed. Civ. Code, § 3287; Keyes v. Nims, 43 Cal. App. 1, 15, 184 P. 695; Mix v. Miller, 57 Cal. 356; Sea v. Lorden, 37 Cal. App. 444, 174 P. 85.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PUPPILO. (Cr. 1833.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 13, 1929.

1. Criminal law ☞29—Finding two pistols simultaneously in different parts of alien's house established single offense; "pistol" (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1970, p. 662; Civ. Code, § 14.)

Where revolver was found in trunk in front room of defendant's house, and another of different caliber found in bureau drawer in bedroom at the same time, during course of search of premises by police officers, there was but a single offense committed, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1970, p. 662, denouncing possession of pistol by unnaturalized foreign-born person; singular number including plural, under Civ. Code, § 14.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Pistol.]

2. Criminal law ☞878(4)—Acquittal under second count for possessing pistol operated as acquittal of offense under first count of possessing a different pistol, where counts did not differentiate between pistols (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1970, p. 662; Civ. Code, § 14.)

In prosecution of unnaturalized foreign-born defendant for possessing pistol in violation of Gun Law (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1970, p. 662), jury's verdict of not guilty as to count 1 of information operated as acquittal of offense under another count of possessing a different pistol, where the counts did not differentiate between the separate revolvers, one of which was claimed by defendant to have been the sole property of his wife, since singular number, as used in statute, includes plural, under Civ. Code, § 14.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Mike Puppilo was convicted of possessing a pistol as an unnaturalized foreign-born person, and he appeals. Reversed.

Wm. T. Kendrick, Jr., of Los Angeles (W. T. Kendrick, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Buron Pitts, Dist. Atty., and William R. McKay, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Los Angeles, for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. The defendant, Mike Puppilo, was charged in an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county in each of two counts, with a violation of section 2 of the so-called "Gun Law," being an act of the Legislature adopted in 1923 (Act 1970, p. 662, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923). The portion of the section material to our discussion reads as follows:

"On and after the date upon which this act takes effect, no unnaturalized foreign-born person * * * shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person. The terms 'pistol,' 'revolver,' and 'firearms capable of being concealed upon the person' as used in this act shall be construed to apply to and include all firearms having a barrel less than twelve inches in length. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in a state prison for not less than one year nor for more than five years."

The charging portions of the information read as follows:

Count I: "The said Mike Puppilo is accused by the district attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this information, of the crime of violation of Gun Law, Assembly Bill 363, a felony, committed as follows: That the said Mike Puppilo, on or about the 24th day of July, 1928, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, was an unnaturalized, foreign-born person, and the said Mike Puppilo then and there did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously have in his possession and under his control a firearm having a barrel less than twelve inches in length, to wit, a pistol."

Count II: "For a further and separate cause of action, being a different offense of the same class of crimes and offenses as the charge set forth in count I hereof, the said defendant is accused by the district attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this information, of the crime of violation of the Gun Law, Assembly Bill 363, a felony, committed as follows: That the said Mike Puppilo on or about the 24th day of July, 1928, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, was an unnaturalized, foreign-born person, and that the said Mike Puppilo then and there did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously have in his possession and under his control a firearm having a barrel less than twelve inches in length, to wit, a pistol."

The jury returned a verdict of "guilty" as to the charge in count I, and "not guilty" as to the charge in count II. Appealing from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant and appellant urges several grounds for reversal. Inasmuch as we have arrived at the conclusion that the judgment must be reversed for the reason that the evidence discloses that but one offense was committed, and the verdict of "not guilty" rendered as to count II acquitted the defendant of that offense, we will limit our résumé of the evidence to such as may seem necessary to the discussion of this point.

On behalf of the prosecution, a police officer by the name of F. L. James testified that on the 24th day of July, 1928, he, together with two other police officers, arrested the defendant about 4 o'clock in the afternoon at his place of business at Twelfth and Western avenue in the city of Los Angeles; that the defendant told him he resided at 2902 Palm Grove avenue; that about two hours later the witness, together with Lieut. Jones, another police officer, went to the residence at 2902 Palm Grove avenue, the defendant not being present, and there searched the premises; that there were present in the house at that time Mrs. Mike Puppilo, wife of defendant, Mrs. Otto Puppilo, his sister-in-law and a little boy; that in a trunk in the front room of the house they found a 32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver, which was subsequently admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit 1. The witness further testified that in a bureau drawer in a bedroom in the same house they found a 22-caliber Harrington & Richards revolver, which later was admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit 2.

Over the objection of defendant's counsel that no proper foundation had been laid therefor, and no corpus delicti shown, the witness was permitted to testify that subsequent to the finding of the revolver in question he had a talk with the defendant in the office of the detective bureau at Central Police Station, at which time the defendant again gave his residence as 2902 Palm Grove avenue, and stated that the Smith & Wesson revolver, which was shown him by the officers, was his revolver, and that the Harrington & Richards revolver was the property of his wife. Whereupon the district attorney requested that the Smith & Wesson revolver be admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit 1 and the Harrington & Richards revolver admitted in evidence as People's Exhibit 2. Defendant objected to the introduction of each of the revolvers, on the ground that the same was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, which objections were overruled.

On behalf of the defense, the defendant's wife took the stand and testified that she resided with her husband, child, and sister-in-law at 2902 Palm Grove avenue in the city of Los Angeles; that she was at home on July 24, 1928, when the officers came and searched the house and found the two pistols put in evidence; that the 32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver was found in a trunk, which the witness unlocked to enable the officers to search it; that this revolver was found by the witness in the defendant's billiard room in Chicago, while the defendant was absent in Italy in January of 1928; that she took the revolver from the billiard room and placed it in a trunk; that the defendant had no knowledge of the fact that she had taken the revolver and put it in the trunk, nor had he any knowledge that the revolver had been brought to California; that he had never to her knowledge seen the revolver in California, and in fact the revolver had never been removed from the trunk since it had been brought to California, until the officers found it. She further testified that the other revolver, found by the officers in the dresser drawer in their home, was her revolver; that during the defendant's absence in Italy, in the spring of 1928, while she was visiting in Springfield, Ill., she purchased the revolver and took it home with her and kept it; that the defendant had never seen it, and to her knowledge did not know that she possessed it; that they had no cartridges to fit either of the revolvers.

It is urged by appellant that under the evidence, assuming for the argument that the evidence before the jury was all properly admitted, only one offense appears to have been committed, and that, inasmuch as the jury returned a verdict of "not guilty" as to count II, the verdict of "guilty" as to count I becomes a nullity.

[1] We are of the opinion that appellant's contention that the facts shown by the evidence constituted but one offense must be sustained. The evidence without conflict shows that the two revolvers were found in the residence of the defendant at the same time, on July 24, 1928. Assuming that there is competent evidence to support the district attorney's contention that both of the revolvers were in the custody and control of the defendant, we cannot conceive upon what theory it can be maintained that he was guilty of two separate distinct crimes. If, at the time the defendant was arrested, the officers had found the Smith & Wesson revolver in defendant's hip pocket and the other revolver in the defendant's inside coat pocket, it could not be successfully contended that the defendant, by having two revolvers on his person, was guilty of two offenses. The act denounced by the statute is the possession of a firearm, as therein described. While it is true that the singular number is used, it is almost axiomatic, and is in fact so provided by our statutes, that the singular number includes the plural. Section 14, Civ. Code.

The principle here involved has been repeatedly recognized by courts of this and other jurisdictions. In the case of People v. Stephens, 79 Cal. 428, 21 P. 856, 4 L. R. A. 845, the defendant was charged with the publication of a libelous statement. It appears that the defendant had been previously acquitted of a similar charge, arising out of the publication of the same article, although in the first trial the libelous matter charged differed from that upon which the defendant was the second time brought to trial. The court, in reversing the judgment, held that, inasmuch as the defendant had previously been placed on trial charged with the publication of the same article, although it was a different portion than that which was set forth in the second information, his plea of once in jeopardy was good, as the publication of the entire article, if libelous, constituted but one offense.

So in the case of Fisher v. Commonwealth, 1 Bush (Ky.) 211, 89 Am. Dec. 620, the defendant stole a horse, wagon and harness at the same time. He was first charged by information with stealing the horse. Of this charge he was acquitted. When he was brought to trial upon a second information charging the stealing of the wagon and harness, he set up the plea of former jeopardy by reason of his acquittal of the charge of stealing the horse. This was held good, for the reason that, the horse, wagon, and harness having been taken at the same time, there was but one offense committed.

In the case of State v. Benham, 7 Conn. 414, it appears that the defendant was arrested, charged with having in his possession two forged bank notes, one of the Troy Bank and the other of the Mechanics' Bank. He was first brought to trial upon an information charging possession of the forged Mechanics' Bank note, of which charge he was found guilty. Subsequently, when brought to trial upon an information charging him with the offense of having in his possession the forged Troy Bank note, he put in a plea of former jeopardy by reason of the trial upon the Mechanics' Bank note. This plea was sustained, upon the ground that having possession of the two forged notes at the same time constituted but one offense.

In People v. Willard, 92 Cal. 482, 28 P. 585, 587, the defendant was charged with having received stolen property. It appears that the defendant's alleged husband had burglarized the house of one Hazard, and also the house of one Williams. Goods from both places were found in the possession of the defendant. The court in commenting on this fact said: "The same proof, and the only proof, of a receipt of the Hazard goods on or about March 11th, equally proves a receipt of the Williams goods at the same time; and, if both were received at the same time, it was one offense, and the acquittal on the first charge was a bar."

The Attorney General in his brief, in urging the same theory as did the district attorney in the course of the trial, namely, that, because two revolvers were found in the defendant's house, he was guilty of two separate offenses, has cited the case of People v. Degnen, 70 Cal. App. 567, 234 P. 129, as supporting this theory. There is nothing in this case which conflicts with the authorities cited in support of appellant's contention. In the Degnen Case, one count charged the defendant with assault with intent to commit murder, and the other count charged the defendant with the crime of rape. Mr. Justice Works discusses at some length the question as to whether or not the demurrer filed to the indictment was good, and held that the demurrer was not well taken, in that the crime charged in each count constituted a separate offense. The appellant in that case, as here, urged that the evidence showed that but one offense, if any, had been committed, in that all of the acts that formed the basis of both counts occurred at the same time. The court definitely refused to determine the question as to whether or not the facts in that case constituted but one offense.

Nor does the case of People v. Stone, 199 Cal. 610, 250 P. 659, cited by the Attorney General, aid in the determination of the question. There the evidence clearly showed that two children met their deaths through criminal agencies. The defendant was charged in one count with the murder of one child, and in the other count with the murder of the other child. The taking of the life of each child constituted a separate offense, even though the killing of both was accomplished by the same act or simultaneously. So, too, the case of People v. Pozzi (Cal. App.) 266 P. 860, is not in point. There the defendant was charged with maintaining a nuisance on three separate days. The maintaining of the place on each day was declared a separate offense. This ruling is in harmony with the long line of decisions that hold the doing of a prohibited act, or the maintaining of a prohibited place, on each day, constitutes a separate offense.

The case of People v. Follette, 74 Cal. App. 178, 240 P. 502, is urged as a complete answer to appellant's contention on this point. In that case it appears that an indictment had been found charging the defendant with perjury. Subsequently a second indictment was returned by the grand jury, charging defendant with perjury. The second indictment included all of the matters set forth in the first indictment, and in addition thereto other separate instances wherein the defendant was alleged to have committed perjury. It was evidently the intention of all of the parties, including the district attorney, the defendant, and the court, that both cases should be consolidated and tried as one case, and the trial was so conducted. The jury brought in but one verdict, finding the defendant "guilty of perjury as charged in the indictment." This verdict carried the number 21289, which was the number of the second indictment. It was urged by appellant that the failure of the jury to return a verdict on the first indictment operated as a verdict of acquittal of the charges in the first indictment, and that, having thus been acquitted of the charges contained in the first indictment, which charges were also contained in the second indictment, the acquittal on the first indictment was so in conflict with the verdict of guilty on the second indictment that its effect was to nullify the verdict returned. Mr. Justice Curtis, in writing the opinion in the Follette Case, points out that there were other instances of perjury set forth in the second indictment that did not appear in the first indictment, and that the effect of the failure to bring in a verdict on the first indictment was simply to furnish to the defendant a plea of "former jeopardy" in the event he was put to trial upon the matters charged in the first indictment. So, too, the case of People v. Rabe, 202 Cal. 409, 261 P. 303, is clearly distinguishable from the facts in the instant case. There the defendant was charged in several counts with obtaining money under false pretenses. The false representations were all made at the same time, but the money was obtained from the complaining witness at different times. The opinion points out, in discussing the question as to whether the facts constitute one or more crimes, that the actual obtaining of the money by defendant constituted an essential element of the crime and not until the money was received was the crime complete. Hence each time the defendant obtained money from his victims a separate offense was committed.

If the evidence showed that on July 24, 1928, the defendant was in possession of the Smith & Wesson revolver, and on some subsequent day he was in possession of the Harrington & Richards revolver, then each possession would constitute a separate offense; but, under the evidence as shown by the record, possession of both revolvers was simultaneous in point of time. These facts would, we are satisfied, constitute but one offense.

[2] The Attorney General interprets the verdicts of the jury as meaning that the jury, in returning their verdict of guilty as to the first count, did so upon the belief that the Smith & Wesson revolver was the property of the defendant, while the Harrington & Richards revolver was the property of Mrs. Puppilo, the defendant's wife. Unfortunately for this contention, there is nothing in count I from which it can be determined that that count referred to the Smith & Wesson revolver, nor is there anything in count II to indicate that that count referred to the other revolver. We have, therefore, concluded that the verdict of not guilty as to the crime charged in count II operates as an acquittal of the offense. Hence the verdict of guilty as to count I becomes a nullity and of no effect.

In view of our conclusion upon the point we have discussed, we do not deem it necessary to consider the other questions raised and discussed in the briefs filed. We are moved to suggest that there is some doubt in our minds as to the sufficiency of the language used in the information to state a public offense. The wording "the crime of violation of Gun Law, Assembly Bill 363," is, to say the least, very indefinite, if, indeed, it has any worth as a pleading.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

PEOPLE v. BARBA. (Cr. 1829.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 12, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 7, 1929.

Jury Ⓒ29(6)—Failure of defendant to personally consent to waiver of jury trial defeated jurisdiction of trial court (Const. art. 1, § 7).

Where defendant in prosecution for sale of intoxicating liquor did not personally consent to waiver of jury trial, as required by Const. art. 1, § 7, trial court was without jurisdiction, regardless of stipulation entered into between district attorney and attorney representing defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Bill Barba was convicted for sale of intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Reversed.

Fred H. Thompson, of Brawley, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the offense of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the trial of the action, by stipulation entered into between the district attorney and the attorney representing the defendant, a jury trial was waived. Defendant now raises the point that as he did not personally consent to a waiver of a jury trial, the trial court was without jurisdiction in the premises.

Relying upon the case of People v. Garcia (Cal. App.) 277 P. 747, wherein the provisions of section 7, article 1 of the Constitution are thoroughly considered, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are reversed.

CLARK v. HAMILTON DIAMOND CO. et al.†
(Civ. 5471.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 7, 1929.

As Modified Sept. 11 and 16, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Sales Ⓒ221—Seller of diamond ring accepting worthless check would be entitled to repossess ring as against purchaser or subsequent purchasers with knowledge.

Where owner of diamond ring sold it and accepted check which was later found to be worthless, and purchaser had traded ring to another, who in turn traded it to a retail jeweler, from whom another obtained it and sold it to diamond company, seller would be entitled to ring as against purchaser or any other subsequent purchaser with knowledge of transaction.

2. Sales Ⓒ234(5)—Innocent purchaser for value of diamond ring held entitled thereto as against original seller who accepted check later found to be worthless.

Where subsequent purchaser of diamond ring was an innocent purchaser for value, he was entitled to ring as against original seller who accepted check later found to be worthless.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Clark against the Hamilton Diamond Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant J. S. Cohen appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Charles A. Bank, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry M. Lee, of Los Angeles, and Thomas A. Joyner, of Pasadena, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff and respondent filed an action in claim and delivery, alleging that the defendants had wrongfully acquired possession of a diamond ring of which he was the owner. The defendants answered, denying ownership in the plaintiff, alleging that they lawfully acquired possession of said property, that the defendant corporation purchased the same for value, and that, since filing the complaint, the plaintiff had wrongfully taken the ring. They also prayed judgment for possession or the value of the property. The trial court, after hearing the evidence, rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant Cohen appealed upon the judgment roll alone.

The findings of fact recite that one Harry Justice fraudulently purchased the ring from the plaintiff, and gave therefor a worthless check; that he traded it to one Dye, who, in turn, delivered it to one Allen, a retail jeweler; that one Friedman obtained it from Allen and sold it to the defendant Cohen, who was doing business as Hamilton Diamond Company. It is further recited by the findings that defendant Cohen "did purchase said ring without knowledge of said transaction between plaintiff and said Harry Justice." The trial court further found that, immediately upon the return of the worthless check, Clark by proper proceedings repossessed the ring; that no muniments or indicia of title were ever transferred to any of the parties other than Cohen, and that he did not rely upon any muniments or indicia of title when he purchased said personal property.

[1, 2] It is apparent that taking these findings of the court as true—and there is no evidence in the record before us—Clark would be entitled to the ring as against Justice or any other subsequent purchaser who had knowledge of the transactions between the parties. On the other hand, under the finding that Cohen was an innocent purchaser for value, he would be entitled to judgment. Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 153 Cal. 411, 95 P. 1029.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that judgment be entered in favor of the defendant and appellant for the return to defendant of the personal property described in the pleadings, or the payment to defendant of the sum of $500, the value thereof as found by the trial court, together with interest from the date of the taking thereof by plaintiff, in the event that a delivery cannot be had.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert E. Abbott, Judge.

Suit by Helen Fuller and husband against I. Worth Everett, as executor of last will and testament of Sarah C. Guess, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. S. Knott, J. H. Ardis, and J. Vincent Hannon, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, and J. W. Falkner, of El Monte, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The appellant Helen Fuller, joined by her husband for the purposes of suit, instituted this proceeding against the executor of the last will and testament of her mother, Sarah C. Guess, deceased, upon a rejected claim for the reasonable value of board and lodging, nursing and personal attendance. The plaintiffs alleged that Mrs. Guess came to their home at her own request, and that the maintenance and services were rendered at her special instance, upon a promise to pay them therefor. The defendant denied any agreement to compensate the plaintiffs, alleging that Mrs. Fuller's mother was freely and voluntarily accepted into their home, and that it was the filial duty of the daughter to so care for her because of her age and infirmities. Evidence was introduced by the respective parties, and the court rendered judgment in favor of the executor, from which the plaintiffs appealed.

The principal ground of appeal is that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the following findings of the trial court:

"It is true that the said Sarah C. Guess was the mother of the plaintiff, Helen Fuller, and that the services rendered to her said mother by the said plaintiff in the furnishing of board and lodging and nursing and attendance and otherwise, were rendered voluntarily as a filial duty and without any expectation on the part of the said Sarah C. Guess to pay therefor and without any expectation on the part of the plaintiff, Helen Fuller, or her husband, Calvin Fuller, to charge therefor, or to receive any payment therefor.

"It is not true that the said Sarah C. Guess during her lifetime paid or compensated the plaintiffs or either of them for said or any of said things, but it is true that there was no contract, express or implied, for payment by the said Sarah C. Guess to plaintiffs, or either of them, * * * and that the said Sarah C. Guess was not at any time during her lifetime liable for said or any of said things, and that her estate is not liable therefor."

Mrs. Fuller's testimony alone strongly tends to support the findings of the trial court. She swore that on or about December 5, 1922, her mother was ill and confined to her bed at her own residence; that she said to the appellant, "I am going home with you," to which the latter "must have said, 'Yes, come and go with me,'" but that nothing was then said about payment for support or attention. It is not denied that Mrs. Guess repeatedly thereafter remarked that her daughter was kind to her, and that "she does take fine care of me," and "will never regret what she has done for me." Appellant also testified, however: "She often said she intended to pay me and pay me well for taking care of her." "She did not say when, nor how she would pay me," and appellant did not ask her. "I thought she would do what was right by me." "I might have said to her that I felt indebted to do these things, that it was my place to look after her." She admitted that it was her duty toward her mother at that time, and that she did not regret having cared for her; that Mrs. Guess was her mother, and that she felt it was her duty as a daughter; that it was no additional expense except for board and attention, because her mother paid her own doctor, and for her own clothes and medicines. Other witnesses testified that the decedent had often stated that she would "pay her well," but that she could "pay her own way," that she "could help herself a little," and did not say how or when she was going to pay her daughter.

[1, 2] The foregoing presents appellant's side of the case in its strongest light, yet there is no evidence of a meeting of the minds upon any agreed kind or amount of compensation. Mrs. Fuller always replied to statements by her mother that as to payment, "Well that is your business," and that she "did not want to bother her." To warrant an inference that one relative became indebted to the other for such service, the evidence must be such as to reasonably indicate that it was the expectation of both parties that compensation should be made therefor. Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 511; Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 508. The presumption ordinarily prevailing that the services were to be paid for cannot be invoked in such cases. Newbert v. McCarthy, 190 Cal. 723, 214 P. 442. On the contrary, as was said in Ruble v. Richardson, 188 Cal. 150, 204 P. 572, 575: "Ordinarily, where services are rendered and voluntarily accepted, the law will imply a promise upon the part of the recipient to pay for them; but where services are rendered by members of a family, living in one household, to each other, or necessities are supplied by one near relation to another, the law will presume that they were gratuitous favors merely, prompted by friendship, kindness, and the relationship between them. And in such case, before the person rendering the service can recover, the express promise of the party served must be shown or such facts and circumstances as will authorize the jury to find that the services were rendered in the expectation of one of receiving, and by the other of making compensation therefor." We are unable to say as a matter of law that the trial court erred in finding from the evidence adduced that this presumption of gratuity, prompted by kindness and close relationship, had not been overcome. From the fact that Mrs. Guess never stated the time or manner in which she expected to pay her daughter for such voluntary comforts, it might for aught that appears have been her intention to compensate her otherwise than by the mere payment of money, had she survived her illness. Such an inference, if the court did so infer, might flow from the defendant's remark when asked to loan her daughter $75, as testified by the latter, that "she didn't have it," although she had a bank account of considerable size. Presuming, as we must, that pecuniary compensation was not intended under the circumstances, it follows that a finding in favor of the defendant was not improper, but was imperative.

[3, 4] During the trial appellant was asked by her counsel as to the meaning of her answer upon another trial that her mother was under no "expense" when with her, to which an objection that it had already been answered or covered was sustained. The witness had previously testified that by this she meant that her mother was under no expense for board and personal care, but that in other respects she paid her own expenses. Objections were also sustained to the question as to whether the appellant intended to donate her services or to waive the right to compensation. In sustaining the objection in this instance, the trial court remarked that it was within its province to decide what was meant. As we have heretofore observed, there was no agreement between the parties sufficiently shown to render it binding, and an attempt to prove an undisclosed intent of one of the parties was properly precluded by timely objection. It is further complained that reference to the plaintiff's testimony in another case for the purposes of impeachment was allowed without sufficient foundation having been laid therefor. Objection to this evidence is first made at this time, and cannot be considered. There appears to be somewhat conflicting testimony in the two cases, but in this, as in the other instances of asserted error, appellant fails to point out wherein any prejudicial rulings of the trial court could have so affected the final determination of the issues as to require a reversal. Since, as observed, in the absence of express agreement or other substantial evidence to the contrary, a willing and gratuitous filial duty will be presumed to have been performed, and it appearing that the testatrix in her lifetime relieved appellants of any expense for doctors, medicines, or clothing, the record before us does not tend to establish the existence of a greater burden upon the daughter than the term "filial duty" implies.

The judgment is affirmed.

DE WEES v. KUNTZ. (Civ. 6807.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Oct. 16, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨181(1)—As regards passenger's injury, driver familiar with road had no right to assume there was sufficient room to pass automobile opposite parked car (California Vehicle Act, § 136).

Automobile driver familiar with road, and having a full view at time of passing automobile where another car was parked, was not relieved from liability for injury to passenger on theory that driver had a right to assume that there was sufficient room for passing of both cars opposite the parked car in accordance with California Vehicle Act, § 136 (St. 1923, p. 561), forbidding parking of automobile on public highway unattended unless there is clear and unobstructed width of not less than 15 feet on main traveled portion of highway.

2. Automobiles ⇨201(8)—Negligence of automobile driver need not have alone caused injury to passenger to impose liability.

In order to impose liability on automobile driver for injury to passenger, it is not necessary that her negligence alone should have been cause of accident.

3. Negligence ⇨61(1)—Recovery may be had against either or both of responsible persons, where injury results from two separate and distinct acts of negligence.

Where injury results from two separate and distinct acts of negligence by different persons operating and concurring simultaneously and concurrently, both are the proximate cause, and recovery may be had against either or both responsible persons.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(87)—Passenger in automobile held not contributively negligent as matter of law in not refusing to ride at time atmosphere was filled with dust.

Passenger in automobile held not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because of failure to refuse to ride in car at time atmosphere was filled with dust, in view of evidence establishing that at time of accident view of road was not obstructed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by Nora De Wees against Dorothy Kuntz, also known as Dorothy Nell De Wees. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, and Lasher B. Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant. M. F. McCormick, of Fresno, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff in an automobile accident while riding as the invited guest of her daughter, who is the defendant. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,070, and the defendant appeals therefrom.

Appellant specifies two grounds of alleged error, either one of which, it is contended, calls for a reversal of the judgment.

It is first claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's finding that the injuries suffered by plaintiff were caused by the negligence of the appellant. The second claim is that even though it is held that the defendant was guilty of negligence, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and the court's finding to the contrary does not find support in the evidence.

The evidence discloses that both parties to the action were returning from a rodeo being held near a place called Squaw Valley, to their home in the city of Fresno. The defendant was the owner of and operating the automobile, a Chrysler roadster. The plaintiff occupied the seat to the right of the defendant. The road was an ordinary, unpaved, mountain road, and where the accident occurred the traveled portion thereof was 12 feet wide. The defendant was familiar with the road, having traveled over it many times. The only account of the accident given at the trial was the testimony of the defendant. This showed that she was traveling down-grade, and on rounding a curve in the road she saw, at a distance of about 25 or 30 feet from her, an automobile which was parked on the inner side of the road and was facing up hill. She was on the outer and right-hand side of the road descending and proceeding at about 10 or 15 miles an hour. She had ample room to pass the parked car. Almost immediately on rounding the curve she saw another car, behind the parked car, which was approaching on its right-hand side of the road. It turned to pass the parked car and thereby entered the defendant's side of the road. The defendant did not stop her car, which in one part of her testimony she said she could have done, but turned to her right to allow the approaching car to pass between her car and the parked car, with the result that the wheels on the right side of her car went off the road and the car tipped over on its side and inflicted serious injuries on the person of the plaintiff.

As illuminative of the frame of mind of the defendant upon the subject of her ability to pass the two cars, her answer to the following question is pertinent: "Q. Isn't this about the situation there as it existed when you saw these two cars, the one coming up passing the standing car? You thought that by turning to the right the other car could pass you on your left? A. Yes."

It thus appears that the defendant made no effort to stop her car before reaching the on-coming car. Had she done so, it appears that she could have avoided the accident.

[1] It is claimed by appellant that because section 136 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 561) forbids the parking of an automobile upon a public highway unattended, unless there is a clear and unobstructed width of not less than 15 feet upon the main traveled portion of the highway between the car and the unoccupied portion of the highway, this defendant had a right to assume there was sufficient room for the passing of both cars opposite the parked car, and that under the rule in Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 245, 137 P. 1078, a person has a right to presume that every other person has obeyed the law, and that therefore the defendant had a right to believe that there was 15 feet between the parked car and the outer edge of the highway. Upon this subject we deem it sufficient to say that defendant was familiar with the road, having traveled it many times, and according to her own testimony she had a full view of the road, and she also believed she had plenty of room to pass. We therefore consider the point is without merit.

[2, 3] It is also claimed by appellant that the proximate cause of the accident was the fault of the driver of the parked car in leaving it parked at a point where there was not the required space between it and the outer edge of the highway, and that it was also the fault of the driver of the approaching car in not waiting for the defendant to pass the parked car. However, it has been held that to impose liability upon the defendant it is not necessary that her negligence alone should have been the cause of the accident. Griffith v. Oak Ridge Oil Co., 190 Cal. 389, 212 P. 913; Merrill v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134; Smith v. San Joaquin Light & Power Co., 59 Cal. App. 647, 211 P. 843. It has also been held, and is the law of this state, that where an injury results from two separate and distinct acts of negligence by different persons operating and concurring simultaneously and concurrently, both are the proximate cause and recovery may be had against either or both of the responsible persons. Dow v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 162 Cal. 136, 121 P. 379; Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., supra.

[4] It is the next contention of appellant that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in this, that the evidence shows that the atmosphere was so filled with dust as to render it impossible to see for any great distance ahead of the car, and that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have refused to ride with the defendant under the circumstances, and that as a matter of law it was contributory negligence for the plaintiff to ride in the car under such circumstances. It appears that on the day of the accident a rodeo was being held at Squaw Valley, and many other persons had attended, and there was an unusual number of cars passing back and forth over the road, and that it was dusty. However, it appears from the evidence of the defendant herself that immediately upon rounding the curve, she saw the other cars and that she believed that she had plenty of room to turn to the right and let the approaching car pass her, and there is no claim made by her that the dust obstructed her view of the road to such an extent that she could not see the car and the road ahead of her.

This evidence refutes defendant's claims that plaintiff was, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence. We are of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings.

RATLIFF v. RATLIFF. (Civ. 6574.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 12, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ☞113(3)—Order denying motion to vacate default judgment on cross-complaint was appealable; "appealable order" (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473, 963).

Order denying a motion to vacate judgment of default on the cross-complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, constituted an appealable order within the meaning of section 963.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Appealable Order.]

2. Appeal and error ☞801(3)—Objection that appellant in opening brief had failed to point out error could not be raised on motion to dismiss appeal.

Objection that appellant in opening brief had failed to point out any error in any ruling of trial court, or in any order appealed from, was one that could not be raised on motion to dismiss appeal.

Koenig & Brunton, V. H. Koenig, and A. W. Brunton, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Belt and E. S. Green, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. Respondent moves the court to dismiss the appeal in the above-entitled cause for the reasons: First, that the judgment appealed from is not an appealable order within the meaning of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure; second, that the order appealed from is not subject to review; and, third, that the appellant in his opening brief has failed to point out any error in any ruling of the trial court or in any order appealed from.

[1] In Re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 251 P. 205, it is held that an order denying an application to set aside an order of the superior court on the ground of fraud is an appealable order, as the same is a special order made after final judgment, within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is held there in effect that although the general rule is that an appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment where the motion merely called upon the court to repeal or overrule the former ruling on the same facts, there are certain well-defined exceptions to said rule, and such an order is appealable where the circumstances are such that an appeal from the first order would be vain for lack of a record showing the rights of the aggrieved party.

Appellant in this case had made motion for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside a judgment of default entered on the cross-complaint.

[2] The third objection as to the matters contained in the opening brief is one that cannot be raised on a motion to dismiss an appeal.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is therefore denied.

CRAIG, J. The district attorney of Riverside county on May 10, 1929, charged the appellant by information with having committed the crime of robbery on or about August 5, 1928, to which a plea of not guilty was entered. When the case was called for trial appellant's counsel requested permission to enter an additional plea of previous acquittal of the offense so charged, which was granted. After the people had closed and the defendant had testified, his counsel offered in evidence a purported "information in the case of the State of California v. C. F. Rowe, presented by the district attorney in open court, of the county of Riverside, State of California, and filed as a record in said court on the 13th day of October, 1928." An objection thereto by the district attorney was sustained upon the ground that the offered information did not charge the same offense as that for which the defendant was on trial, and that it was not material. This ruling is assigned as a ground for reversal, but the record does not contain the tendered document nor any evidence as to the offense which was therein charged. It is impossible to say that the objection and ruling mentioned were not well founded, or that appellant was prejudiced thereby; hence there is no merit in his contention. People v. Bray, 42 Cal. App. 465, 183 P. 712. No other question is presented for our consideration upon this appeal.

Gertrude Jones, in what she calls conclusions, the questions raised by appellant, particularly when they are closely analyzed, amount to not much more than a contention that an escrow agreement is not a document subject to forgery. At least that is the interpretation that we put upon the so-called conclusions, which are set forth in one paragraph, as follows:

"Conclusions: It is respectfully submitted that the indictment does not state a public offense, for the reason that escrow instructions is not enumerated in section 470 of the Penal Code, and is not one of the documents which is subject to forgery; that escrow instructions is not a contract within the meaning and purview of that section; that each act enumerated in that section constitutes a separate and distinct offense; that each count in the indictment contains five separate and distinct offenses, and should have been pleaded in separate counts, and it was therefore illegal to try and convict appellant for five separate and distinct felonies contained in each count; that the indictment charged that appellant's entire escrow instructions was false, forged, altered and counterfeited, whereas, the proof tended to show that a clause was added therein, and, therefore, there was a material variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof, which affected appellant's substantial right; that there is no proof that appellant typed in the clause in her escrow instructions after she signed them, and that constituted a total failure of proof of the offenses charged, and appellant was entitled to the instruction advising the jury to acquit her on that ground; that the inclusion of the clause in appellant's escrow instructions, without previous express oral agreement with the sellers and the latter's failure to notice the clause therein did not constitute forgery on the merits, and for that reason the court should have advised the jury to acquit appellant; that the instruction given that if the jury believed that defendants uttered, published or passed as true and genuine the escrow instructions in any count, they should find such defendant guilty upon that ground, was erroneous, because the alleged offenses were improperly pleaded and the instructions given did not include the essential elements; that the instruction given that if the jury believed that defendants aided and abetted in uttering, publishing, or passing as true and genuine the escrow instructions in any count, they should find such defendant guilty upon that ground, should not have been given, for the reason the indictment did not charge the appellant with the commission of that offense; that instructions 22, 23, 24, 25, and 27 regarding conspiracy should not have been given, because the indictment did not charge appellant with that offense, and there was no evidence that appellant conspired to commit the offense charged in the indictment; that the instruction that a set of escrow instructions is considered and construed together as a contract was erroneous, for the reason that section 470 of the Penal Code does not enumerate escrow instructions, and such instruction is not a contract within the meaning and purview of that section; that instruction 33, to the effect that if the defendant Ruline inserted the clause at appellant's instigation, without the knowledge of the seller, constituted forgery, should not have been given, because that would at most constitute a false clause, which does not constitute forgery as a matter of law; that the judgment is contrary to law, because the undisputed physical facts show that appellant did not forge any of the escrow instructions, and for that reason the court should have advised the jury to acquit appellant upon the merits, and the rulings of the trial court were inconsistent. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, the indictment dismissed, and appellant discharged from imprisonment."

[1] The instructions complained of, which defined conspiracy, and which stated just how far the acts of each conspirator bind the remaining conspirators, and the instruction that states how far their declarations are admissible against the rest of the conspirators, are, we think, correct, and were properly given in this case, for the reason that the defendant Jones is jointly charged with two other defendants with the commission of the crimes alleged to have been committed, although she is the sole appellant before this court. She was not charged with conspiracy to commit a crime, and she was not found guilty of the crime of conspiracy.

[2, 3] From appellant's opening brief, and from said supplemental brief of defendant and appellant, and from the appellant's reply brief, we glean no more objections to the judgment of conviction than set forth in the foregoing "Conclusions." In this case, the evidence clearly shows that the appellant, E. Gertrude Jones, took advantage of each of the persons defrauded or sought to be defrauded in each of the matters set forth in the counts of the indictment, upon which she was convicted, except possibly on the five counts 2, 5, 8, 10, and 11, upon which the court granted her a new trial. The court sentenced her on seven counts, namely, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 12, and 13, and judgment was entered on said counts that she be imprisoned in San Quentin as prescribed by law. The court at the time of sentence dismissed counts 2, 5, 8, 10, and 11, and this appeal is taken by her from such judgment of conviction, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial. If all of the evidence connecting defendant Jones with the charges against her was set forth in the supplemental opening brief of defendant and appellant,

E. Gertrude Jones, it would require a much more elaborate discussion of the points involved. However, that is not the fact. There are only certain parts and portions of the evidence alleged to be against said defendant set forth in said supplemental brief, but we have had to take all of the evidence as shown by the transcripts in order to determine what the evidence really was.

The contention of appellant (which seems to be the main contention, in that it is more or less interwoven with all of her objections), that the escrow instructions are not contracts, and that such an instrument is not one of the instruments susceptible of being forged, is not worthy of any further discussion, as it was a contract actually acted upon, and the deals each were consummated in accordance with the altered escrow instructions. However, objection is also made by appellant that the insertion of certain changes in the escrow instructions would not make such escrow instructions, as altered, a forged instrument. The cases cited by appellant have no bearing whatsoever upon a case of this kind. The entire object of the appellant was apparently centered around, and her fraud was entirely perpetrated by the insertion of, the particular clauses inserted in the escrow instructions or contracts, without the knowledge and after the signature of each of the parties defrauded had been obtained to each of the escrow instructions. All the damage done to the innocent parties to the transaction was caused by the insertion of this portion of the escrow instructions, and the completion of the deals or escrows and the transactions therein provided for, as set out in the escrow in its altered state. The entire instrument, as so altered, was not an instrument that would have been signed by any of the persons defrauded, if they had been in their right minds, unless they had been entirely uninformed as to business matters, and did not know the difference between first and second incumbrances or liens on property.

The contention of appellant that these parts and portions of the contract claimed to have been inserted were as a matter of fact in the contracts or escrows at the time the escrows were made is not borne out by the evidence taken as a whole, and can only be read into the evidence by taking isolated and fragmentary portions of the evidence by itself, which the jury evidently did not do.

We can see no merit in any point raised by appellant.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

I concur in the judgment: HOUSER, J.

CONREY, P. J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment. It may be that a single escrow instruction, made by one party, is not a contract. But where such instruction is accompanied by another instruction given by the other party, and the two documents are intended to and do contain the complete terms of a single transaction, they constitute a written contract, and a contract so written is capable of forgery.

The instructions concerning the law of conspiracy were appropriate in this case, in order to make clear the principle that, although appellant did not actually commit, with her own hand, the act of forging the instruments, she was responsible as a principal, if the forgeries were committed by another person with whom appellant had conspired for the accomplishment of the felonious acts described in the indictment.

SUNDBERG v. RINGEL. (Civ. 6960.) *

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 11, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 10, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 4, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨234—Insurance carrier was properly joined as defendant, if policy, or ordinance pursuant to which policy was issued, provided it should inure to benefit of public.

Where policy insuring jitney bus driver was issued pursuant to city and county ordinance, insurance carrier was properly joined as party defendant, in action for injuries from operation of jitney, provided insurance policy or ordinance provided that it should inure to the benefit of the public.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1053(7)—Where court instructed that insurance carrier was no longer in case, admission of records bearing on bus driver's insurance was not prejudicial to him in action for injuries.

In action for injuries against driver of automobile jitney bus and insurance carrier, admission in evidence of records, policies, and papers bearing on question of defendant's insurance held not prejudicial to individual defendant, where court instructed jury that insurance company was not interested in the case and had ceased to be in the case any longer.

3. Damages ⇨96—New trial ⇨74—Damages for injuries are matter for jury's discretion, and subsequently for discretion of trial judge on motion for new trial.

Amount of damages to be awarded in action for injuries are matter first for sound discretion of jury, and next committed to discretion of trial judge, who may consider evidence anew in ruling on motion for new trial.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1004(3)—Verdict approved by trial court cannot be set aside, unless so plainly excessive as to suggest passion or corruption (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5).

Decision of jury as to damages for injuries, where upheld by trial court, cannot be set aside on appeal as excessive, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 5, unless verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest at first blush passion, prejudice, or corruption of jury.

5. Damages ⇨132(3)—$10,000 for permanent injuries, weakening back and leg, causing pain and preventing hard labor, held not excessive.

$10,000 damages to 39 year old man for permanent injuries, causing weakness in back and leg and severe pains in back, and preventing him from doing hard labor and compelling him to wear brace, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Ernest E. Sundberg against Isidor Ringel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco (Carroll B. Crawford, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Hugh K. McKeivitt and Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant, Isidor Ringel, from a judgment entered against him upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $10,000.

Plaintiff, Ernest E. Sundberg, brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by him in an automobile collision. On February 6, 1926, plaintiff was driving and operating a Ford truck on the westerly side of the Embarcadero, near its intersection with Sansome street, in the city and county of San Francisco when his truck was struck by an "automobile jitney bus" driven by defendant Isidor Ringel throwing plaintiff from his truck and rupturing the ligaments in his back, and inflicting other injuries to his back and body.

The only defendant in the original complaint was Isidor Ringel, but an amended complaint was filed, in which "the California Highway Indemnity Exchange" was also joined as a defendant, by reason of a policy of insurance issued by it to its codefendant Isidor Ringel, under the terms of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco. Both defendants interposed general and special demurrers to the amended complaint, setting up, among other grounds, the misjoinder of parties and actions. Both demurrers were overruled, and defendants in due time filed separate answers, denying negligence on the part of defendant Isidor Ringel, and denying other allegations of the complaint, and for a further, separate, and distinct answer defendants alleged that plaintiff's injuries, if any, were the proximate result of his own negligence and carelessness. The case was tried before the court sitting with a jury, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's case a nonsuit was granted to "the California Highway Indemnity Exchange," and the case was continued as to defendant Isidor Ringel, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. No question is raised regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment.

[1] Appellant first contends: "The court erred in overruling the respective demurrers of the defendant Exchange and defendant Isidor Ringel, upon the question of misjoinder of actions and parties defendant, for the reason that by so doing the fact that the defendant Isidor Ringel carried a policy of insurance was repeatedly and improperly called to the attention of the jury, to the prejudice of the substantial rights of appellant." There is no merit in this contention. This precise point was urged in the case of Fraher v. Eisenmann (Cal. App.) 270 P. 704, 705, by the same attorneys who represent the appellant in the case at bar, and there this court said: "The appellant complains that the trial court erred in permitting the jury to learn that he was insured against loss by his codefendant. The insurance carrier was joined as a party defendant on the theory that the policy of insurance inured directly to the public under the rule of Gugliemetti v. Graham, 50 Cal. App. 268, 270, 195 P. 64, and Malachowski v. Varro, 76 Cal. App. 207, 213, 244 P. 936. The policy having been issued pursuant to an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, the insurance carrier was properly joined as a party defendant, if the policy itself or the ordinance provided that it should inure to the benefit of the public. See cases just cited, and Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 445, 181 P. 779; Kruger v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, 201 Cal. 672, 678, 258 P. 602. The point was raised upon separate demurrers interposed by the appellant and the insurance carrier. Both demurrers were overruled, and this is now assigned as error. The appellant's demurrer on the ground of the misjoinder of his codefendant was properly overruled, unless it appeared from the face of the complaint that he was prejudiced thereby. Gardner v. Samuels, 116 Cal. 84, 90, 47 P. 935, 58 Am. St. Rep. 135; O'Connell v. Rogers, 72 Cal. App. 539, 542, 237 P. 775. But the demurrers were to be determined upon what appeared upon the face of the complaint, and not upon what might be developed during the trial of the case. As the complaint alleged that this policy inured to the benefit of the public, the case came squarely within the rule of the cases above cited, and the demurrers were properly overruled."

[2] Appellant next contends that the court erred in admitting in evidence "certain records, policies, and papers bearing upon the question of jitney bus insurance alleged to be carried by the defendant Isidor Ringel for the reason that the admission of such evidence was unwarranted, improper and prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant." This contention was likewise made in Fraher v. Eisenmann, supra, and held to be without merit.

Furthermore, in the case at bar, the court instructed the jury that the "insurance company" was not interested in the case, using this language: "At the outset, in this case, I might say to you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, that perhaps you don't understand that this case is now between the plaintiff on the one side, Ernest E. Sundberg, and the defendant on the other side, Isidor Ringel. The California Highway Indemnity Exchange is out of the case, so in your deliberation upon the case you just consider the fact that they are not interested and that they are not in the case any longer."

[3, 4] The next and last contention made is that the verdict is excessive. A motion for a new trial upon several grounds, among them being "Excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of * * * prejudice," and "Excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion," was made. Section 657, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc. The motion for a new trial was denied.

The rule is well established that the amount of damages in this kind of an action is committed first to the sound discretion of the jury and next to the discretion of the judge of the trial court, who, in ruling upon the motion for a new trial, may consider the evidence anew, determine anew the facts, and set aside the verdict, if it is not just. Upon appeal the decision of the trial court and the jury on the subject cannot be set aside, unless the verdict is "so plainly, and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 262 P. 1100, 1102, and cases there cited.

We have carefully examined the entire record, including the evidence, and there is nothing in the record to show or suggest that the verdict was not the result of the fair and honest judgment of the jury.

[5] At the time of the collision respondent was a man thirty-nine years of age in good health. It cannot be doubted that respondent received severe and permanent injuries and suffered great pain and anguish. Dr. Howard Fleming, who examined respondent on six or seven occasions after the accident, testified regarding respondent's injuries and disability, as follows:

"Q. What is the condition of his spine and back? A. (by Dr. Fleming): Mr. Sundberg has suffered a strain of his lumbar sacral bone and has sacra iliac joint and has an injury to the lumbar sacral plexus or nerve to his left leg.

"Q. What effect does that injury have on him? A. That causes him severe pain in his back and pelvis and marked weakness of his left leg.

"Q. And the doctors you mentioned, in conjunction with yourself, have been treating him in an effort to restore him to his normal condition? A. Yes.

"Q. What has been the result of the treatment? A. There has been very little improvement.

"Q. Will these injuries be permanent in your opinion? A. I don't know; I imagine he will have some permanent disability.

"Q. How will that affect him? A. Cause a marked weakness of his back. He will not be able to do hard labor.

"Q. Is he compelled to wear a steel corset? A. He is compelled to wear a brace.

"Q. Will he be compelled to continue with the brace? A. He probably will be. * * *

We think, when the extent and character of the injuries received by respondent are all considered, the award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court, is not at all disproportionate to the compensation reasonably warranted by the facts. We find no prejudicial error in the record.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

ELCONIN v. YALEN et al. (Civ. 5543.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Sept. 17,
1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ⇨166(3)—Finding that there was no agreement for specific compensation of attorney held without support (Civ. Code, §§ 1619-1621).

Finding of court that there was no agreement, either express or implied, as defined by Civ. Code, §§ 1619-1621, for specific compensation of attorney, held without support in evidence.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1071(3)—Unsupported finding that there was no agreement for compensation of attorney held not prejudicial, in view of undisputed finding as to discharge.

Finding of court that there was no agreement for specific compensation of attorney, though without support in evidence, held not prejudicial, in view of undisputed finding that discharge of attorney was with good cause and reason.

3. Attorney and client ⇨134(1)—Measure of recovery by attorney wrongfully discharged is reasonable value of services rendered to time of discharge.

Where an attorney is wrongfully discharged by his client prior to completion of services, the measure of his recovery is reasonable value of services rendered up to time of discharge.

4. Attorney and client ⇨165—Allegation of indebtedness in reasonable sum for professional services of attorney, with denial thereof, presented issue as to quantum meruit.

Allegation in attorney's action to recover fees as to indebtedness for professional services claimed as reasonable charge, together with specific denial of such allegations, squarely presented issue as to quantum meruit.

5. Attorney and client ⇨167(1)—Trial judge, having evidence of nature and extent of attorney's services, could determine reasonable value thereof, with or without aid of testimony.

Where court, in attorney's action to recover fees, had before it evidence of nature and extent of services, trial judge was empowered to use his own experience and judgment as to reasonable value of services, with or without the aid of testimony of witnesses as to value.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1071(6)—Failure to find as to agreed attorney fee was not prejudicial error, where recovery could only be had on quantum meruit.

Failure of court to make any finding as to agreed fee as compensation for attorney was not prejudicial error where recovery could only be had on quantum meruit, since prejudicial error cannot be predicated, either on finding on an immaterial issue, or on failure to find on an issue, when such finding would not, if made, necessitate any change in judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by Benjamin Elconin against William Yalen and another. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Higgins, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

V. H. Koenig and J. S. Garnett, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Appellant, an attorney, brought this action to recover fees claimed to be due him for his services in connection with a claim for damages for personal injuries and the litigation in the superior court arising therefrom. He also sought recovery for legal services in a justice's court action, and for costs and expenses advanced by him in both matters; but these items, totaling $46.90, were not disputed, and appellant recovered judgment therefor. The portion of the judgment with which appellant is dissatisfied is that wherein the court below awarded him $300 for his services in the matter of the damage claim, and his contention with respect thereto is that neither the judgment nor the findings upon which it is based are supported by or consistent with the evidence.

The amended complaint set up, in the first count, an oral contract between appellant and respondents, whereby appellant was to render all necessary legal services "in the matter of negotiating for settlement or the institution and prosecution of a suit" on account of respondents' injuries, and alleged "that said de-defendants agreed to pay to the plaintiff one-third of any sum accepted by them by way of settlement, or for which a judgment might be obtained and collected." It was further alleged—and as to this there is no dispute in the evidence—that appellant, after attempting to effect a settlement, filed suit on behalf of the respondents, and that, after he had caused the action to be set for trial, he was discharged by respondents, and that a judgment was subsequently obtained in the sum of $5,000, which was compromised by respondents for $4,500, which sum was paid to them. The amount asked for by appellant was one-third of the sum thus received by respondents, or $1,500.

The second cause of action was on a common count, merely alleging an indebtedness of $1,500 for services rendered, and alleging that sum to be a reasonable charge therefor.

The answer denied the existence of any contract, and of any agreement to pay a fee of one-third the amount recovered, "or any sum or at all," and denied any and all indebtedness to appellant.

The fact of appellant's employment was not disputed by respondents in their testimony. There was, however, a sharp conflict as to the terms of that employment. Appellant testified that one-third of the amount recovered was the fee asked by him at the very outset, and that respondents agreed thereto. Respondents, on the other hand, swore that no such agreement as to fees was made, and that appellant offered to handle the matter for 10 per cent. in event of a settlement, and 20 per cent. if the matter went to suit, which offer they accepted.

The court found that the parties had entered into an oral contract for appellant's legal services, but that they had not agreed to pay him a one-third fee, and that there was no specific agreement as to compensation. It is this finding which is the subject of appellant's attack on this appeal.

"An express contract is one the terms of which are stated in words" (Civ. Code, § 1620), while "an implied contract is one the existence and terms of which are manifested by conduct" (Civ. Code, § 1621). "A contract is either express or implied" (Civ. Code, § 1619). (Italics ours.) Manifestly it cannot be both. By the testimony of both appellant and respondents, there was an express contract for the employment of appellant and for payment for his services on a contingent fee basis; the only variance in their respective versions was as to the percentage of the amount recovered which he was to receive if successful. It would, of course, have been entirely possible for the parties to have mutually agreed upon the employment of appellant, the nature and scope of the services which he was to render, but to have left the question of the amount or percentage of his remuneration in abeyance; in other words, there might have been an express contract of employment and an implied contract for payment. In this event the implied contract would have been to pay him the reasonable value of his services. Gage v. Atwater, 136 Cal. 170, 68 P. 581; Buck v. City of Eureka, 124 Cal. 61, 56 P. 612. No witness, however, testified to any such arrangement; all agreed that there was an express contract which included terms of compensation.

[1, 2] The court might have accepted appellant's version of the oral agreement and rejected that of respondents, or vice versa. There was, however, no basis in the evidence before it to justify or support its finding that " * * * there was no agreement by or between said parties for any specific sum or compensation. * * *" (Italics ours.)

While we are thus in accord with appellant's contention that the finding above referred to is not supported by the evidence—indeed, is in direct conflict therewith—we are unable to discover in what manner appellant has been prejudiced thereby. The court found that the discharge of appellant by his clients, the respondents, "was with good cause and reason," and neither the correctness of this finding nor the sufficiency of the evidence to support it is disputed by appellant.

[3] While some of the earlier California decisions in cases involving attorney's fees indicated a different rule (Countryman v. California Trona Co., 35 Cal. App. 728, 170 P. 1069, and Webb v. Trescony, 76 Cal. 621, 18 P. 796), the later cases all hold that even where an attorney is wrongfully discharged by his client prior to the completion of his services, the measure of his recovery is the reasonable value of his services rendered up to the time of his discharge (Hall v. Orloff, 49 Cal. App. 745, 194 P. 296; Ayres v. Lipschutz, 68 Cal. App. 134, 228 P. 720, and Boardman v. Christin, 65 Cal. App. 413, 224 P. 97).

[4, 5] The issue as to quantum meruit was squarely presented in the instant case by appellant's second cause of action wherein he alleged an indebtedness to himself of $1,500 (plus certain incidental and undisputed amounts) for professional services as attorney, which sum he further alleged to be "a reasonable charge" therefor, and by respondents' specific denial of these allegations. This issue the court below determined by finding in accordance with the averments of the second cause of action, except as to the reasonable value of the services, which it found to be $300. True, there was no testimony offered or received as to the value of appellant's services up to the time of his discharge, but in cases of this nature none is required. The court had before it evidence of the nature and extent of appellant's services, and found in detail with respect thereto, and its findings on this subject are not attacked by appellant. The learned trial judge was empowered to use his own experience and judgment as to the reasonable value of these services, with or without the aid of the testimony, of witnesses as to value. Estate of Duffill, 188 Cal. 536, 552, 206 P. 42; Estate of Straus, 144 Cal. 553, 77 P. 1122; Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49; Freese v. Pennie, 110 Cal. 467, 42 P. 978; Kendrick v. Gould, 51 Cal. App. 712, 197 P. 681.

[6] Since the appellant could not have recovered, except upon a quantum meruit, it follows that any finding as to the agreed fee would have been immaterial, and prejudicial error cannot be predicated either upon a finding upon an immaterial issue (Hill v. Morrison, 88 Cal. App. 405, 263 P. 573; Wells v. Zenz, 83 Cal. App. 137, 256 P. 484; Woodhead v. Wilkinson, 181 Cal. 599, 185 P. 851, 10 A. L. R. 291), or upon a failure to find upon an issue when such finding would not, if made, necessitate any change in the judgment (Chester R. Pyle Co. v. Fossler, 200 Cal. 204, 252 P. 599, 601). The finding upon the issue of the reasonable value of appellant's services was determinative of the case, and "if findings are made upon issues which determine the case, other issues become immaterial, and a failure to find thereon does not constitute prejudicial error." Id.

MEILINK v. GIANELLI et al. (Civ. 3803.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Courts $\S$ 472(4)—Superior court had no jurisdiction to determine liability of heirs and beneficiaries as stockholders before distribution of estate (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1664, 1666).

Superior court had no jurisdiction, in action to enforce stockholders' liability, to determine liability as to heirs or beneficiaries under will, while estate was in course of administration and undistributed, since the court sitting in probate had exclusive jurisdiction of estate, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1664, 1666.

2. Descent and distribution $\S$ 119(2)—Instrument executed by beneficiaries under will, waiving objections to assignment of corporate assets, did not create liability as stockholders before distribution.

Instrument whereby heirs of deceased stockholder consented to assignment of corporation and all its property and assets in trust for benefit of creditors did not operate, so as to create liability of beneficiaries as stockholders of corporation before distribution of estate, since there can be no effective acceptance of stock until determination by court sitting in probate as to those entitled to have stock distributed to them on final settlement of estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by H. F. Meilink against Louisa Gianelli, as executrix of the last will of Giuseppe Gianelli, and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest J. Torregano, of San Francisco, Levisky & Jones, of Stockton, and Torregano & Stark, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jacobs & Jacobs, Warren H. Atherton, and R. L. Gianelli, all of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The facts stated herein are alleged in the complaint. The Joe Gianelli Company is a corporation with a capital stock of 1,000 shares. At all times since the organization defendant Joe Gianelli, Jr., has owned 25 shares, B. R. Gianelli 25 shares, and Louisa Gianelli 50 shares. Guiseppe Gianelli, now deceased, owned 900 shares from the organization of the corporation to the time of his death. He left a last will, by which he gave his wife, Louisa Gianelli, one half of his property, and the other half to his children in equal shares. There is some uncertainty in the complaint as to whether the stock was specifically bequeathed, but in his closing brief appellant admits that it was not. The will was admitted to probate, and Louisa Gianelli was appointed executrix thereof. As such executrix, she has possession of the 900 shares of the stock. The estate is in course of administration and undistributed. It does not appear that any proceeding has been had to determine who are the heirs of the deceased, or who are entitled to distribution of the estate.

The plaintiff, as assignee of many creditors of the corporation, brought this action to recover from the defendants on their liability as alleged stockholders for debts incurred by the corporation since the death of the deceased. The defendants demurred to the complaint. The demurrers of Joe Gianelli, Jr., B. R. Gianelli, Louisa Gianelli, and Louisa Gianelli, as executrix, were overruled. The demurrers of the defendants who have no interest in the stock of the corporation, except as heirs or beneficiaries under the will, were sustained, without leave to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of such defendants. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

[1] It clearly appears that the demurrers of the beneficiaries were properly sustained. The court is without jurisdiction to determine in this action who are entitled to distribution of the estate, but the court sitting in probate has exclusive jurisdiction to determine that question. Schade v. Stewart (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 567; 12 Cal. Jur. 125 and 165; Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1664 and 1666. It would be a singular rule which would hold the beneficiaries liable as stockholders when subsequently, in the probate proceeding, it may be conclusively determined that they are not entitled to have any of the stock distributed to them.

Appellant relies on Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 346, 349, 136 P. 284, 285, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825, where it is said that "a legatee who does not renounce a legacy of shares of stock in a corporation but upon distribution receives and accepts the same, must be held to have been the owner of said stock from the time of the death of the decedent, and, in consequence, liable as such for his proportion of the corporate debts contracted after the death of the decedent." Not only does the language quoted show that the legatee's right to distribution had been determined in the probate proceeding, and that the shares of stock had been distributed to him, but the court further said: "Of course, until distribution, it cannot be certainly known that any shares of stock would ever be distributed in kind to the heirs or legatees." The decision relied on in no manner supports appellant's contention.

[2] The complaint further alleges that the beneficiaries under the will executed and filed in the probate proceeding an instrument reading as follows:

"We, the undersigned, adult children and heirs of Guiseppe Gianelli, deceased, and legatees and devisees under his will, do hereby give our consent and waive all objection to the assignment by the Joe Gianelli Company, a corporation, of all its property and assets, in trust, for the benefit of all its creditors, and we hereby consent and waive all objection to the executrix of said estate voting, as such executrix, the stock of said corporation that belonged to said deceased in his lifetime, in favor of such assignment for the benefit of said creditors, and if so voted, we hereby consent that the superior court in which said estate is pending may ratify, authorize or affirm said act of said executrix in voting said stock and in making such assignment insofar as said estate is concerned or interested in said corporation."

It is not perceived in what manner this instrument can be given the effect of making the beneficiaries liable as stockholders of the corporation. If a decree had been entered in the probate proceeding distributing the stock to them, then the instrument would tend to show their acceptance of the stock; but there can be no effective acceptance until it has been determined that they are at least entitled to have the stock distributed to them on the final settlement of the estate, a determination which, as stated, cannot be made in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROTHSCHILD v. GIANELLI et al.★
(Civ. 3804.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1929.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of San Joaquin County, C. W. Miller, Judge, in an action upon stockholder's liability. Affirmed.

Ernest J. Torregano, of San Francisco, Levinsky & Jones, of Stockton, and Torregano & Stark, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jacobs & Jacobs, Warren H. Atherton, and R. L. Gianelli, all of Stockton, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover from the defendants on their alleged liability as stockholders of the Joe Gianelli Company, a corporation, for debts incurred by the corporation since the death of Guiseppe Gianelli, who owned 900 shares of the capital stock of the corporation. The demurrers of the defendants Joe Gianelli, Jr., B. R. Gianelli, Louiga Gianelli, and Louisa Gianelli, as executrix of the last will of Guiseppe Gianelli, deceased, were overruled. The demurrers of the other defendants were sustained, without leave to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of such defendants. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

The facts relating to the liability of the defendants are in all respects the same as those in the case of Mellink against the same defendants (Civ. No. 3803), 90 Cal. App. —, 280 P. 561, this day decided by this court.

On the authority of that case, the judgment is affirmed.

^a RICHARDS, J. This is an application for a writ of review made originally to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second District, Division 2, but finally transferred to this court for hearing and determination. The petitioner was the employer of one James W. Williamson, who on November 26, 1927, sustained an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Upon receiving notice of its employee's said injury, the petitioner herein furnished to said Williamson medical treatment through Dr. A. C. Coffey, its regular physician, and who treated the injured employee for some time for the aforesaid injuries. On December 12, 1927, Dr. Coffey advised Williamson that he would be able to return to work in a few days, and he in fact returned to work on December 19th, remaining at work until January 3, 1928, but complaining of his condition, and actually being confined to his bed for several days intervening and prior to January 5, 1928. On the latter date he returned to the physician requesting further treatment, but said physician was of the opinion that Williamson had so far recovered from the effects of his injury as to resume work, notwithstanding the fact that the latter was still complaining of his nervous and worn out feeling, and refused him further treatment. Williamson then went to Dr. Wm. F. Rey of Oxnard for treatment, and was examined and treated by the latter for several days, during which he claimed to have discovered further and as yet unrelieved conditions resulting from his aforesaid injuries. On January 8, 1928, Dr. Rey informed the petitioner herein and its insurer that he was treating Williamson for the condition resultant upon his injury, but received no reply from either until about three months later, and which replies when received were unsatisfactory. On April 23, 1928, Williamson filed with the Industrial Accident Commission an application for adjustment of his claim that the petitioner was under obligation to pay for the treatments he had received from Dr. Rey under the provisions of section 9(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 836, as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4, and St. 1925, p. 640), which provides that the employer shall furnish "(a) such medical * * * treatment * * * as may reasonably be required to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury, the same to be provided by the employer, and in case of his neglect or refusal seasonably to do so, the employer to be liable for the reasonable expense incurred by or on behalf of the employee in providing the same." On the hearing upon said application the commission took considerable testimony touching the single question presented by such application, viz., as to whether the employee brought himself within the foregoing provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act, at the conclusion of which the commission made its findings of fact supporting the applicant's claim, holding that the proceedings upon said hearing sufficiently disclosed that "the employer refused and neglected to furnish further medical treatment required to cure and relieve from the effects of said injury and said employee is entitled to his reasonable medical expenses to be fixed by the commission * * * in case the parties are unable to agree out of court." The commission subsequently, and in accord with its said findings, made the award which the petitioner herein seeks to have reviewed and annulled.

[1, 2] The sole question presented upon the present application is as to whether the commission had sufficient facts before it to give it jurisdiction to make said award. It is the contention of the petitioner herein that the showing made by the employee was insufficient to justify the aforesaid finding of the commission as to the employer's failure and refusal to furnish the employee with such further medical treatment as his condition as shown to exist on January 5, 1928, required, and what further treatment was refused him by the regularly employed physician of the employer theretofore in charge of his case. We do not deem it necessary to indulge in a further review of the facts of the case than as are hereinbefore set forth, for the reason that so to do would merely result in disclosing that the evidence produced before the commission upon this identical issue was in sharp and substantial conflict. If the commission believed the testimony of the applicant Williamson and of his selected physician, Dr. Rey, regardless of the counter showing made by the employer and its insurer, such testimony would, in our opinion, be sufficient not only to support its award but to give to the commission jurisdiction to make the same, and since the only question before us is one of jurisdiction, we would under the foregoing condition have no constitutional power to review or annul the commission's said award. It is needless to cite authorities upon so thoroughly settled a proposition of constitutional law. The award is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 14, 1929.

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 125(31)—Information containing two counts, one charging possession and another operation of still, held to charge but one offense, namely, that of operation of still (St. 1927, p. 497, $\S$ 1).

Information under St. 1927, p. 497, $\S$ 1, containing two counts, one count charging defendant with willful, unlawful, and felonious possession and control of still, and second count charging defendant with willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously operating and causing to be operated a still, held to charge but one offense, namely, that of operating still, since defendant may have still in his possession or under his control without operating same, but could not have operated it without having it under his control and in his constructive possession, and since it was not intention of Legislature that several acts named should be split into several separate offenses, for purpose of imposing penalty for violation of each singly.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 200(1)—Person tried and convicted of crime including various incidents cannot thereafter be tried and punished for offense consisting of one or more of such incidents.

Where person is tried and convicted of crime which has various incidents included in it, he cannot thereafter be tried and punished for an offense consisting of one or more of such incidents.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

F. E. Clemett was convicted of the unlawful possession and the unlawful operation of a still, and he appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Raymond E. Hodge, of San Bernardino, and Henry C. Huntington, H. William Hess, and Huntington & Hess, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

SEAWELL, J. Appeal from judgment of conviction and order denying motion for a new trial.

The defendants F. E. Clemett, Jessie Clemett, Frank Rathburn, and G. W. Poppett, were jointly charged by an information, containing two counts, filed against them in the superior court of the county of San Bernardino, with the violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to stills and other devices for the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, and providing a penalty therefor." The defendants F. E. Clemett and Frank Rathburn being brought to trial, the jury found Clemett guilty on both counts of the information, and acquitted Rathburn of both charges upon the advice of the court to do so, given at the conclusion of the case. The defendant Clemett neither demurred to the information nor moved in arrest of judgment.

The case was taken over after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, not because we questioned the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction upon either of said counts, nor because reversible error was pointed out by the petition for hearing upon any ruling made or instruction given or refused by the trial court, but solely for the reason that we entertained grave doubt as to whether two separate crimes had been committed by the defendant, within the purview of the act as above entitled (Stats. and Amends. 1927, p. 497, c. 277), the body of which is in the following words:

"Any person whether acting in his own behalf or as the agent, servant, officer or employee of any person, firm, association or corporation, who shall be the owner of or have any interest in or who shall operate or cause to be operated or knowingly have in his possession or control, any still, still worm, still cap, still condenser or stilling device of any kind, designed, used or intended for use in the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand dollars ($1,000) nor more than five thousand dollars ($5,000), and by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year nor more than five years." Section 1.

It is apparent from the act that it was adopted to prevent the illicit manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes by the use of stilling devices of any kind, designed or intended to be used in the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. In other words, its enactment was intended as an aid to a more complete enforcement of the national and state prohibition acts.

As early as People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394, and People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, it was held that co-operative acts constituting but one offense, when committed by the same person at the same time, when combined, charge but one crime, and but one punishment can be inflicted as one offense. "Where a statute makes two or more distinct acts connected with the same transaction indictable, each one of which may be considered as representing a stage in the same offense, it has in many cases been ruled they may be coupled in one count. Thus, setting up a gaming table, it has been said, may be an entire offense; keeping a gaming table, and inducing others to bet upon it, may also constitute a distinct offense; for either, unconnected with the other, an indictment will lie. Yet, when both are perpetrated by the same person, at the same time, they constitute but one offense, for which one count is sufficient, and for which but one penalty can be inflicted." Wharton, Criminal Law, approved in People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394.

Again, in People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, it was said: "The indictment is good, whether it be regarded as containing two counts or but one. Where, in defining an offense, a statute enumerates a series of acts, either of which separately, or all together, may constitute the offense, all such acts may be charged in a single count, for the reason that notwithstanding each act may by itself constitute the offense, all of them together do no more, and likewise constitute but one and the same offense."

This court, in People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 P. 748, 751, quotes approvingly the following excerpt from the court's disquisition in State v. Cooster, 10 Iowa, 454, in holding that an indictment did not state two offenses because it charged the defendant with keeping a gambling house and permitting other persons in a place under the control of defendant to play for money and other things: "The objection has its origin in the idea that there is such a difference in the essential qualities of these two acts as to make them separate offenses. But is this true? They are found in the disjunctive clause of the same section of the Code, visited with the same penalty, and it is the better opinion that in their essence they are one and the same offense, the guilt of which may be incurred in one or other of these methods."

That the rule announced in said earlier decisions is the settled law of this state is confirmed by many subsequent cases. People v. De La Guerra, 31 Cal. 460; Ex parte McCarthy, 72 Cal. 384, 14 P. 96; People v. Harrold, 84 Cal. 567, 24 P. 106; People v. Gosset, 93 Cal. 641, 29 P. 246; People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 P. 748; People v. Gusti, 113 Cal. 177, 45 P. 263; People v. Kuder et al. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 193; People v. Barnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 P. 572.

[1] All of the acts set out in the statute before us for construction are coupled with the disjunctive "or," one of which or all of which joined constitute but one offense. By count 1 it is alleged that the defendants on or about the 3d day of January, 1928, and prior thereto (not stating whether it was one day or more prior to January 3, 1928), did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously have in their possession and under their control one still, etc. By the second count it is charged that said defendants on or about the 3d day of January, 1928, and for a period of about five months continuously next prior thereto, did willfully, etc., operate and cause to be operated one certain still, etc. If he operated and caused to be operated said still, it was indisputably in his possession and under his control. The operation of the still includes a longer period than is included within the averment that the still was under his control. It is alleged that he operated it for about five months prior to January 3, 1928, a definite fixed period, while it is alleged in the other count that he had it in his possession and under his control on or about January 3, 1928, and prior thereto. Under the rule of pleading, the possession and control clause may be limited to one day prior to January 3, 1928, or at most a reasonable time prior thereto, and could under no rule of construction be extended backward beyond the period of five months, during which time it is alleged the defendant was operating the same still. Clearly the possession and control period is covered by the period during which the defendant operated said still. The defendant may have had a still in his possession or under his control without operating the same, but he could not have operated it without having it under his control and in his constructive possession. The possession and control period is included in the period of operation, inasmuch as possession and control were incidental to operation. We have read all of the evidence adduced in the case and this conclusion is fully confirmed by the fact. The same principles applied and reasoning adopted by courts generally in distinguishing the two offenses of possession and transportation are applicable to the instant case.

[2] In Schroeder v. United States (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 60, 65, the rule is well stated: "Possession for a substantial time, and followed by transportation, might constitute two distinct offenses, just as possession for a substantial time, followed by a sale, might amount to two distinct offenses. But, where the only possession shown is that which is necessarily incidental to the transportation, the offense is single, and not double. Miller v. United States (C. C. A.) 300 F. 529, 534; Morgan v. United States (C. C. A.) 294 F. 82, 84; Rossman v. United States (C. C. A.) 280 F. 950, 953; Reynolds v. United States (C. C. A.) 280 F. 1. And the law is settled that, where a person is tried and convicted of a crime which has various incidents included in it, he cannot thereafter be tried and punished for an offense consisting of one or more of such incidents. To do so would be to inflict double punishment. In re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 176, 185, 9 S. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118; United States v. Hampden (D. C.) 294 F. 345, 348."

The severity of the penalty for the violation of the provisions of the act, the maximum being five years' confinement in the state prison, and a fine of $5,000, is in confirmation of our construction. It was not the intent of the Legislature that the several acts named

In the statute before us should be split into several separate offenses for the purpose of imposing a penalty for the violation of each singly. There are cases in which a person may be guilty of both transportation and possession of intoxicating liquor, as shown by the circumstances of the particular case. Such cases are discussed in Ex parte Chaus (Cal. App.) 268 P. 422.

We are of the view, upon the authority heretofore cited, that the Legislature prescribed but one punishment for a violation of said act, the punishment therefor to be meted out as the facts of the case might warrant.

[3] The guilt of the defendant cannot, upon any reasonable grounds, be doubted. Roy Bearden and wife, who resided with their family in the city of Los Angeles, had an interest and were in possession of an orange orchard containing approximately $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres situate near Fontana, San Bernardino county. It was somewhat remote from other residences, and there was very little general highway travel near said orange orchard. The orange trees were large, and they and other trees shielded the inner premises from public view. Mr. Bearden had constructed upon said premises a building 100 feet in length, 16 feet wide, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet in height on the north side, and 11 feet in height on the south side, with the intention of engaging in raising chickens. The place was unoccupied until possession was taken by appellant and his confederates. Appellant, whose name appears to be Clemett, lived at San Diego before coming to San Bernardino. On May 29, 1927, he and a man whose name has not been satisfactorily established, arrived at the residence of the Beardens in Los Angeles, and, the Beardens not being at home, appellant wrote a note and affixed it to the doorknob, stating the business he wished to see Mr. Bearden on and that he would return. Between 11 and 12 o'clock that night he did return, and introduced himself as Mr. G. L. Johnson, and the man who accompanied him as his brother. He stated that he was in the poultry raising business in San Diego, and that he wished to transfer his business to San Bernardino county; that he had 750 chickens which he wished to transport to said San Bernardino county. After talking over the terms of lease of the Bearden place for some time, the two men, left with the understanding that appellant would meet Bearden at his ranch on the following day. Bearden, with his family, consisting of his wife, two daughters, and son, met the appellant and his supposed brother, agreeable to said appointment, and appellant permitted himself to be introduced to Mrs. Bearden and the daughters and son as Mr. Johnson, and the other man was introduced as Johnson's brother. An agreement was finally reached whereby defendant Clemett, under the name of G. L. Johnson, executed with Bearden a one-year lease at the rate of \$25 per month. He said that he might want to buy the property later. Appellant paid down \$50, and thereafter paid personally other rentals until about December, when he entered into negotiations to buy said property through the intermediary of a woman, who was represented to be Mrs. Lenora Fredrickson, the daughter of a Mr. Winters, but who in fact was the Jessie Clemett, jointly charged with the appellant. Positive evidence was adduced to the effect that she was the wife of appellant Clemett. The man represented to be Winters, reputed father of Lenora Fredrickson, was really G. W. Poppett, also jointly charged by the information herein with appellant and Lenora Fredrickson.

The lease was executed by appellant in the name of "G. L. Johnson" and upon delivery of the escrow papers he requested that the old lease, which had served its purpose, be delivered to him, which request Mrs. Bearden granted. Appellant furnished the purchase money, and the escrow papers were executed by Mrs. Lenora Fredrickson. G. W. Poppett, who assumed the name Winters, went into possession immediately upon execution of the lease, and remained in possession until the premises were raided by the undersheriff and two deputy sheriffs of the county. A section of the chicken house had been converted into a place for the manufacture and distillation of intoxicating liquors on a large scale. Poppett, alias Winters, was found to be in charge. The property seized consisted of a 250-gallon still; 23 barrels of mash, of 50 gallons' capacity each; 6 30-gallon barrels of mash; 70 gallons of alcohol; one electric ager; 30 empty 30-gallon barrels, besides jugs and bottles. The still was warm, and was designed and fully equipped in every way for use, and was intended to be used and was in use in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, as it had no doubt been used for several months. The criminal participation of the defendant in the violation of the provisions of said act was established by such a number of incriminating facts and circumstances as to leave no doubt of his guilt.

It was the desperate effort of the appellant at the trial to separate himself from his alter ego G. L. Johnson, and in attempting to do so, in the face of the positive and convincing testimony of four or five witnesses to the effect that he represented himself to be G. L. Johnson, and executed papers in the name of Johnson, and even went so far as to draw a check on a bank for $1,000, which was paid on the purchase of said premises against funds which he had previously deposited in the name of G. L. Johnson, and paid and caused to be paid demands against Johnson on account of the ownership of said premises, he denied that he held himself out as Johnson, and made the absurd claim that, when he called upon Mr. Bearden, with whom he had had no previous acquaintance, to negotiate the leasing of his premises, in introducing himself to him he did not refer to himself by any name, but merely introduced the man who was with him as "brother Johnson," and the several witnesses were mistaken in understanding him to introduce the unidentified man as his brother. His account of his first meeting with the man who was with him, and concerning whom he would give the impression was the real G. L. Johnson, is as absurd as the other explanations he made in absolving himself of any connection with operating said still. His testimony was that he went from San Bernardino to Tia Juana on a pleasure trip alone, and while there, by chance, he met the genuine G. L. Johnson and Mrs. Fredrickson, both strangers to him, in a saloon where the three were casually thrown together; that the three spent the day together drinking and enjoying a social day, and Johnson then told him that he was interested in the chicken raising business, and that he had a flock of 750 chickens in San Diego; that he desired to locate at San Bernardino, and made an agreement with appellant to pay him $500, if he would find a place there which he might lease that was suitable for his business; that Johnson afterwards came to San Bernardino and sought him out, and that he called his attention to the Bearden place; that, the lease being consummated for a term of one year at a rental of $25 per month, Johnson afterwards concluded to buy the property, and paid him $500 for negotiating the lease, in accordance with his promise made at Tia Juana, and in addition thereto placed $1,000 in his hands to pay the Beardens for their equity in said property. He deposited this sum in a bank in the name of G. L. Johnson, and drew a check against it in concluding the transaction, by signing Johnson's name to the check, and passed the money to Mrs. Fredrickson, who applied it to the purchase of said property. The mysterious Johnson for whom he was acting did not disclose his personnel in any of the transactions of lease, purchase, or control of the property other than through Clemett, the appellant. Appellant took the witness stand, and his testimony was most completely discredited by the many contradictory statements made in his testimony, as well as by the inherent improbability of its truthfulness in many material respects, and by the testimony of witnesses, whose testimony, sounding in reason, was doubtless credited by the jury.

The jury's verdicts were rendered on the counts separately, and the judgments were correspondingly pronounced. For the reason herein stated, the judgment pronounced upon count 1, which charged control and possession of said still, etc., is reversed. The judgment rendered upon count 2, which charged the willful, unlawful, and felonious operation of a certain still or device designated for use in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, etc., and the order denying a new trial upon said issues, are each affirmed.

Where broker did not purport to sign telegram as agent of seller, broker's signature at bottom of telegram was not signature by party to be charged or by his agent sufficient to satisfy requirements of Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4, especially where there was no offer of proof that broker had written authority to do so as required by section 2309, providing that authority to enter into contract required by law to be in writing can only be conferred by instrument in writing.

2. Frauds, statute of §116(1, 2)—Contention that placing of name in telegram by broker not acting in representative capacity was sufficient signature to satisfy Statute of Frauds held without merit (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4).

Where telegram was not signed by seller nor by any one purporting to act for it in representative capacity, contention that broker by inserting name of manager of seller at beginning of telegram was acting as amanuensis of manager, and, when name was so placed at his direction, insertion thereof became manager's signature sufficient to satisfy requirements of Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4, held without merit.

3. Frauds, statute of §115(5)—Insertion of name of seller's manager in telegram at instance of seller's representative held not sufficient signature within body of instrument (Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4).

Fact that broker inserted name of manager of seller in body of telegram at instance and request of representative of seller held not to bring case within rule that seller's signature to satisfy Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4, may appear within body of writing and need not appear at end thereof.

4. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 115(5)—Seller's signature, to be sufficient if appearing within body of instrument, must be placed there with intention of authenticating writing (Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, subd. 4).

Under Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, subd. 4, seller's signature, to be sufficient if appearing within body of instrument, must be placed there with intention of authenticating writing.

5. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 115(5)—Placing signature in body of telegram merely for purposes of identification, and not for authentication, held insufficient to satisfy Statute of Frauds (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, subd. 4).

Where it appeared beyond question that broker signing telegram acted individually and not in any representative capacity whatever, and placing of manager of seller's signature in body thereof was not at instance and request of manager and without intention to authenticate telegram, signature of manager of seller appearing in body of telegram was not sufficient to satisfy Statute of Frauds, Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, subd. 4, requiring signature by party to be charged or by his agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by G. W. McNear against the Petroleum Export Corporation. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lorrin Andrews, of Los Angeles, and Ira S. Lillick, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Black, Hammack & Black and Carey McWilliams, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit granted on the motion of the defendant made at the close of the plaintiff's opening statement to the jury.

The plaintiff brought the action to recover the sum of $68,637.60 as damages for breach of an alleged contract to sell two cargoes, or some six million gallons, of gasoline. The action came on for trial before a jury and during his opening statement plaintiff's counsel read the following two documents to the jury:

"October 14th, 1925.

"As broker I confirm the sale of the following goods at the price and terms mentioned below.

"This is subject to acceptance by both seller and buyer and their acceptance makes this contract binding.

"Seller: Petroleum Export Corp., Los Angeles, Calif., U. S. A.

"Buyer: G. W. McNear, 423 California St., San Francisco, Calif., U. S. A.

"Goods: Gasoline, 61 to 63 degrees Beaume gravity, 40% distilling below 212 degree F., end point not over 400 degrees F. See detailed specifications below.

"Quantity: Two cargoes, each about 7,500 tons 10% more or less or the full capacity of the vessels. Tons referred to are 2240 lbs. each.

"Price: 11¢ per American measured gallon delivered F. O. B. buyer's tank vessels at Port of Los Angeles, Calif., U. S. A.

"Terms: Net cash against shipping documents and petroleum inspector's certificate of quantity and quality in San Francisco.

"Shipment: One cargo during the month of December, 1925, and the other cargo between December 15th, 1925, and January 15th, 1926.

"Specifications: Gravity 61 to 63 degrees Beaume. 40% distilling below 212 degrees F. End point not over 400 degrees F. Sweet to Doctor test and must stand corrosion test. Color not darker than 25 Saybolt. Sulphur not over .10%.

"All tests to be made according to methods for testing contained in U. S. Government Technical Paper 323A, part two.

"Inspection: Each cargo is to be inspected by Charles Martin & Co. for quality and quantity and they are to issue their certificates for same and settlement made thereon. Cost of said inspection to be equally divided between buyer and seller.

"Other conditions: Seller guarantees not less than 30' of water at the loading dock and that the vessels can always lie safely afloat.

"Seller is to load buyer's vessels at a rate of not less than 1800 tons per day. Should the loading rate be less than this seller is to pay demurrage at the rate of 36¢ per net registered ton of the vessel. Time to count from the time the captain notifies seller that he is ready to load.

"Sampling of cargoes to be sealed in presence of captains of the vessels and one set given to the captain.

"Respectfully submitted

"Mr. G. W. McNear, San Francisco, Calif., 423 California St. Collect. Smith of Petroleum Export says will fill order for two cargoes gasoline. Will sign contracts when contracts for tanks etc. are closed probably today. Making arrangements for General Petroleum to load first vessel in case of need.

"W. K. Thompson."

The plaintiff offered to prove that W. K. Thompson, named as the signer of the telegram, was a broker; that the Mr. Smith mentioned at the beginning of the telegraphic message was general manager of the defendant, Petroleum Export Corporation, and had authority to close any contract for the sale of gasoline on behalf of the defendant; that said Smith approached W. K. Thompson for the purpose of effecting a sale of two shiploads of gasoline of the grade and quality specified in the document dated October 14, 1925, and which is termed by the parties an "order," at the price of 11 cents a gallon, delivered at the port of Los Angeles; that Thompson successfully negotiated with the plaintiff in San Francisco to buy the gasoline at the price stated and that the plaintiff asked Thompson, the broker, to prepare an order, which the broker did in the words of the document herein quoted dated October 14, 1925, but which, as is shown, was unsigned; that two days later Mr. Smith went to Mr. Thompson's office and dictated the telegram dated October 16, 1925, hereinabove quoted, and which Mr. Thompson wrote and sent in the presence of Smith; that the plaintiff received the telegram and thereupon telephoned to Mr. Thompson at Los Angeles that the matter was satisfactory; but that, though the plaintiff was ready, able, and willing to receive and pay for the two cargoes of gasoline, the defendant has refused to deliver them. The complaint alleged a contract for the purchase and sale of gasoline of the same quantity, grade, and specifications and for the same price as set out in the so-termed "order" of October 14th.

The trial court granted the motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the alleged contract was invalid because there was no note or memorandum thereof in writing subscribed by the party to be charged or by his duly authorized agent. Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4. As grounds for his appeal from that judgment the plaintiff contends that the terms of the contract relied upon need not all be embodied within the signed writing, but may be incorporated therein by a reference in the signed writing to a writing which is not signed; that the signature need not be at the bottom of the instrument, but may be found at the top, middle, or elsewhere therein; that the words "Smith of Petroleum," in the telegram of October 16th, written at the request and in the presence of Smith, is a sufficient signature of the party to be charged by his agent, within the meaning of the rule; and that the act of Thompson in writing Smith's name was the act of Smith. On the defendant's part it is contended that, even conceding the contentions of the plaintiff, still there is no completed or concluded contract between the parties; that more remained to be done before the minds of the parties could meet on a complete acceptance than merely the reduction of their agreement to a formal writing.

[1] It must be concluded that the signature "W. K. Thompson" at the bottom of the telegram is not a signature by the party to be charged or by his agent sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute. Thompson did not purport to sign as the agent of the defendant, and even if he had done so there was no offer of proof that he had written authority so to do. Section 2309, Civ. Code.

[2-4] It is, however, argued that by inserting the name "Smith" at the beginning of the telegram Thompson was acting as the amanuensis of Smith, and when that name was so placed at the direction of Smith the insertion thereof became the signature of Smith sufficient to bind the defendant. The contention is without merit, and the authorities cited by the plaintiff are not applicable to the facts here presented. In each of the cases relied upon the document was purported to be signed by the party to be charged. Here the telegram relied upon as binding the defendant is not signed by the defendant nor by any one purporting to act for the defendant in a representative capacity. The fact that Thompson inserted the name "Smith" in the body of the telegram at the instance and request of a representative of the defendant company cannot bring the case within the rule that the signature need not be at the end of the document but may be elsewhere. Something further is required. The rule requires that the signature necessary to satisfy the requirements of the statute, wherever placed or adopted or appropriated, must be so placed with the intention of authenticating the writing. 27 Cor. Jur. 288. That the intention to sign and authenticate the document is an indispensable factor is established in other jurisdictions, as shown in the cases cited in Corpus Juris, and the rule is well illustrated by cases in this state involving the sufficiency of signatures to holographic wills, wherein it has been held that wherever the signature to a will may be placed, the fact that it was intended as an executing signature must satisfactorily appear on the face of the document itself (Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 163 P. 358, L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227; Estate of Morgan, 200 Cal. 400, 253 P. 702), and that proof of such intention may not rest in parol (Estate of McMahon, 174 Cal. 423, 163 P. 669, L. R. A. 1917D, 778).

We see no good reason why this rule of evidence should not apply generally to instruments claimed to have been signed, contrary to the universal custom (Estate of Manchester, supra), at some place other than at the end thereof. In no other way may the integrity of the statute requiring the writing be preserved.

[5] We come then to the consideration of whether the telegram in question shows on its face that it was the intention of Smith to execute the document either personally or on behalf of the defendant corporation. It appears beyond cavil that it was signed at the usual place for signing by W. K. Thompson individually, and not in any representative capacity whatever. If Thompson had signed Smith's name at the end of the telegram at the latter's instance and request, or if the telegram had been formulated at Smith's direction and transmitted unsigned at the bottom, a different question might arise. But admittedly such is not the case. The argument of the plaintiff is, in effect, that the telegram was signed twice, once by Thompson at the usual place for the signature on such a document, to wit, at the end thereof, and also by Smith in the body of the instrument. To approve the contention would be an undue extension to the rule. It seems more reasonable to conclude that the intent of inserting the words "Smith of Petroleum Export" at the beginning of the telegram was for the purpose of identification and not authentication. In such a case the statute of frauds is not satisfied. Sutherland v. Munsey, 119 Va. 791, 798, 89 S. E. 882.

There is also merit in the defendant's contentions that the terms of the telegram are too indefinite and do not contain all of the elements of a contract as to price, terms, etc., and that in any event there was no reference in the telegram sufficient to incorporate therein the terms of the first but unsigned document, even assuming that the first document could be so incorporated; but these contentions become of no importance in view of our conclusion that the telegram was not signed by the party to be charged nor by his authorized agent.

The judgment is affirmed.

ZURICH GENERAL ACCIDENT & LIABILITY INS. CO., Limited, v. STADELMAN et al. (S. F. 13187.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 17, 1929.

1. Insurance §133(2)—Workmen's compensation policy, excluding employer's family, except those named in declaration, held not "limited compensation policy," required to be so designated (Pol. Code, § 602b et seq.; Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a)).

Workmen's compensation policy, providing that it should not apply to members of employer's family, except those named in declarations, with disclosures of amounts of wages, as required by insurance commissioner, under Pol. Code, § 602b et seq., held not "limited compensation policy," under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a), St. 1917, p. 831, requiring limitation of compensation payable by policy to be printed in bold-faced type, with words "Limited Compensation Policy" at top of policy.

2. Insurance §435—Workmen's compensation policy, excluding employer's family, did not limit compensation payable, and precluded award to employer's son, not complying with policy (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a), as amended by St. 1929, c. 679).

Workmen's compensation policy, providing that it should not apply to members of employer's family, except those named in declaration, with disclosures of amounts of wages, etc., held not to limit compensation payable to any one, under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a),

St. 1917, p. 831, but involved exclusion of certain persons from field of coverage, because employment and wages were not disclosed as required, and son of insurer, whose employment and wages were not disclosed, was excluded from all benefits arising under policy, in view of St. 1929, c. 679, amending section 31(a).

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Pete Stadelman to recover compensation for injuries, opposed by P. C. Stadelman, employer, and the Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Commission, awarding compensation, the assuer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Superseding opinion in 276 P. 407.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco (Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco (Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The petitioner in this matter is the insurance carrier under a policy of workmen's compensation insurance issued to Peter C. Stadelman, one of the respondents. The policy contained the following provision:

"(d) It is agreed upon the delivery and acceptance of this policy, that if the employer is an individual and has a family (meaning husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister or parent residing within this employer's household), this policy shall not apply to any member or members of such family except those named in the declarations with disclosures of the annual amounts of wages, salaries, emoluments, or profits of each, but not less than $2,700.00 for each. The amounts so stated shall be considered the remuneration of such members of the family subject to audit as respects any increase thereof as in the policy provided. The proper premium rate for the hazard to which such member of the family is exposed shall apply to this remuneration."

Pete Stadelman, also one of the respondents, a son of Peter C. Stadelman, was employed by his father, and was injured during the life of the policy, and in the course of his employment. On application for compensation due proceedings were had before the respondent Industrial Accident Commission, during which evidence was introduced establishing, and the commission found, that Pete Stadelman was a member of the assured's family and was residing within the employer's household at the time of the injury. The evidence also showed that Pete Stadelman was not named in any declaration incorporated in the policy of insurance, with a disclosure of his annual wages. Over the objection of the insurance carrier that, by reason of the findings and the terms of the policy, any claim of Pete Stadelman for compensation was excluded, the commission made an award to Pete on the basis of a permanent disability rating. It held the insurance carrier liable, and dismissed the assured from the proceeding. Petitioner renews here the contention urged before the commission that, on the facts found, Peter Stadelman, as a son and member of the household of the employer, was excluded from any claim to benefits accruing under the policy.

The position of the respondents, in support of the award, is that the insurance carrier attempted in this case to issue a policy containing a limitation as to the compensation payable—in other words, a “limited policy”—but that failure by the insurer to observe the requirement contained in section 31(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831) rendered the policy unlimited, and that any and all employees of Peter C. Stadelman were covered by it. Section 31(a), prior to its amendment during the 1929 session of the Legislature, provided:

“If any insurance policy shall be issued covering liability for compensation, which policy shall contain any limitation as to the compensation payable, such limitation shall be printed in the body of such policy in bold-face type and in addition thereto the words ‘limited compensation policy’ shall be printed on the top of the policy in bold-face type not less than eighteen point in size. Failure to observe the foregoing requirement shall render such policy unlimited.”

[1] There are policies in use in this state which are called “deductible average” policies, whereby the assured agrees to pay up to a certain amount and the insurer the balance. “Ex-medical” policies are also issued, which exclude payment for all medical attention. Such policies, by common usage and acceptance have been regarded as “limited compensation policies,” and have been required to conform to the provisions of section 31(a), supra. The policy here in question does not fall within the classes of policies just referred to. The form of indorsement and disclosure of wages included in the terms of the policy issued by petitioner here is one approved by the insurance commissioner of the state, and by him required to be part of every policy covering workmen's compensation written for an individual, it being the plain intent of such requirement to exclude members of the assured's family (as defined in the indorsement) unless specifically named in the policy declaration. When they are included, the rate of premium paid in, we understand is determined, in part at least, by the disclosure made by the insured. Authority for the action of the insurance commissioner is found in section 602b et seq. of the Political Code relating to the classification of risks and premium rates to be filed by insurance carriers licensed to transact workmen's compensation business in this state.

[2] Petitioner argues that the instant policy does not limit the compensation payable to any one rightfully claiming under it, but merely involves an exclusion of certain persons from the field of coverage, for the reason that their employment and the amount of wages paid were not disclosed as required by the terms of the insurance contract. We are of the view that the construction of the petitioner is the correct one to place upon the policy. We do not find that such interpretation has ever before been questioned by those in charge of the administration of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It appears to have been a common practice to approve the issuance of policies providing for the exclusion of designated prohibited risks. The present claim of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission is directly in conflict with its own contention in other cases, with some of which this court is very familiar.

In 1923, several claims for compensation, arising out of injuries suffered by employees of the Williams Bros. Aircraft Corporation, which had furnished two airplanes with pilots to the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, were submitted to the Industrial Accident Commission for adjustment. The policy of compensation insurance issued to the Aircraft Corporation excluded liability for aviation risks, except for a named pilot. Compensation was claimed by an employee, who was injured in the course of his employment, but who was not named in the declaration, and it was contended by the injured person there, as here, that such a policy was “limited” in the sense used in section 31(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, supra, and that since the policy did not have printed in proper type the words “limited compensation policy” it became unlimited, and all employees of the insured were covered, rendering the insurer liable for the injury to the particular applicant. The commission held that the limitations referred to in section 31(a) applied to the extent of liability, and that the policy in question, as it merely limited liability to certain classes of work being performed and to certain specific cases of aviation, did not limit the liability as to the classes of employees covered, was not a “limited” policy within the meaning of the section, and that the liability of the insurance carrier did not extend to the injury occurring to the applicant then before it. It therefore discharged the insurance carrier from liability. Pugh v. Famous Players Lasky Corporation et al., 10 Dec. of Ind. Acc. Com. 224.

The employer filed a petition in the Supreme Court for a review upon the ground that its insurance carrier had been unlawfully exempted from liability, for the reason that the policy in question was a limited compensation policy, and was rendered unlimited through the failure of the insurance company to comply with section 31(a), supra. The commission resisted the application, and the writ was refused. We see no material difference in the application of the two cases. The decision and rulings in the Pugh Case seem exactly applicable here. See, also, Worswick Street, etc., Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 181 Cal. 550, 185 P. 953, and State, etc., Fund v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 70 Cal. App. 650, 234 P. 116.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the various general and special contentions made by the respondents. We have examined all of them, and we have read the authorities cited. Section 31(a), was first enacted in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 279). It was re-enacted, verbatim, in 1917. Not until this year and after the present case and others of like import arose in this court, was it sought to amend the section. We will refer to the amendment presently. To adopt any other interpretation of the clause at this time than that now contended for by petitioner would result in confusion in the matter of rates and classifications in policies already written and in other matters closely related to existing workmen's compensation insurance in this state. This view was at one time, if it is not now, held by the respondent commission, which a long time ago advanced it to the industrial world and to the insurance carriers. In its brief, filed in this court in opposition to the application for review made by the employer in the Pugh Case, supra, it said, in support of its construction of the policy there in question (that which we are now adopting), "the practice of the insurance world is in accordance with this distinction and any change in construction would necessitate drastic revision of all workmen's compensation policies in force in this state." Happily no change in construction is required.

The Legislature, at its last session, amended section 31(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act to definitely provide that "policies of compensation insurance may be issued insuring either the whole or any part of the liability of any employer for compensation and any such policy may restrict or limit such insurance in respect to locations, employees, operations or risks, or restrict or limit the amount or kind of compensation to be furnished or paid or limit or restrict such insurance in any other manner whatsoever." Stats. 1929, c. 679. Such policies must be approved by the insurance commissioner as to substance and form, and failure to observe the requirements of the section renders any policy, not complying therewith, unlimited. The practice now so clearly permitted under the section as amended appears to be in complete accord with what seems to have been the practice and understanding approved and followed under the old section. The new section lists the kind of policies which have been issued in the past in accord with the generally accepted theory of section 31(a), and removes all doubt as to the issuance of such policies in the future.

The claimant in this case, having been by the express terms of the policy and the failure of the insured to disclose his employment and wages, excluded from all benefits arising under the policy, the award is annulled.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Tony Mazzina, a minor, claimant, by William Mazzina, his guardian ad litem, to recover compensation for injuries, opposed by Alfred Michelotti, employer, and the Maryland Casualty Company, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, insurer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Superseding opinion in 276 P. 410.

R. P. Wisecarver and W. G. McKean, both of San Francisco (Daniel W. Burbank and C. F. Laumeister, both of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco (Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Proceeding in review. The petitioner was the insurance carrier of the respondent Michelotti, who employed the respondent Tony Mazzina, a 12 year old boy, in his meat shop. The policy issued to Michelotti contained the provision: "This policy shall cover such injuries, including death resulting therefrom, sustained by any employee or employees legally [italics added] employed by this employer." In operating a meat grinder, Mazzina cut off some of his fingers. It was not disputed, and the respondent commission, on application for an adjustment of compensation, found, that Mazzina was illegally employed, but, nevertheless, made an award in favor of Mazzina and against this petitioner, as the insurance carrier of the employer.

[1, 2] This court has already construed, and held binding on an assured and those claiming under him, a provision in a workmen's compensation insurance policy that it covers "such injuries, including death, sustained by any employee legally employed." Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 179 Cal. 716, 178 P. 858, 859. But respondents here make a new contention in support of the order making the award, and that is that by the insertion of the proviso in the policy issued to Michelotti, restricting its application to those "legally employed" by him, an effort was made to issue a "limited" policy, and, the provisions of section 31(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) not having been complied with, the policy became an unlimited policy, applying to each and all of Michelotti's employees, whether legally or illegally employed. The exact question of the effect of so-called limited policies, and of the failure of an insurer to comply with section 31(a), supra, has had recent consideration by this court, and is decided in direct opposition to the contention of the respondents in an opinion filed this day. Zurich, etc., Ins. Co. v. Stadelman et al., 280 P. 687.

On the authority of the cases cited, the award in this case is annulled.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act by William Jones and another, claimants, to recover compensation for injuries opposed by the American Mercury Corporation and another, employers, and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, the insurer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Superseding opinion in 276 P. 412.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco (Daniel W. Burbank, C. F. Laumeister, and Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ), for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Proceeding in review to annul an award made by the respondent Industrial Accident Commission for injuries received by an employee of the American Mercury Corporation, who was injured during the course of his employment. The legal question to be decided is so far identical with that considered and to-day decided by this court in Zurich, etc., Ins. Co. v. Stadelman, 280 P. 687, and Maryland Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 280 P. 690, as to be governed by what was said in those cases, and the decision must be the same.

The American Mercury Corporation applied for, and there was issued to it by the petitioner here, a standard workmen's compensation policy, covering the corporation's workmen's compensation liability at its Oceanic mine, near Columbia, in San Luis Obispo county, in this state. While the policy was in force, William Jones, an employee of the assured, was injured during the course of his employment at a mine claimed to be operated by the assured at Keene, in Kern county. Upon his application for compensation, an award was made in his favor and against the insurance carrier, which is here sought to be annulled. It is the contention of the petitioner that the Industrial Accident Commission exceeded its jurisdiction in making the award, for the reason that the policy of insurance issued by it did not cover the operations, if any there were, of the assured in Kern county.

The two stipulations in the policy material to this discussion are:

"Item 3. Location of all factories, shops, yards, buildings, premises or other work places of this employer by town or city with street and number: Oceanic mine, 3 miles from Columbia, San Luis Obispo county, California."

"Item 5. This employer is conducting no other business operations at this or any other location not herein disclosed—except as herein stated: There may be, but not covered hereunder."

It seems very apparent that it was the intention of the insurer and assured in this case to exclude from the field of coverage of the policy any operations, if such there were, carried on by the assured at any point other than at its Oceanic mine. This case differs from the Zurich and Maryland Casualty Cases, supra, only in that the employees concerned in those cases belonged to classes of employees excepted by the provisions of the policies, while in this case the injury was incurred at operations not covered by the policy, but directly excluded. The contention that the policy here became an unlimited policy through failure of the insurer to print on it "Limited Compensation Policy," and to print the exclusion provision in bold-faced type, all as required by section 31(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), is no more tenable than it was in the two cases, supra, just decided. The directly contrary interpretation of the section has been accepted by the courts, by the respondent Industrial Accident Commission itself, and by the insurance world in this state, ever since the section was first enacted. The state compensation fund, an activity of the state, created by it the better to carry out the beneficent objects of the Workmen's Compensation Act, has marked as "limited" policies, to conform with section 31(a), only those policies containing limitations on amounts of compensation payable, as, for instance, when the employer assumes medical expenses, or all over or under a designated sum. Contemporaneous and long-continued construction of section 31(a) has definitely and conclusively established and declared the intent of the Legislature in enacting it, and what clearly appears to be its meaning. Such interpretation seems to be eminently fair and just, and we have no hesitation in accepting and acting on it.

The award in this case is annulled.

PEOPLE v. SPINATO et al. (Cr. 1825.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

I. Jury $\S$ 29(6)—Failure of defendants to personally expressly waive jury required reversal, regardless of stipulation between counsel and district attorney (Const. art. 1, $\S$ 7).

Under Const. art. 1, $\S$ 7, relative to waiver of jury in criminal cases by consent of both parties expressed in open court, the failure of defendants to personally expressly waive jury required a reversal, regardless of stipulation between counsel and district attorney that trial without a jury be had, since, where the Constitution prescribes the method and form of such waiver, it cannot be otherwise accomplished.

2. Jury ☞29(6)—Implied consent to waiver of jury trial is insufficient under constitutional provision requiring express consent thereto (Const. art. 1, § 7).

Implied consent to waiver of jury trial is insufficient under Const. art. 1, § 7, requiring express consent thereto irrespective of counsel, and that defendant must be joined in such waiver by his counsel; the mandate of the Constitution not authorizing a delegation of privilege nor being satisfied by assertion that defendant did not by objection or otherwise express his dissent.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Joe Spinato and others were convicted of a felony, and they appeal. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Leo Youngworth, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellants were charged with having committed felonies in the county of San Bernardino, and were convicted. They appeal from the judgments, and, having assigned as a ground for reversal the fact that neither of them personally expressly waived a jury, and contending that they were thus deprived of their constitutional rights, we shall first consider this point. It appears that their counsel and the district attorney stipulated in open court that a trial before the court without a jury be had, but the defendants were not asked, nor did they state, whether or not they desired a jury. In People v. Garcia (Cal. App.) 277 P. 747, 748, upon an appeal by the people from an order granting a new trial, this court held that an attempted waiver of a jury by counsel without an expression to that effect by the defendant was not sufficient under our statute. It is here insisted on behalf of the people that the point is raised by the defendants, upon appeal only, and that under the decisions of federal and other state courts an express waiver of this constitutional right by counsel in the presence of the defendants should be held an implied waiver by them, and sufficient to satisfy the constitutional and statutory provisions. Section 7, article 1, of the Constitution, as amended in 1927 (see St. 1927, p. 2367), provides as follows: "The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, by the consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel, and in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil actions and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of twelve, or of any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court."

As was said in People v. Garcia, supra, prior to the amendment the right of trial by jury in felony cases could not be waived, and under the decisions of this state a waiver in misdemeanor cases by consent of "both parties," as provided for by section 684 of the Penal Code, did not include the defendant's counsel. It was concluded in that case that the expression in the section of the Constitution above mentioned, "consent of both parties, expressed in open court by the defendant and his counsel," required the expression in open court not only by the defendant's counsel, but by the defendant in person. In this regard it was further said: "The Legislature may prescribe the methods of procedure in this respect in civil cases, but in criminal actions involving charges of felony, the sovereignty represented by one of its regularly designated members as district attorney, and the defendant, may waive a trial by jury by expressing in open court their intention to that effect, and in this waiver the defendant's counsel must join. From previous rulings and the express language of the Constitution, it is at once obvious that this inviolate constitutional right may not be taken away in disregard of the fundamental legal privilege and power of election guaranteed to the party charged, by attempting to vest in his representative the dual capacity and authority of counsel and accused. Not only is the Constitution explicit as to the parties who may consent to waive a trial by jury, but it is equally definite as to the form in which the consent must be given, for the provision is that it must be 'expressed in open court.' Nothing could be more clear than this language. To say that a mere failure to object to the trial proceeding without a jury is sufficient is to ignore the plain mandate of the Constitution in its use of the phrase last above quoted."

Of Kearney v. Case, 12 Wall. 275, 20 L. Ed. 395, and United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 631, 1 S. Ct. 601, 606, 27 L. Ed. 290, cited by the respondent, it is sufficient to observe that neither of them suggests that the constitutional right to a jury trial may be waived in a felony case in a federal court. In the first, a civil case, the question presented was as to whether or not a waiver of jury sufficiently appeared as required by the statutes to enable the Supreme Court of the United States to review the rulings of the lower court. In United States v. Harris, supra, the constitutionality of a statute attempting to denounce certain acts a public offense was involved, and the question arose as to whether or not the certificate of division of opinion was sufficient to enable the Supreme Court to consider the matter. By way of illustration, Kearney v. Case, supra, and other decisions were cited, as to the proper method of presenting the record, but this was merely incidental to the discussion of the merits. The court concluded:

"We are, therefore, of opinion that the request by counsel of the United States for a certificate of division is sufficiently shown by the record in this case, and that our jurisdiction is clear." In this regard section 649 of the Revised Statutes (Barnes' Federal Code, § 1329 [28 USCA § 773]) is mentioned, but said section relates exclusively to civil cases, and requires that the waiver of a jury must be stipulated in writing. The same may be said of Wayne County v. Kennicott, 103 U. S. 554, 26 L. Ed. 486. Other authorities cited by the respondent hold that immunity from second jeopardy may be expressly or impliedly waived, that one may waive a jury in civil and misdemeanor cases, and one charged even with murder may waive a trial and plead guilty. In the instance last mentioned it was said that the right of trial "is not so sacred but that it may be waived by legislative consent." Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 249, 126 N. W. 737, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966. In Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 S. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232, it was held that if a defendant be presented by information rather than by indictment, other proceedings being regular, he is not deprived of any constitutional guaranty. Other rulings to the effect that in misdemeanor cases, if counsel plead not guilty for the defendant it will be presumed that the latter was present (People v. Cline, 83 Cal. 374, 23 P. 391), and that if no objection be made to a trial without a jury, it will be held upon appeal that the jury was waived when the question is then raised for the first time (State v. Graves, 161 Minn. 422, 201 N. W. 933). We think, however, that these authorities are all beside the issue. It is not contended, nor are we aware of any rule, that a person charged with a felony may not waive counsel, or venue, or the right to a trial by jury, or even the trial itself by pleading guilty. Nevertheless, in none of the foregoing cases has it been said that a sacred constitutional guaranty will be presumed to have been renounced in a felony case when the Constitution prescribes the only method by which one standing charged may be tried, and it is admitted that he was not advised by court or counsel and did not comply with such provisions.

[1, 2] The issue here presented, and one which was necessarily involved and finally determined in the Garcia Case, is not whether a jury may be waived, but how it may be waived. We repeat what was said in that decision, that where, as in this instance, the Constitution has prescribed the method and form of such waiver, it cannot be otherwise accomplished. Where, as here, an express consent is required, no implied consent will suffice. The provision of our Constitution now in question expressly requires that the "parties" shall, irrespective of counsel, state their willingness to be tried without a jury, and the defendant must be joined in such waiver by his counsel. Hence we hold that an expression to that effect by counsel is not sufficient. The mandate of the Constitution that a defendant shall express in open court his consent does not authorize a delegation of that privilege, nor is it satisfied by the assertion that he did not by objection or otherwise express his dissent.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CRUDO v. CRUDO. (Civ. 6810.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

1. Divorce $\S$ 184(4)—Appellate court must presume, where evidence is not before it, that finding in divorce action was supported by evidence.

Where evidence in action for divorce was not before appellate court, presumption exists that finding that agreement settling property rights between husband and wife before divorce has not been vacated, annulled, or set aside, and is in full force and effect, is supported by evidence.

2. Husband and wife $\S$ 278(1)—Provision in agreement settling property rights between husband and wife releasing parties from various claims, if void, held severable and not to affect remainder.

Provision in agreement between husband and wife before divorce settling property rights, releasing parties from all claims and demands whatsoever for support, maintenance, alimony, counsel fees, and costs in any action pending or which may be brought by either party, if void, as being against public policy, held severable from other provisions of agreement and not to affect balance thereof.

3. Husband and wife $\S$ 281—Findings showing continuous separation since separation agreement held not to support contention that agreement was annulled by subsequent reconciliation.

Contention that agreement settling property rights between husband and wife before divorce was annulled by subsequent reconciliation of parties held without merit, where evidence in action for divorce was not before appellate court, and findings showed separation took place before agreement and that there had been no reconciliation since date of separation and that parties were still living separate and apart and unreconciled.

4. Divorce $\S$ 171—Particular instance of cruelty, part of continuous course, alleged in former action where divorce was denied, held available in subsequent action.

Where alleged acts of cruelty as ground for divorce have been continuous, particular instance of cruelty included within continuous course, though made ground for divorce in previous action in which a divorce was denied, held available in subsequent action, especially where one particular instance of cruelty included within continuous course occurred after former decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; H. A. Alvarado, Judge.

Action for divorce by Joseph Crudo against Alice Crudo. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederic T. Leo, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Dunne and M. H. Farrar, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from an interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone.

[1] It is claimed on behalf of appellant that the court erred in not ordering a division of the community property. The court found as a fact that there was no community property. The only evidence of any such property is an agreement of settlement of the property rights of the parties to this action, made and executed by them on April 17, 1922, wherein it recited: "That whereas an immediate separation has become necessary between the parties hereto, man and wife; now, therefore, in order to finally adjust and settle all property disputes and mutual rights and maintenance and support, the parties hereto do hereby covenant and agree one with the other." Further provisions of the agreement conveyed to the defendant herein certain parcels of real property and specific articles of personal property, including some cash "to be taken and received by her as her own separate property." There is a further provision of the agreement by the terms of which real and personal property is conveyed to the plaintiff "to be taken and received by him as his separate property." The agreement was filed and acknowledged by the parties so as to entitle it to record, and on April 21, 1922, it was recorded at the request of the appellant. The court finds that said agreement has never been vacated, annulled, or set aside, and the same is now in full force and effect. The evidence not being before this court, it must be presumed that the findings are supported by the evidence.

[2] Appellant contends, however, that the agreement is void as against public policy, in that it contains a clause releasing the parties "from all claims and demands whatsoever for support, maintenance, alimony and counsel fees and costs in any action pending or which may hereafter be brought by either one of the parties hereto against the other, all future claims or demands for alimony, support or maintenance by either party against the other being hereby expressly waived." In answer to this claim, we deem it sufficient to say that even if the above clause of the contract is subject to counsel's criticisms, it is separable from the other provisions of the agreement and does not affect the balance thereof. McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 176, 190 P. 460; Estate of Sloan, 179 Cal. 393, 177 P. 150.

[3] It is next claimed that the agreement was annulled by a subsequent reconciliation of the parties. This contention is based upon the eighth finding of fact herein. It is claimed by appellant that by reference to paragraph H of an exhibit attached to the defendant's answer herein the court found that the parties became reconciled in the early part of 1923. As we construe this finding, it is to the effect that the allegations of extreme cruelty alleged in said paragraph H are true, that being the subject-matter of said paragraph, the reference to the reconciliation being incidental only. Further, the court in finding VI specifically found that the date of separation of the parties was February 17, 1922. Again, in finding XIII, the court found that since February 17, 1922, "no reconciliation has ever taken place between the above-named parties, but, on the contrary, they have been and are now living separate and apart and unreconciled." We therefore hold that the findings do not support appellant's claim that the parties were ever reconciled.

The further claim of appellant that the findings of fact are contradictory is covered by what we have heretofore said concerning the allegation that the parties to this action had, after making the agreement above referred to, become reconciled. The point is without merit.

[4] Appellant claims that the findings of cruelty do not support the decree. The former action pleaded in bar to this action was commenced on January 10, 1924, and the decree therein denying a divorce to either party was entered on September 16, 1924. The present action was commenced May 12, 1926, and the decree therein entered November 2, 1927. It is claimed that the acts of cruelty occurring prior to the entry of the decree in the former action are not available to this plaintiff in the present action, but the court finds that the alleged acts of cruelty have been continuous during the four years immediately preceding the commencement of the present action and one particular instance as of date September 23, 1925, and other acts of cruelty occurring during the same month are found by the court to be true. The findings are therefore not subject to the criticism. We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

NELSON v. MARSH et al. (Civ. 6808.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

1. Corporations ⇨503(1)—Joinder of cause of action against corporation with one on stockholders' statutory liability did not waive right to trial in county of corporation's residence (Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Plaintiff, by joinder of cause of action against corporation on its contractual liability with cause of action against individual stockholders on their statutory liability, did not waive right to have action tried in county of corporation's residence under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, where action was commenced, since plaintiff had right to bring action there irrespective of whether one of defendants was a corporation or an individual defendant.

2. Corporations ⇨503(1)—That corporate defendant was suspended from doing business until payment of corporation tax did not affect right to trial in county of corporation's residence (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1743, § 11; Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 1743, § 11, fact that corporate defendant was suspended from doing business in state until payment of its corporation tax did not affect plaintiff's right, under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, to have action tried in county of corporation's residence, notwithstanding individual stockholders, joined as defendants to enforce their statutory liability as stockholders, resided in other counties.

3. Action ⇨50(9)—Contract cause of action against corporation held properly joined with one on stockholders' statutory liability.

Cause of action against corporation on its contractual liability held properly joined with cause of action against individual stockholders on their statutory liability, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 379a (as added by St. 1927, p. 477), 379b (as added by St. 1927, p. 478), and 379c (as added by St. 1927, p. 631), making such joinder proper and which were adopted after action was commenced.

4. Corporations ⇨503(3)—Joinder of corporate defendant and individual stockholders as defendants held prima facie in good faith, and motion for change of venue was properly denied (Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Joinder of cause of action against corporation on its contractual liability with cause of action against individual stockholders on their statutory liability held prima facie made in good faith, since action grew out of debt contracted by corporation, and not for sole purpose of retaining case for trial in county of corporation's residence under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, and individual defendants' motion for change of venue to county of their residence was properly denied, in view of section 379a as added by St. 1927, p. 477, after commencement of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by G. Nelson against Robert Marsh, F. L. Marsh, and others. From an order denying their motion for a change of venue, named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hiadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The defendants Robert Marsh and F. L. Marsh appeal from an order of the court denying their motion for a change of the place of trial of the action from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Los Angeles, their place of residence. The complaint was filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants are Robert Marsh, F. L. Marsh, S. L. Steele, and Venice Island Land Company. The action is brought to recover upon a debt contracted by the defendant corporation. There were two causes of action stated in the complaint, an action against the corporation on its contractual liability, and an action against the stockholders on their stockholders' liability.

The complaint alleges that at all the times therein mentioned the corporation defendant was organized and existing under the laws of California, and having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants Robert Marsh and F. L. Marsh filed a demand for a change of venue to the county of Los Angeles, and in support of such demand an affidavit of merits and of residence, signed by Robert Marsh. It is alleged in said affidavit: First, that none of the defendants named in the complaint resided in the city and county of San Francisco at the time of the commencement of the action; second, that defendants Robert Marsh and F. L. Marsh then resided, and now reside, in the county of Los Angeles, and the defendant S. L. Steele then and now resides in the city of Stockton, San Joaquin county; third, that at the time of the commencement of the action the defendant corporation did not operate or maintain any office or place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, and that none of the officers or directors of said corporation resided in the city and county of San Francisco at the time of the commencement of the action, nor do they reside therein at the present time; fourth, that on or about the 28th day of February, 1926, said corporation forfeited its charter, and all its rights to do business in the state of California were suspended because of its failure to pay the state license tax. That there has been no revival of said corporation, and that for a long time prior to the commencement of the action said corporation was not doing or carrying on any business in the state of California, nor has it at any time since its right to do business was suspended, as aforesaid, been doing or carrying on any business in the state of California. It is also alleged in said affidavit that said corporation is neither a necessary nor a proper party defendant, and it is further alleged, on information and belief, that said corporation has been joined as a party defendant solely for the purpose and with the intention of attempting to retain the venue of said action in the city and county of San Francisco.

[1] Appellant contends that by the joinder of a cause of action against the corporation on its contractual liability, with a cause of action against the individual stockholders on their statutory liability as such stockholders, the plaintiff waived his right to have the action tried in the county of the corporation's residence, and he cites in support thereof Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia & Healdsburg Fruit Cannery Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 P. 495; Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209; and Nelson v. East Side Grocery Co., 26 Cal. App. 344, 146 P. 1055. All three of these cases are discussed in McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 211 P. 17, 18, and we believe the distinction there drawn between the cited cases and McClung v. Watt, supra, applies with equal force to the case at bar. In speaking of the cases above cited, the court says: "It will be noted that in none of these cases cited by the defendant in support of his contention in this behalf was the action brought, as in the instant case, in the county where the principal place of business of the corporation defendant was located. They were all cases in which the action was brought against the corporation defendant under the authority of the first two provisions of article 12, § 16, of the state Constitution, which provides that a corporation may be sued 'where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs'. In other words, the actions were brought in counties in which they could not have been maintained except for the fact that one of the defendants was a corporation, and this court held that the fact that one of the defendants was a corporation should not deprive an individual defendant of his right to have the action tried in the county of his residence. In the instant case, however, the action was commenced in the principal place of business of the corporation—the county of its residence. Jenkins v. California Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538; Buck v. City of Eureka, 97 Cal. 135, 31 P. 845; Trezevant v. Strong, 102 Cal. 47, 36 P. 395; Gallup v. Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage District, 171 Cal. 71, 151 P. 1142. The plaintiff had a right to bring the action there, irrespective of whether or not one of the defendants was a corporation or an individual defendant. That is to say, the right of the individual defendant in the instant case is not affected by the fact that the defendant joined is a corporation rather than an individual. The rule annunciated in the cases cited and relied upon by the individual defendant, Watt, has therefore no application to a situation where the action was instituted in the county of the principal place of business of a corporation defendant properly joined with other defendants in the action."

[2] In the case at bar the action was commenced in the county of the residence of the corporation. Code Civ. Proc. § 395. Nor do we believe that the fact that the corporation defendant has been suspended from doing business in the state of California until the payment of its corporation tax affects the statutory right of the plaintiff to have the cause of action tried in the place of the corporation's residence. The act providing for the suspension of the corporation's right to do business until the payment of the taxes provides an exception, in that, the corporation has a right to execute and deliver deeds to real property in pursuance of contracts therefor, made prior to such time, and to defend in court any actions brought against such corporation. Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, vol. 1, p. 554, Act 1743, § 11. It thus appearing that the corporation has a right to defend actions, it logically follows that all the rights and privileges accrued to both parties to an action may be pursued as though there had never been any suspension of the corporation's right to do business.

[3] It is further claimed by the appellants that the corporation is not a proper party defendant. That the two causes of action are unnecessarily joined. That there is no Code rule authorizing their joinder, and he cites in support thereof the case of Avery v. Chucawalla Development Co., 175 Cal. 644, 166 P. 1002, 1003, wherein it is held that such joinder may be made because "to permit this to be done, however, makes manifestly for the expeditious disposition of litigation, without working hardship to any party defendant and for this reason it should be countenanced if not forbidden. Nothing in our law forbids it." The practice of our courts has upheld such joinder as proper. Kiefhaber Lumber Co. v. Newport Lumber Co., 15 Cal. App. 37, 113 P. 691. And since the commencement of this action there have been added to the Code of Civil Procedure sections 379a (as added by St. 1927, p. 477), 379b (as added by St. 1927, p. 478), and 379c (as added by St. 1927, p. 631), making such a joinder proper. It has been held that such changes in procedural rules apply to pending cases. Maguire v. Cunningham, 64 Cal. App. 536, 222 P. 838.

[4] Appellant also complains that the joinder of the corporation defendant was made for the sole purpose of retaining the case for trial in the city and county of San Francisco, but it is said in McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 159, 211 P. 17, 19, that: "The motion for a change of place of trial to the county of the party's residence must be made by the moving party and determined by the court in advance of any other judicial action in the case." (Citing Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., supra, and other cases.) "Hence the right to a change of place of trial to the residence of a defendant must necessarily be determined by the status of the parties joined as defendants in the action as revealed by the pleadings existing at the time the party claiming the right first appeared in the action." (Citing Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., supra; Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730, and other cases.) "If the complaint in the instant case attempts, in apparent good faith, to state a cause of action against the corporation defendant, the individual defendant, Watt, did not have the right to have the place of trial changed to the county of his residence. The sufficiency of the complaint and the good faith of the pleader are not to be denied, upon a motion for a change of venue, unless, at first blush, it can be clearly seen and said that the allegations of fact concerning the corporation defendant are in nowise related to the facts alleged and relied upon as a cause of action against the defendant, Watt. * * *

We are of the opinion that the complaint in the case at bar, in so far as the joinder of action against the corporation and the individual stockholders is in question, is prima facie made in good faith. The action grew out of a debt contracted by the corporation and falls within the class of cases covered by the decisions in Avery v. Chucawalla Development Co., supra; Kiefhaber Lumber Co. v. Newport Lumber Co., supra; and is also within the provisions of section 379a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The order is therefore affirmed.

2-11), and 1291-1293 (as added by St. 1927, pp. 407, 408, §§ 12-14), providing for application to require arbitration proceedings under arbitration agreement and for proceedings on arbitration, and providing in section 1293 that appeal may be taken from order confirming, modifying, correcting, or vacating an award, or from judgment entered thereon.

2. Appeal and error §83—Order directing parties to arbitrate controversy in accordance with arbitration agreement held not appealable, as final order in special proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 1280, 1292, 1293).

Order directing parties to proceed to arbitration in accordance with application to require arbitration under written agreement, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1280, held not appealable under section 963, as final order in special proceeding of civil nature, since adequate remedy by appeal is afforded under section 1293, providing for appeals from orders confirming, modifying, or vacating arbitration award, or from judgment thereon, and section 1292 provides that judgment in arbitration proceeding is subject to all provisions of law relating to judgment in an action, and section 1285 provides that application to require arbitration shall be heard in summary manner.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Petition of Jardine, Matheson & Co., Limited, for an order directing the Pacific Orient Company to proceed to arbitration. From an order directing arbitration, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Joseph E. Bien and Werner Olds, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

McCutchen, Olney, Mammon & Greene, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground that the order from which it was taken is not appealable. The determination of the motion involves the construction of section 1293 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is one of several Code sections enacted by the Legislature in 1927 relating to the enforcement of agreements to arbitrate controversies growing out of written contracts. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1280 (as added by St. 1927, p. 404, § 1), 1281-1290 (as amended by St. 1927, pp. 404-407, §§ 2-11), 1291-1293 (as added by St. 1927, pp. 407, 408, §§ 12-14), inclusive.

The essential portions of those sections are as follows:

Section 1280 declares that "a provision in a written contract to settle by arbitration a controversy thereafter arising out of the contract or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof, or an agreement in writing to submit an existing controversy to arbitration * * * shall be valid, enforceable and irrevocable, save upon such grounds as exists at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract: Provided, however, the provisions of this act shall not apply to contracts pertaining to labor."

Section 1281 sets forth the nature of the controversies which may be arbitrated, and section 1282 prescribes the legal procedure to be invoked by an aggrieved party when the other party to the contract has failed, neglected, or refused to proceed with the arbitration as agreed, and in the latter section it is provided that if at the conclusion of the hearing before the court, "the finding be that a written provision for arbitration was made and there is a default in proceeding thereunder, an order shall be made summarily directing the parties to proceed with the arbitration in accordance with the terms thereof."

Sections 1283 and 1284 provide that under the conditions therein stated the court may appoint the arbitrators or some of them, and order stayed any civil actions pending the termination of the arbitration proceedings.

Section 1285 reads as follows: "Any application (to the court) made under the authority of this act shall be heard in a summary way in the manner provided by law for the making and hearing of motions, except as otherwise herein expressly provided." (All italics ours.)

Section 1286 prescribes the procedure to be followed by the arbitrators in hearing and determining the controversy, and sections 1287 to 1290, inclusive, set forth when and under what circumstances the court may confirm, vacate, modify, or correct the award. The next two sections, 1291 and 1292 deal with the matter of the entry of judgment and the force and effect to be given thereto. They are as follows:

"Upon the granting of an order confirming, modifying or correcting an award, judgment may be entered in conformity therewith in the court wherein said application was filed. * * * The judgment when rendered by the court shall be docketed as if it were rendered in an action."

"The judgment so entered has the same force and effect, in all respects, as, and is subject to all the provisions of law relating to, a judgment in an action; and it may be enforced, as if it had been rendered in an action in the court in which it is entered."

Section 1293 enumerates the particular orders and judgment from which appeals may be taken, and reads as follows: "An appeal may be taken from an order confirming, modifying, correcting or vacating an award, or from a judgment entered upon an award, as from an order or judgment in an action."

[1] In the present case the record discloses that appellant entered into a written contract with respondent to sell and deliver to the latter a certain quantity of wood oil, which contract provided, among other things, that any dispute arising thereunder should be submitted to arbitration immediately in the manner therein set forth. Thereafter and under the authority of section 1282 of said Code respondent petitioned the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco for an order for the enforcement of the arbitration agreement, alleging that appellant had breached the contract to deliver said oil. Appellant demurred to the petition and moved for its dismissal, and the demurrer being overruled and the motion being denied, appellant answered, and afterwards amended its answer; and later certain portions of the answer were stricken out on motion of the respondent. A hearing was then had before the court sitting without a jury, and as a result thereof the court entered written findings, and in conformity with the findings granted an order directing the parties "to proceed with the arbitration of the controversy or dispute set out in said application, in accordance with the terms of said agreement. * * *". Thereupon appellant appealed from said order.

Respondent contends that section 1293 was intended by the Legislature to be all-embracing and restrictive in its effect, and that consequently, since the order from which the appeal herein was taken is not one of those enumerated in said section, the appeal based thereon should be dismissed. We are of the opinion that this contention must be sustained.

Upon reading the text of the foregoing sections it becomes evident that the purpose of adding them to the Code was to adopt for this state a complete scheme for the expeditious and summary enforcement of agreements to arbitrate, and to provide a judicial review of the proceedings taken pursuant thereto, after the matter of arbitration has been completed and the award has been made, and the fact that the Legislature saw fit to specify in one code section the different orders and judgment from which appeals may be taken clearly indicates, in our opinion, an intention to restrict the appeals in such proceeding to the orders and judgment therein specified, and the obvious reason for not including among such appealable orders the one which directs the parties to proceed with the arbitration was that if at the very threshold of the proceeding the defaulting party could appeal and thereby indefinitely delay the matter of arbitration, the object of the law and the purpose of the written agreement of the parties would be entirely defeated.

[2] Appellant contends that regardless of the right of appeal given by section 1293, the legal proceeding authorized by said Code sections constitutes a special proceeding of a civil nature, and that therefore under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal may be taken from any final order made therein, and in this connection it is claimed that the order complained of, directing the parties to proceed with the arbitration, is in its nature final. In support of such contention the case of People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 261, 92 P. 481, is cited. The language of the decision in that case must be interpreted, however, in the light of the situation there existing, which, upon analysis, is shown to be entirely different from the one presented here. There the proceeding was brought in the name of the people against the bank and its directors pursuant to the provisions of the former Bank Commissioners' Act (St. 1903, p. 368) to force the bank into liquidation. A judgment to that effect was obtained, which, besides enjoining the bank from transacting any further business, appointed a receiver and directed the bank commissioners to turn over to a receiver all of the assets of the corporation for the purpose of liquidating its affairs. The act nowhere provided for an appeal from any of the proceedings authorized to be taken thereunder. Nevertheless, the substantial rights of the bank being materially affected by the judgment, the bank took an appeal therefrom, which the people sought to have dismissed on motion. In ruling adversely upon the motion, the Supreme Court first pointed out that the right of appeal is remedial, and that in doubtful cases, where the substantial rights of a party are affected, the doubt should be resolved in favor of such right, and it was therefore held in effect that since the act contained no express declaration denying the right of appeal, "such as making any judgment final or final and conclusive," etc., it would be assumed that the Legislature intended that such right of appeal existed the same as from a judgment entered in any other kind of special proceeding affecting the substantial rights of the appealing party.

In the present situation, however, adequate remedy by appeal is afforded; two appeals being allowed from orders in their nature interlocutory, namely, the order confirming the award and the order modifying or correcting the award, and two from orders in their nature final, namely, the order vacating the award, and the judgment. Therefore it is not unreasonable to believe that the Legislature intended to restrict the right of appeal to such orders and judgment.

Appellant asserts that the appeals thus granted are nevertheless inadequate to review the trial court's various rulings upon the sufficiency of the pleadings, and its findings and conclusions relating to the validity of the contract and appellant's alleged default thereunder. As will be noted, however, from reading the Code sections above referred to, the court proceeding authorized to be taken thereunder is expressly declared to be of a summary character, and there is nothing contained in the provisions of said sections indicating that a defaulting party may interpose all or any of the dilatory pleas or file the same character of pleadings permitted to be interposed and filed in civil actions generally. On the contrary, section 1285 expressly provides that the "application * * * shall be heard in a summary way in the manner provided by law for the making and hearing of motions, except as otherwise herein expressly provided" (emphasis ours); and while, of course, a motion is subject to dismissal for legal insufficiency, or may be defeated on the merits by the introduction of legal evidence in opposition thereto, including affidavits, the issues of law and fact to be determined thereunder are not raised by demurrer and answer as in civil actions. And in any event, in view of section 1292, which provides that the judgment which shall be entered in an arbitration proceeding shall have "the same force and effect, in all respects, as, and is subject to all the provisions of law relating to, a judgment in an action, * * *" it would seem that any court ruling made in pursuance of such proceeding affecting the substantial rights of the parties may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, as on appeal from a judgment in a civil action.

The New York cases cited by appellant are not controlling here, because the provision of the arbitration act of that state granting the right of appeal is entirely different from the one embodied in our Code section 1293. It is there expressly provided that said act is subject to the general laws governing appeals in that state, while here the Legislature has particularized the orders and the judgment from which appeals may be taken.

From the foregoing, we conclude that the appeal herein is based upon an order which is not appealable, and that accordingly respondent's motion must be granted, and the appeal dismissed. It is so ordered.

HALMINSKA v. KOBLER. (Civ. 6245.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Animals §74(5)—Evidence of dog's vicious proclivities, or knowledge thereof by owner, held insufficient to render owner liable to child bitten by dog.

In action for damages to child resulting when bitten by small dog, evidence not showing dog had previously bitten any one or showing signs of viciousness held not to show dog was vicious or that the defendant owner was aware of vicious proclivities, if any, so as to render owner liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Edward Halminska, by Agatha Halminska, his guardian ad litem, against J.

F. Kobler. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles R. McCarty, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willard G. Cram, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, a minor child of the age of about three years, while playing with several other children, alleged by his guardian ad litem that he was bitten by a dog, of which the respondent was the owner. Evidence having been presented on behalf of the plaintiff, a nonsuit was asked, which was granted, and he appeals.

The respondent was a contractor, and at the time of the occurrence in controversy had driven to a schoolhouse which was in process of construction. Respondent's dog, a Boston terrier about nine months old and weighing about twelve pounds, mingled with the boys while respondent was about the premises. Plaintiff's witnesses, consisting of boys ranging in ages up to fifteen years, differed as to whether or not the children played with the dog, but all were unanimous in the statement that the puppy bit the plaintiff in the hand. It appears that this caused a small laceration about one-fourth of an inch in width on the web of the left palm, between the second and third fingers. Some of the witnesses swore that they saw the dog follow the child and bite him, but did not see any one playing with it. Others testified that they were playing with the dog, that they would run back and forth, and that it would run after them. There is no evidence tending to show that the animal had previously bitten any one, or that it had shown signs of viciousness. In the opening brief appellant states: "The plaintiff is mindful of the rule that in order for him to recover in this character of action, it must appear that the defendant owner was aware of the vicious proclivities of the animal."

The only evidence upon this subject consisted of statements by playmates of the plaintiff that when the defendant arrived the dog was placed in a shed, which the defendant thereafter opened, and that the dog came out and began chasing them as they ran about at play, and the statements of defendant on examination by plaintiff's counsel. In this latter respect it appears that the defendant lived in an apartment, where the dog remained at night and part of the daytime; that "he was simply a pup, and playful"; that he was affectionate, any one could pick him up; and that he had been stolen upon one occasion. The defendant swore that it was "just a play dog," and that at times he was placed on a leash to prevent him from running away or being injured by traffic, but that aside from that it was permitted to be at large. Upon the occasion in question, he testified that he did not put the dog in a shed; that he "stood in front of the little shed there we had for an office about 15 minutes, the dog staying there until the children got hold of him, got to playing with him"; and that he saw them playing with him. Appellant stressed the remark of defendant that there were signs on the new building indicating danger, to which he explained: "We naturally put up a sign over the door, to protect ourselves from people coming in, from falling material and so forth. * * * We do on all jobs."

It will thus be observed that not alone is there an absence of evidence tending to show knowledge of vicious proclivities, but a lack of evidence which might lead to the belief that such traits existed in fact. A photograph of the animal introduced on behalf of the plaintiff showed the puppy in the arms of a small child, and the defendant appears to have knowingly and willingly permitted it to play with the children on the morning of the occurrence in question. He testified that he did not know that it would annoy or injure any one, and did not believe the plaintiff was injured as alleged, for the reason that when he called the dog to him later, it came immediately, and the children were all then at play. We think the plaintiff's proof upon the principal issue raised was fatally deficient. In addition to authorities treating generally of the principles involved in such cases where the victims of dangerous animals are shown to have established a prima facie case reliance is sought to be placed upon Davis v. Mene, 52 Cal. App. 368, 193 P. 840. It there appeared that the plaintiff had been bitten by a bulldog which the defendant chained at home, muzzled when at large, and kept as a watch dog because of thieves in the neighborhood. In opposition to such evidence of the proclivities of the animal, none appears to have been offered tending to show that the defendant was aware that it would bite. It is unnecessary to consider authorities cited, since the legal principles are too well settled for serious controversy; but we think the evidence before the trial court was insufficient to establish a case against the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

GORDON v. HARBOLT et al. (Civ. 5419.) * the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company to answer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Judgment ⇨155—Notice of motion to vacate default, stating motion would be made on affidavit and proposed answer, held sufficient to confer jurisdiction to pass on merits of motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where notice of motion to vacate default judgment did not state grounds on which motion was to be made, but stated motion would be made on affidavit of defendant and proposed answer, copies of which were served with notice, and affidavit set up facts and circumstances of service of summons and reasons for defendant's failure to appear, court had jurisdiction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to hear and pass on merits of application, especially where there was no question but that proposed answer set up good defense on merits.

2. Appeal and error ⇨945—Appellate court, in reviewing action of trial court, favors adjudication of legal controversies on merits.

Appellate courts are favorably disposed towards such action on part of trial courts as will permit, rather than prevent, adjudication of legal controversies on their merits.

3. Judgment ⇨139—Applications for vacating default judgments are within sound discretion of trial court.

Applications for relief from default judgment are vested within sound discretion of trial court; that is, not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles.

4. Judgment ⇨143(3)—Vacating default judgment against corporation, where summons and copies of amended complaint were served on manager, without showing excusable neglect in failing to answer, held abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where summons, together with two copies of amended complaint, were served on manager of defendant corporation, and manager in affidavit supporting motion to vacate default judgment, did not deny such fact, but merely stated there was nothing in records of company indicating time, place, or manner of service, that copy of complaint came to affiant's attention on day default judgment was entered, without explaining why papers escaped attention for over a month, nor alleging that any promise to set aside default was made or intimated, and that affiant, in reliance thereon, took no immediate action to set aside default, vacating default judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, on ground of excusable neglect, held abuse of discretion, since courts will not relieve litigants from effects of mere carelessness.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by G. W. Gordon against G. C. Harbolt and others. From an order vacating a default judgment, and permitting defendant

Thomas A. Wood and O. B. De Camp, both of Los Angeles (F. Britton McConnell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from an order vacating a default and permitting the respondent corporation to file a verified answer. Two points are urged by appellant: First, that the court below was without jurisdiction to consider the motion for vacation of the default, by reason of the failure of the notice to state the grounds upon which the motion was to be made; and, second, that there was no showing of excusable neglect and that the court abused its discretion in granting the motion.

[1] The first of these contentions is without merit. While it is true that the notice itself failed to state the grounds upon which the motion would be based, it did state it would be "upon the affidavit of Ernest R. Robbins, manager of defendant United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, and the proposed answer," copies of which were served together with the notice. The affidavit of Mr. Robbins, after setting up the facts and circumstances of the service of summons upon respondent corporation and the reasons for its failure to appear, proceeds: "That the facts of this case in this cause have been fully and fairly stated to Lawler & Degnan, counsel for defendant herein, and after such statement affiant is advised by them that defendant herein has a good and substantial defense on the merits of this action. Wherefore affiant prays that, if said amended complaint and the summons issued thereon are deemed to have been properly served on defendant, United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, on the 8th day of March, 1926, it be held that an answer thereto was not interposed by said United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company through mistake, inadvertence, and excusable negligence, as disclosed by the facts and circumstances set out above; that said defendant be permitted to file its verified answer; and that the said default heretofore entered be set aside." There is no question but that the proposed answer, which the court permitted to be filed, set up a good defense on the merits. It has been frequently held that the failure of the moving party in a proceeding for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to state the grounds upon which he relies will not deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear and pass upon the merits of the application, where the grounds sufficiently appear from the accompanying affidavits.

In Savage v. Smith, 170 Cal. 472, 150 P. 353, the precise point relied on by appellant was thus decided: "When the motion came on to be heard, the plaintiff objected to the hearing of the motion upon the grounds that there was no affidavit of merits on behalf of the defendant, and that the notice of motion did not state the ground upon which the motion would be made, as required by a rule of the superior court. The court continued the hearing to a later date. During the period intervening before the motion came on, the defendant filed further affidavits. The notice itself was not amended in any way. Upon the foregoing papers and other evidence, the court granted the motion to vacate the default. It is true that the notice of motion did not comply with the requirement of the rule, now embodied in section 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure (amended in 1907), that the grounds of motion must be stated in the notice. It appears, however, that the notice of motion stated that it would be made upon the records and papers on file and upon the affidavit of which a copy was served with the notice. The records referred to showed that no answer had been filed until default had been entered and the affidavit of Mr. Hengstler made it perfectly plain that he was seeking therein to establish a showing that the failure to file the answer within time had been caused by excusable neglect. The notice, together with the records and affidavits therein referred to, were sufficient to apprise the plaintiff of the fact that the purpose of the proposed motion was to seek relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the ground of the motion necessarily was the defendant's excusable neglect, which would justify relief under that section. The objection that the grounds of the motion were not stated in the notice was therefore properly disregarded. Reher v. Reed, 166 Cal. 525, 137 P. 263, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 737." Other decisions which have reaffirmed the rule as above stated are those in Fink & Schindler Co. v. Gavros, 72 Cal. App. 688, 237 P. 1083, and Hecq v. Conner, 203 Cal. 504, 265 P. 180.

[2-3] As to the second of appellant's points, however, we are of the opinion that it is well taken. It is true that appellate courts have always been and are favorably disposed towards such action upon the part of trial courts as will permit, rather than prevent, the adjudication of legal controversies upon their merits. This attitude is clearly expressed in Jones v. Title Guaranty & Trust Co., 178 Cal. 375, 173 P. 586, 587, where it is said: "This court has always looked with favor upon orders excusing defaults and permitting controversies to be heard upon their merits. Such orders are rarely reversed, and never unless it clearly appears that there has been a plain abuse of discretion"—as well as in O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220, 72 P. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105; Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., 89 Cal. 332, 26 P. 825, and many other cases. It is also true that a large amount of discretion is vested in the trial court in the matter of applications for relief from defaults (Gorman v. California Transit Co., 199 Cal. 246, 248 P. 923; Hitchcock v. McElrath, 69 Cal. 634, 11 P. 487), but, as is said in Bailey v. Taafe, 29 Cal. 423: "The discretion intended, however, is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice."

Quoting and applying this rule the court in Redding v. National Surety Co., 18 Cal. App. 488, 123 P. 544, 545, said: "Cases do occur where the appellate court is obliged to say that the action of the trial court involves a plain abuse of discretion; and in such a case it is the duty of the appellate court to reverse the action of the trial court." We feel that this is such a case. "Where, as in this case, a default and judgment have been duly and regularly entered against a litigant, such default and judgment cannot be set aside and vacated, except upon a showing that they were taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect." Redding, etc., Mining Co. v. National Surety Co., supra.

[4] Did respondent make such a showing? These are the circumstances upon which it relies: The summons, together with two copies of the amended complaint, was served upon E. A. Robbins, manager of the defendant corporation, on March 8, 1926. This is undisputed. In his affidavit in support of the motion to vacate the default Mr. Robbins does not deny this fact, but merely says that there is nothing in the records of his company "indicating the time, place, or manner of the service upon said defendant." He says "that a copy of the amended complaint came to affiant's attention, so far as affiant recalls, for the first time on April 13, 1926" (the day the default was entered). He does not say what he did with the papers when received, or why they escaped his attention until over a month had passed. "On the discovery of the copy of the amended complaint," April 13, defendant corporation attempted to locate the Western Pacific Securities Company, its principal on the bond sued on, but discovered that it had gone out of business. It thereupon informed a codefendant, one Harbolt, "of the existence of this action," who thereupon directed (with what authority is not stated) respondent to take up the question of defense with his (Harbolt's) attorney. The latter, applied to to take the case, declined to do so until he had conferred with Harbolt, and subsequently, on April 29th, informed respondent that he would not act for it. Meanwhile respondent was advised by this attorney "that a default was being taken against defendant," and this information was corroborated by one of the counsel for appellant. The affidavit is silent as to the date of these conversations, although the context would indicate that they occurred on April 13th. Counsel for the plaintiff (appellant) told Mr. Robbins he would communicate with his client "with regard to setting aside said default." It is not alleged that any promise to set it aside was made, or even intimated; but Mr. Robbins states that "in reliance thereon," referring to the statement that plaintiff's counsel would communicate with his client, respondent "took no action to set aside such default." These are all of the facts upon which the moving party relied as a showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

It certainly cannot be said that the facts above and in Mr. Robbins' affidavit set forth show that respondent was in "some condition or situation in which the party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his injury, without any default or negligence of his own, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." McGuire v. Drew, 83 Cal. 225, 23 P. 312. (Italics ours.) Rather do they disclose a parallel with the facts relied on in Coleman v. Rankin, 37 Cal. 247, where the defendant's affidavit on motion to vacate a default recited that the summons had been served on him while he was in attendance at court as a witness, and that "upon receiving the same this deponent placed the same in his hat, and the same was lost therefrom," and that, like Mr. Robbins in the instant case, he had made no note of the date of service on himself. We think the remarks of the Supreme Court in that case are applicable here, namely: "The affidavit of the applicant, so far from disclosing a reasonable excuse for his neglect, tends rather to disclose a degree of negligence, carelessness, and lack of diligence hardly to be predicated of a prudent business man. * * *" As said in Gillingham v. Lawrence, 11 Cal. App. 231, 104 P. 584, 585: "The defendant could read, and the summons expressly told him the time within which he must appear and answer. He let the time pass, and never even consulted an attorney. He was guilty of such carelessness and lack of diligence as could not be imputed to a prudent business man in a matter of material concern to himself. While courts are liberal in relieving parties of defaults caused by inadvertence or excusable neglect, and while they much prefer that a case should be heard on its merits, yet they do not act as guardians for incompetent parties, or parties who are grossly careless as to their own affairs. There must be rules and regulations by which rights are determined and under which judgments become final. If this court should determine that the defendant, as matter of law, was entitled to relief in this case, there could scarcely be a default judgment that would not have to be set aside, provided the proper affidavits could be procured from the defendant. * * * Where a party willfully slumbers upon his rights when he should be alert, and makes no efforts to protect himself, courts cannot patiently listen to flimsy excuses and the claim of ignorance of the law. It was the duty of defendant to read the summons, and not only to read it, but to heed it."

Courts do not relieve litigants from the effects of mere carelessness. The rule is thus stated in Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, 39 P. 863, 864: "Inadvertence in the abstract is no plea upon which to set aside a default. The court must be made acquainted with the reasons for the inadvertence, and, if satisfactory, will act upon them, and relieve from burdens caused by them; but, if the inadvertence is wholly inexcusable, as if it arises from gross negligence, the court will not look upon it kindly, and will have none of it." See also, Durbrow v. Chesley, 24 Cal. App. 416, 141 P. 631; Gill v. Peppin, 41 Cal. App. 487, 182 P. 815, and Ross v. San Diego, etc., Co., 50 Cal. App. 170, 194 P. 1059, all of which reaffirm the rule as laid down in Shearman v. Jorgensen, supra. Many instances of the application of this rule may be found in the books. The following are typical: Where defendant's attorney, on receiving the copy of summons and complaint, served on defendant April 9, erroneously marked them, "Answer due April 23d," and "the only reason presented for his not having filed the answer is 'his mistake in marking said papers as aforesaid, and owing to the fact that there were so many cases against said defendants.'" Williamson v. Cummings, etc., Co., 95 Cal. 652, 30 P. 762. Where the secretary of defendant corporation, who had been served with copy of summons and complaint, delivered them five days later to the president of the company, who held them, "thinking that his attorney would be in every day, and therefore waited until he should come." Shay v. Chicago Clock Co., 111 Cal. 549, 44 P. 237. Where defendant, expecting to be engaged in business out of town, gave the papers to his partner, instructing him "to attend to the matter and have the action defended," and, supposing his partner had done so, "dismissed the subject from his mind," while the partner placed the papers in a pigeonhole and forgot about them. Slater v. Selover, 25 Cal. App. 525, 144 P. 298.

The decision in Gorman v. California Transit Co., 199 Cal. 246, 248 P. 923, might at first blush seem to offer comfort to respondent. There the summons was served on the secretary of the corporation, who at once handed it to the manager of the traffic department, with directions to deliver both it and the file relating to the accident which was the subject of the action to the president immediately upon the latter's return from a business trip. The file was placed on the manager's desk to await the president's return, "but prior thereto was inadvertently taken by one of the employees of the corporation—probably a stenographer in the traffic department" and returned to the usual repository for such files, the summons and complaint being with it. As a result the attention of the manager, "who was daily occupied with many details in connection with his immediate department, was withdrawn from said file, with the result that the matter was not called to the attention of the president upon his return, nor in fact until some days after the default of the corporation had been taken and judgment thereon entered against it for the full sum sought by the plaintiffs in the action."

In affirming an order granting a motion to vacate a default based upon these facts, the court thus pointed out the existence of intervening circumstances which rendered the inadvertence of the corporation officers excusable: "In the instant case, the inadvertence and forgetfulness of the secretary of the corporation was due to the fact that he had delivered said summons and complaint to the manager of the traffic department of said corporation with instruction to deliver the same to the president thereof immediately upon his return. The inadvertence of the manager of the traffic department in failing to carry out such instruction was attributable to the fact that the file containing such papers had been mistakenly removed from his desk by another employee of the defendant, and that his attention amid the engrossing details of his department was thus withdrawn from the same and from his duty to present the papers to the president of the corporation upon his return. It seems to us that these intervening facts furnish a sufficient basis to justify the conclusion of the trial court that the inadvertence of the officials of the defendant corporation was excusable, and justified the order from which this appeal has been taken."

Here there was no such intervening circumstance, but merely a lack of ordinary care and prudence, and as elsewhere said in the opinion from which we have just quoted: "It is true that the discretion thus to be exercised by the trial court is not capricious or arbitrary, but is an impartial discretion which must be guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles, and it should, therefore, appear that something more than mere inadvertence or neglect without reasonable excuse or justification existed, and that the inadvertence or neglect in question was not the result of mere forgetfulness on the part of the person or official charged with the duty of responding to the legal process in due time, but that such inadvertence or neglect was based upon other circumstances which would suffice to render the same excusable. Therein lies the distinction, we think, between the cases relied upon by the appellant in support of this appeal and the instant case."

We are constrained to hold that the learned trial court abused its discretion in granting the motion.

The order is reversed.

GLANTZ v. FREEDMAN. (Civ. 3742.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

1. Factors ⇨1—Relation created by plaintiff appointing defendant his agent and delivering grapes to defendant to sell was that of principal and factor (Civ. Code, § 2026).

Where plaintiff appointed defendant as his exclusive agent for selling grapes, and agreed to deliver grapes to defendant at packing house, and promised to pay certain sum per crate as compensation, such contract created relation of principal and factor, under Civ. Code, § 2026.

2. Factors ⇨24—Factor, violating grape-selling contract as to place of sale, was liable for net market value of grapes at time of delivery.

Where contract between principal and factor required factor to sell grapes at shipping point, and factor shipped to Eastern market, as factor sold grapes in violation of contract, he was liable for net market value of grapes at shipping point at time of delivery.

3. Factors ⇨42—Where principal's complaint alleged sale to defendant, and proof showed defendant, as factor, had sold in violation of contract, held there was no variance.

Where complaint alleged sale of grapes by plaintiff to defendant and prayed for reasonable value thereof, and proof was that grapes had been delivered to defendant as factor, but that defendant had sold in violation of contract with plaintiff, held, that there was no variance, as one whose goods are wrongfully taken and used by another may sue for their value as for goods sold and delivered.

4. Evidence ⇨113(1)—Basis of witness' estimate of market value may include result of inquiries, relevant documents, or facts of relevant sales known to witness.

Basis of a witness' estimate of market value may include result of inquiries made of others, commercial circulars, correspondence, or telegrams, market quotations or reports, price lists, prices current, or facts of relevant sales known to the witness.

5. Factors ⇨43—Action for damages for breach of contract held not to furnish exclusive remedy for factor's breach of contract.

Where factor sold grapes at Eastern markets, instead of at shipping point, as required by contract with principal, though remedy of an action for damages for breach of contract was available to principal, it did not constitute the exclusive remedy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by P. H. Glantz against Charles Freedman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. B. Scott, of Modesto, for appellant.
Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff, as principal, and the defendant, as agent, entered into a contract for the sale of the former's grapes by the latter. The contract contains the following:

"It is therefore agreed that the said principal hereby appoints the said agent as his sole and exclusive agent for selling said grapes f. o. b. cars shipping point for the account of principal, unless written instructions are delivered to the said agent to consign same, and agrees to pay said agent the sum of 20 cents per lug or packed crate as his entire compensation for furnishing lugs, receiving, loading and for sale of said grapes. Boxes to be furnished by agent at Lodi, California, and principal agrees to pick and deliver grapes to agent at packing house or railroad cars, in compliance with federal, state and county rules."

At the time of the transactions between the parties, the defendant was engaged in the fruit business at Modesto, Lodi, and other places. He maintained an office at Modesto, but not at Lodi. His "representatives or agents" at Lodi were Fred Wall and John Wittmayer. Wittmayer executed the contract in question as the defendant's agent. When the contract was presented by Wittmayer to the plaintiff for execution, the latter refused to sign it. Wittmayer thereupon wrote the defendant, asking for an interpretation of the form of contract used. The defendant's bookkeeper wrote Wittmayer in reply that, "if immediate sale is not effected, we will take the stuff on ourselves at the market price and pay on that basis." This letter was signed, "Chas. Freedman, per O. J. J.," the bookkeeper's name being O. J. Jennings. Wittmayer showed the letter to the plaintiff, and he thereupon signed the contract. Respondent contends that the letter is a part of the contract between the parties. It is deemed unnecessary to decide this question; there being other sufficient grounds upon which to affirm the judgment.

The complaint alleges: "That within two years last past plaintiff sold and delivered to defendant at defendant's instance and request, 1,467 boxes of Tokay grapes at an agreed purchase price or value of the sum of $1,834.40. That no part of said sum has been paid by defendant to plaintiff except the sum of $829.46. * * * That the said price * * * was the reasonable value thereof, and the market value thereof at the dates when the same were sold and delivered."

The answer denies that the plaintiff sold any grapes to the defendant, and alleges that the plaintiff "consigned certain grapes to defendant; that defendant sold the same pursuant to agreement, and has fully accounted to plaintiff, and paid over to plaintiff all moneys due from defendant to plaintiff." The plaintiff was given judgment, and the defendant has appealed.

[1-3] Appellant contends that there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof, in that the complaint sets up an express contract of sale, while the evidence shows that the grapes were consigned to the defendant to be sold by him as agent for the plaintiff. The relation between the parties created by the contract was that of principal and factor. Civ. Code, § 2026. Instead of selling the grapes at the shipping point, as required by the contract, the defendant shipped most of them to the Eastern markets, where they were sold for but a trifling sum above freight and other expenses. The plaintiff testified that he did not authorize the defendant, either in writing or orally, to sell the grapes at any place other than the shipping point. Having sold them in violation of the terms of the contract, the defendant became liable for their net market value at the shipping point at the time of their delivery. Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exchange, 144 Cal. 402, 77 P. 993. "In many cases * * * the principal may treat the unauthorized sale, not merely as a breach of contract, but as a conversion of the goods." Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 2529; Pugh v. Porter Brothers Co., 118 Cal. 628, 633, 50 P. 772. "It is well settled under the authorities that, when one's goods are wrongfully taken and used by another, he may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for their value, as for goods sold and delivered." Miller v. Murphy, 186 Cal. 344, 349, 199 P. 525, 528; Armstrong v. Kubo & Co., 88 Cal. App. 331, 334, 263 P. 365; 3 Cal. Jur. 377, 380. "In many jurisdictions this doctrine is limited to cases where the wrongdoer has sold the property or otherwise converted it into money, in which event the plaintiff may maintain an action for the proceeds. 4 Cyc. 332. In this state, however, as in a number of others, a broader rule enables one whose goods are wrongfully taken and used by another to sue in assumpsit for their value as for goods sold and delivered." Bechtel v. Chase, 156 Cal. 707, 711, 106 P. 81, 83. Tested by the foregoing authorities, there is no variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof.

[4] It is next contended that "evidence on market value was admitted without the proper foundation having been laid." The basis of a witness' estimate "may include the result of inquiries made of others, commercial circulars, correspondence, or telegrams, market quotations or reports, price lists, prices current, or the facts of relevant sales known to the witness." 22 C. J. 575. In Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exchange, 144 Cal. 402, 409, 77 P. 993, 995, it is said: "The testimony of the plaintiff with reference to the market price of the lemons was not incompetent merely because his knowledge was derived from the information of others. * * * The market price of an article is often shown by reference to published statements of that fact." Under the rules quoted, the evidence shows ample foundation for the estimates of the witnesses.

[5] Appellant contends that respondent's remedy was an action for damages for breach of contract. While such an action was doubtless available to the plaintiff, it is clear from the authorities cited herein that it was not the exclusive remedy.

The judgment is affirmed.

CARTER v. CHEVALIER et al. (Civ. 6757.)*

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1929.

1. Taxation $\S$ 788(1)—It nowhere appearing in tax deed that property was sold to grantee, deed is not primary evidence that grantee was purchaser at tax sale (Pol. Code, $\S\S$ 3785b, 3786).

Though, under Pol. Code, $\S$ 3786, a tax deed, in substance and form as set forth in section 3785b, is made primary evidence that "at a proper time and place the property was sold as prescribed by law, and by the proper officer," it nowhere appearing in deed that property was sold to grantee, execution of deed is not primary evidence that grantee in deed was purchaser at the sale.

2. Taxation $\S$ 788(3)—In absence of statute, one claiming under tax deed must affirmatively show that all legal requirements have been complied with.

At common law a tax deed does not ipso facto transfer title of owner, but its operative character depends on regularity of anterior proceedings, and no presumption arises on mere production of deed that facts on which it is based had any existence, but it is necessary that one claiming under such deed show affirmatively that all requirements of law have been complied with, and this rule is relaxed only to extent that statute relaxes it.

3. Statutes $\S$ 235—Statute divesting title to realty should be strictly construed and material requisites strictly complied with.

A statute which divests title to real estate ought to be strictly construed, and every requisite having a semblance of benefit to person whose title is sought to be divested should be strictly complied with.

4. Courts $\S$ 93(1)—Decisions that tax deeds omitting to recite any fact required by statute to be recited are void constitute rule of property (Pol. Code, $\S$ 3785b).

Court decisions holding tax deeds void, when they omit to recite any of facts required by Pol. Code, $\S$ 3785b, to be recited, constitute a rule of property, from which court should not depart.

5. Taxation $\S$ 761—Tax deed to purchaser other than state, not reciting property was sold to one named as grantee, is insufficient to transfer title (Pol. Code, $\S\S$ 3771a, 3785b).

Under Pol. Code, $\S$ 3785b, setting forth substance and form in which deed may be executed when property is sold at tax sale to purchaser other than state, and section 3771a, requiring as prerequisite to conveyance that property be sold by tax collector at public auction to highest bidder, tax deed, to be primary evidence, should recite the fact that property was sold to person named as grantee in such tax deed, and in absence of such recital is not legally sufficient to transfer title.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by W. T. Carter against John L. Chevalier and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Strother P. Walton, of Fresno, for appellant.

J. P. Bernhard and Frank Kauke, both of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by plaintiff for the purpose of quieting his title to a certain tract of land situate in Fresno county; the title claimed by plaintiff being based on a deed from the tax collector of Fresno county, dated June 25, 1927. In the year 1896 the defendant Joseph L. Chevalier became the owner of the real property, in controversy, and each year thereafter paid the taxes assessed thereon, save and except the second installment of taxes for the fiscal year 1921-1922, which was overlooked and thereafter became delinquent. Had the defendants been permitted to redeem from such delinquent taxes at the time plaintiff brought this action, the amount required for such redemption would have been, or was, $41.25, and that amount, or such other amount as the court might find to be the required sum, the defendants offered to pay to plaintiff. The plaintiff offered no proof of his title, other than the tax collector's deed, claiming that the deed was made pursuant to and in the form prescribed by section 3785b of the Political Code, and that no other proof was necessary to establish his title.

The deed from the tax collector to appellant recites: "This indenture, made the 25th day of June, 1927, between Ray W. Baker, tax collector of the county of Fresno, state of California, first party, and W. T. Carter, Fresno county, second party, witnesseth: That whereas, the real property hereinafter described was duly assessed for taxation in the year 1921, to J. L. Chevalier (stating name as on assessment roll) and was thereafter on the 19th day of June, 1922, duly sold to state of California by Ray W. Baker, tax collector of said county of Fresno, for nonpayment of delinquent taxes which had been legally levied in said year 1921, and were a lien on said real property, the total amount for which the same was sold being twenty-three and 01/100 dollars ($23.01). And whereas, all taxes levied and assessed against said property prior to the year 1927 have been paid and discharged: Now, therefore, the said first party in consideration of the premises, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided does hereby grant to said second party that certain real property in the county of Fresno, state of California, more particularly described as follows, to wit: National Col. E ½ of lot 30 (less 2 acs. for dry creek and roads), Sec. 23, Twp. 13, Rg. 20; 8 acres. In witness whereof," etc.

[1] Section 3771a of the Political Code provides that "all property which has not been redeemed from the sale to the state or the sale thereon cancelled shall be sold by the tax collector at public auction to the highest bidder for cash," and section 3785b provides: "When property has been sold to a purchaser at delinquent tax sale, other than the State of California, in pursuance of section 3771 of the code, the tax collector must forthwith execute a deed to such purchaser." In other words, when property has been sold to the state for delinquent taxes and has not been redeemed within the time prescribed, it shall, after the requisite notice has been given, be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, to whom a deed shall be made by the tax collector. From the deed in evidence and on which plaintiff relies solely to establish his title it appears that on June 19, 1922, the property was sold by the tax collector to the state of California for the delinquent taxes which had been legally levied in the year 1921, but it does not appear that ever at any time the property was sold by the tax collector at public auction to the plaintiff. While under section 3786 of the Political Code a deed in substance and form as set forth in section 3785b is made primary evidence that "at a proper time and place the property was sold as prescribed by law, and by the proper officer," it nowhere appearing in the deed that the property was sold to the plaintiff, the execution of the deed is not primary evidence that the plaintiff, as grantee in the deed, was the purchaser at the sale.

[2, 3] The deed form set out in section 3785b, in which section it is provided that the deed shall be in substance and may be in the form prescribed, is a form to be used "when property has been sold to a purchaser at delinquent tax sale, other than the state of California," and therefore should recite the fact, if it be a fact, that the property was "duly sold to" the purchaser at the sale, and not "duly sold to state of California," as is set forth in the deed here. At common law a tax deed does not ipso facto transfer the title of the owner as in grants from the government or in deeds between individuals, but its operative character depends upon the regularity of the anterior proceedings, and no presumption arises upon the mere production of the deed that the facts upon which it is based had any existence. Buck v. Canty, 162 Cal. 226, 121 P. 924; Miller v. Miller, 96 Cal. 376, 31 P. 247, 31 Am. St. Rep. 229. In the absence of statute, it is necessary that one claiming under a tax deed show affirmatively that all the requirements of the law have been complied with (Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 P. 356), and this rule is relaxed only to the extent that the statute relaxes it. A statute which divests the title to real estate ought to be strictly construed and every requisite having a semblance of benefit to the person whose title is sought to be divested should be strictly complied with. Atkins v. Kinnan, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 241, 32 Am. Dec. 534; Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522.

[4] In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371, the respondent claimed that the tax deed was void on its face because it failed to state a fact required by the statute to be stated in a deed of the kind in question. Section 3785b of the Political Code then, as now, contained the recital among other things that the property "was duly assessed for taxation"; but the deed omitted the words "for taxation" and contained the following: "That whereas, the real property hereinafter described was duly assessed in the year 1914." In that case it is stated: "We think that the deed was not legally sufficient to transfer title. 'It has uniformly been held in this state that a tax deed which misrecites or omits to recite any one of the facts required by the statute to be recited has no effect at all as a conveyance, the theory being that it is competent for the legislature to prescribe the form of instrument which, as the result of a proceeding in invitum can alone divest the citizen of his title, and that where the statute prescribes the particular form of the tax deed, the form becomes substance, and must be strictly pursued, and it is not for the courts to inquire whether the required recitals are of material facts or otherwise.' Henderson v. De Turk, 164 Cal. 296, 128 P. 747. While it is true that under section 3785b the 'form' need not be absolutely that prescribed in the statute, the prescribed facts must be stated in the deed. Property may be 'assessed' for purposes other than taxation. Therefore a recital that the property has been 'assessed' is not equivalent to a statement that it was assessed for taxation." There are numerous decisions holding tax deeds void when they omit to recite any one of the facts required to be recited, and there are no decisions laying down a different rule. These decisions constitute a rule of property from which the court should not depart. Henderson v. De Turk, 164 Cal. 296, 128 P. 747.

[5] Section 3785b, setting forth the substance and the form in which a deed may be executed, when property is sold, at tax sale to a purchaser other than the state, and section 3771a requiring as a prerequisite to a conveyance that the property "shall be sold by the tax collector at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States," the tax deed, to be primary evidence, should recite the fact, if it be a fact, that the property was sold to the person named as grantee in such tax deed. Not having done so, under the authority of Busenius v. Warden, supra, which is analogous in principle to the question here presented, it must be held that the tax deed is not legally sufficient to transfer title.

The conclusion reached renders unnecessary discussion of the point raised as to the sufficiency of the "Addenda Notice" or reference to the authorities cited by appellant, as they do not deal with the question here considered.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SHERMAN. (Cr. 1842.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 17, 1929.

- 1. False pretenses $\S$ 49(3)—Evidence held to sustain conviction of issuing check without sufficient funds, although payee had suffered no loss (Pen. Code, $\S$ 476a).

Where defendant issued check in payment of goods with no funds to pay check, and merchant learning such to be the case relieved defendant of merchandise, evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of issuing check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, as under Pen. Code, $\S$ 476a, it is not necessary element to such crime that person receiving check shall have been defrauded or suffered loss.

- 2. Criminal law $\S$ 721(5)—Statement of district attorney in argument that people's evidence was not controverted was not error as comment on defendant's failure to testify.

In prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds to pay same, statement of district attorney, in argument to jury, that evidence of the people was not controverted and had to be taken as true, and there was no denial that writing on check was not defendant's handwriting, and that there was no denial that defendant had issued check, was not error as comment on defendant's failure to testify.

- 3. Witnesses $\S$ 269(2)—Cross-examination of defendant's father as to defendant's true name held germane to direct examination.

In prosecution for issuing checks without sufficient funds to pay same, overruling defendant's objection to question put to defendant's father on cross-examination, as to defendant's true name, was not error, where defendant had twice caused his name to be changed during proceedings and father had stated his name on direct examination.

- 4. Criminal law $\S$ 656(2)—In prosecution for issuing check without sufficient funds, where defendant had no attorney, examination of certain witnesses by court was not misconduct.

In prosecution for issuing check without sufficient funds to pay same, where defendant had no attorney, examination of certain witnesses by court, although more extended than customary, was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Robert C. Sherman was convicted of issuing checks without sufficient funds, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Higgins, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. Defendant and appellant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county, in each of three counts, with the crime of issuing checks without sufficient funds. Count III was dismissed by the court during the trial and a verdict of guilty was found against the defendant upon counts I and II. From this judgment of conviction and denial of his motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant first urges that there is insufficient evidence to sustain the verdict as to the charge in count I. The evidence relating to this charge may be briefly summarized as follows: Defendant entered the store of the May Company in Los Angeles and purchased certain merchandise, the bill amounting to $12.35. As the merchandise was being wrapped by the saleslady, the defendant made out a check drawn on the United States National Bank for the sum of $12.35, which he tendered in payment for the merchandise. The saleslady before delivering the package to the defendant advised him that it was necessary for her to secure an O. K. on the check, whereupon the defendant stated that he would attend to some errand and return a few minutes later. The check was passed over to one Sabre, whose special duty in the May store was to examine and pass upon checks tendered in payment of purchases. The witness Sabre testified that when the check was handed him, he called up the United States National Bank and was informed by some clerk in the bank that he could find no record in the bank of an account in the name of Robert C. Sherman. Upon defendant's return, under instructions of Sabre, the saleslady handed the package of merchandise to him. Sabre then accosted defendant, asking him if he was Robert C. Sherman. Defendant answered that he was, and that he issued the check in question. Whereupon Sabre requested him to step to the office, where Sabre informed him of the report he had received from the bank to the effect that they had no record of an account in the name of Robert C. Sherman. Defendant admitted that he had no account there, and added that he had issued several other checks without having funds to meet them. The defendant was relieved by Sabre of the package of merchandise and placed under arrest.

[1] Appellant urges, in view of the fact that the May Company was not defrauded out of any money or property, and particularly the fact that before the merchandise was delivered to the defendant, the May Company, through its agent Sabre, had been informed that defendant had no account in the United States National Bank, that no crime had been committed.

There is no merit in this contention. It is not a necessary element to constitute the crime of issuing a check without sufficient funds with intent to defraud, that the person receiving the check shall have been defrauded, or suffered any loss. Section 476a of the Penal Code denounces as a crime the act of one who makes, or draws, or utters, or delivers to another person a check for the payment of money, knowing at the time he makes, draws, utters, or delivers such check he has not sufficient funds in or credit with the bank to meet the check. In the instant case it is not disputed that the defendant issued and delivered the check for the purpose of securing the merchandise, and that at the time of so doing, he knew he had no funds in the bank to meet the check. All the necessary elements to constitute the crime are clearly shown. People v. Williams, 69 Cal. App. 169, 230 P. 667; People v. Khan, 41 Cal. App. 393, 182 P. 803; People v. Bercovitz, 163 Cal. 636, 126 P. 479, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667.

The cases of People v. Wilkins, 67 Cal. App. 758, 228 P. 367, and People v. Weaver (Cal. App.) 274 P. 361, are not in conflict with the authorities above cited. In fact, they do not sustain appellant's contention on the point involved.

[2] The next point urged is the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury in making the following statement: "The evidence of The People is not controverted here by any evidence. You have to take it as true. There is no denial here that this is the defendant's handwriting; no denial here that he issued these checks, not a bit in the world." It is appellant's contention that this language was equivalent to saying that the defendant had failed to take the stand to testify in his own behalf. We cannot agree with appellant's contention in this respect. While the statement complained of may have been susceptible of the interpretation placed upon it by appellant, we do not feel that the language carries with it the vice that has been held to be prejudicial error. Fairly interpreted, it is an assertion that there had been no evidence controverting that presented by the state upon a vital issue in the case. Such a comment has been held to be within the right of the district attorney. People v. Sutherland, 59 Cal. App. 462, 210 P. 965; People v. McNamara, 65 Cal. App. 521, 224 P. 476. Furthermore, it appears that no objection was made by defendant to the statement of the district attorney complained of.

[3] The third point raised is that the court erred in overruling the objections of the defendant to a question asked in cross-examination of the defendant's father. The following excerpts from the record cover the episode referred to:

By Mr. McCartney (district attorney) in cross-examination:

"Q. Your name is Graham? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You say you are the father of the defendant? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What is his true name?"

Mr. Sherman (the defendant): "Just a minute, I object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, not proper cross-examination. * * *

The court: "What was the question again?" (Question read.)

The court: "If you know you may answer the question. A. Alfred Graham."

It should be noted in considering the foregoing portion of the record that the defendant acted as his own attorney in the trial. The record shows that at the preliminary hearing, defendant gave his true name as Allison Lee Graham, instead of Robert C. Sherman, the name under which he was charged in the complaint. In the information the name Allison Lee Graham appeared. When arraigned he was asked as to his true name, and replied, "Robert C. Sherman," whereupon the court permitted the district attorney to amend the information by substituting the name of Robert C. Sherman for Allison Lee Graham. Inasmuch as the witness had upon direct examination stated that he was the father of the defendant, and that his name was Alfred L. Graham, it was within the right of the district attorney in cross-examination to inquire into the asserted relationship. The question complained of was germane to that inquiry. Nor can it be urged that the inquiry was not pertinent, for the reason that the name of the defendant is always a pertinent matter in a criminal prosecution. The fact that the defendant had caused his name to be changed twice during the proceedings would make even more pertinent the inquiry as to the real identity of the defendant.

Appellant attacks the ruling of the court on the ground that in permitting the question to be answered, it was equivalent to permitting the witness to give the alias names under which defendant may have been known, and which line of inquiry has been held to be prejudicial error. We cannot agree that the question complained of comes within the scope of the cases cited by appellant. In any event, we are satisfied that there was no prejudicial error in the ruling of the court on this point.

[4] The fourth and last point urged has to do with the examination by the court of certain witnesses, which examination the appellant characterizes as "misconduct of the court." We have carefully read the record of the testimony, and while it appears that the questioning of witnesses by the court was somewhat more extended than is customary, we do not believe that it can reasonably be said that either in the extent, or in the manner of the questioning, did the court exceed its power. The record shows that the defendant requested of the court that the public defender, who had been appointed to represent him, be relieved of the appointment, as he (the defendant) felt he was able to and desired to defend himself. The court reluctantly granted his request in this respect, and, as frequently happens under such circumstances, the trial was delayed and the proceedings interrupted, because of the unfamiliarity of the defendant with court proceedings and methods of presenting evidence. The questions asked by the court might very well have elicited information that would have been helpful to the defense. We are satisfied there was no prejudicial error in this examination.

The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiffs' Packard motor hearse and the defendant's Pontiac sedan collided at a street intersection in Sutter City, causing damage to both vehicles and personal injuries to the defendant. Both parties seek to recover damages in this action. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant for damages, and the plaintiff has appealed. The only ground urged for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the findings and judgment.

[1, 2] The collision occurred at the intersection of Acacia and Nelson streets. Acacia street is 62 feet wide and a strip 14 feet in width along the middle thereof is paved. Nelson street is 97 feet wide, and the middle thereof is graveled to the width of 30 feet. At the time of the collision the hearse was going south along the paved part of Acacia street and the defendant was going west on Nelson street. The evidence shows that the two vehicles came together when the front wheels of the defendants' automobile were 4 feet west of the pavement and 2 feet north of the medial line of Nelson street. A witness for the defendant testified that the front part of the defendant's automobile was not "injured in any way"; that the injury to it was "on the running board and the side of the frame, on the right side of the car, the frame was sprung in and the body was caved in on the right-hand side of the automobile, the right-hand front fender was not broke"; that "the left-hand front fender" of the hearse "was smashed down onto the front wheel and the left-hand front axle was sprung" and the left-hand headlight was broke"; and that the hearse turned over on its left side, facing west, in a southwesterly direction from the point where the collision occurred, the rear end of the hearse being 32 feet from such point. The defendant testified that he was driving west along the gravel part of Nelson street at not "over 15 miles" an hour "and that he slackened just before" he "came to the intersection"; that when he reached the intersection he looked to the right, but "saw no car and proceeded to go across"; and that he "didn't know any more" until he found himself in a hospital. The driver of the hearse testified that he was going at the speed of about 20 miles an hour as he approached the intersection; that he first saw the defendant's automobile when it was 30 feet east of the intersection; that he applied the brakes of the hearse when he came "into the intersection," about 30 feet from the point of the collision; and that he swung to the right in an effort to avoid the collision. A witness for the defendant testified that marks on the pavement showed that the left hind wheel of the hearse had slipped for a distance of about 45 feet north of the center of the intersection and the right-hand wheel for a distance of 12 feet less, indicating that the brakes of the hearse were applied before it entered the intersection. If the hearse moved so great a distance with the brakes applied and then went 32 feet or more further after striking the defendant's automobile with the force indicated by the evidence, it must have approached and entered the intersection at a speed greatly in excess of 20 miles an hour. If the defendant's testimony as to the speed at which he entered the intersection is true, then he was well within the boundary lines thereof before the hearse reached the north boundary line. Section 131 of the Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1925, provided: "When two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." St. 1925, p. 412, § 15. It cannot be held, under the evidence stated, either that the two vehicles approached the intersection at approximately the same time or that the plaintiffs' hearse was traveling at a lawful speed. The findings of the court, based upon substantially conflicting evidence, that the plaintiffs' driver was negligent and that the defendant was not, are conclusive on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by Burr Latta against Edw. L. Da Roza and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for a balance due on a written contract "to lay 12-inch pipe on the property of Edw. L. Da Roza at 45 cents per foot. * * *" There is a conflict of evidence regarding the number of feet of pipe which was actually laid. It is contended the evidence does not support the judgment against the defendant Roma V. Da Roza. The chief controversy, however, is concerning the admission of testimony affecting an alleged trade custom respecting the construction of the term "to lay," which is employed in the contract.

The written contract was silent regarding the hauling of the pipe. Without objection the plaintiff testified: "This written contract did not contain all the agreements had with Da Roza. Mr. Da Roza was to haul the pipe, but later, because he was so busy, hired me to haul the pipe and all materials on a tonnage basis." Over objection on the part of defendants, the witness Hartman was permitted to testify that he had been in the pipe business many years, and was familiar with the usages and customs of the trade, and that the term "to lay" did not include a hauling charge. In response to this testimony the defendant Edward Da Roza testified: "That said contract was the only contract entered into between the parties hereto; that under such contract plaintiff agreed to and was to haul and lay the pipe for 45 cents a foot; [that] I am not, and never was, familiar with the customs or usages of pipe dealers or pipe laying contractors." The record contains no further testimony respecting the defendants' knowledge of the alleged trade custom.

[1-4] The general trade meaning of expressions is controlled by the express contract of the parties. Browning v. McNear, 158 Cal. 525, 111 P. 541. In view of the conflict of evidence respecting the charge for hauling pipe, the judgment should be affirmed, unless the foregoing evidence as to the trade custom was incompetent and prejudicial. Clearly, the challenged evidence in the present case affects a special trade usage, which is presumed to be known by and binding upon those who are engaged in that particular trade or calling. 25 Cal. Jur. 419, § 4; 27 R. C. L. 162, § 10. When a usage is not general in character, but, upon the contrary, is local and confined to a particular trade or occupation, it is binding upon those not engaged in the calling, only, who have either express or implied knowledge of its existence. 27 R. C. L. 163, § 11. Customs of special trades and local usages, which are limited to certain communities, are not presumed to be known to all persons. Jones on Evidence (3d Ed.) 714, § 464. To bind one who is not engaged in the trade or occupation which employs the usage relied upon, proof of his actual knowledge of the usage is necessary, unless it is so commonly accepted that the public is presumed to recognize its existence.

[5-7] When the language of a contract is uncertain or ambiguous, evidence of usage applicable to the transaction may be received to explain the intent of the parties. Section 1870, subd. 12, Code Civ. Proc.; 25 Cal. Jur. 425, § 10. In the present case, however, the alleged custom of the trade, to the effect that a contract to lay pipe does not include a charge for hauling the same, is not binding on the defendants, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, for the reason that it appears affirmatively without contradiction that they had no knowledge of the existence of such usage. Nor does it appear this alleged usage is of such a character or general prevalence as to require a presumption of common knowledge of its existence. Since the evidence is uncontradicted that the defendants were ignorant of the usage of the trade in so construing the language of the contract, and since, under the circumstances of this case, knowledge on the part of the defendants was necessary in order to bind them to a mere custom, it must be assumed the trial court disregarded the insufficient evidence of usage, and rendered its judgment on the affirmative testimony of an independent agreement to pay for hauling the pipe. The court adopted no finding relative to usage.

[8, 9] The terms of the contract were uncertain with respect to the obligation to pay for hauling the pipe, and oral testimony upon this subject was therefore competent. There is substantial evidence, independent of the alleged usage, to the effect that defendants hired the plaintiff "to haul the pipe and all materials on a tonnage basis," apart from the contract to lay the pipe. While this evidence was contradicted by the defendants, it is nevertheless controlling upon this court on appeal.

[10] There is no merit in the claim that the judgment is not supported by evidence which is binding upon the defendant Roma Da Roza. The agency of her husband and co-defendant was sufficiently shown. He testified: "My wife's name is Roma V. Da Roza. She and I own the ranch upon which the work was done. I have charge of the operation of the ranch."

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by Barthol Moranda and another against Clarence Wells Mapes and another. From a judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Berry & Watson and A. H. Carpenter, all of Stockton, for appellants.

Woodward, Briggs & Blewett, of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment determining the northerly boundary line of land owned by them.

The court found that the plaintiffs' predecessors in interest acquired title through a deed executed October 4, 1873, by John Durham to James Swaltney, which described the land as "lying southeast of the east bank of the Mormon Slough and containing 15.25 acres"; that "the south bank of Mormon Slough (referred to in said deed as southeast bank) as it then existed coincided with the following line," describing the line fixed by the judgment as the plaintiffs' northerly boundary line.

The defendant Mapes claims ownership of lands lying on the northerly side of the plaintiffs' said boundary line, his predecessors in interest also having acquired title from John Durham. The court found that "neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant Clarence Wells Mapes nor Nannette Bollinger have acquired title by prescription, or otherwise" to the land in dispute, but that "the record title to said tract of land * * * has, at all times herein named and does now vest in Samuel Bollinger. * * * That the defendant Clarence Wells Mapes, for a period of more than five years immediately preceding the commencement of this action, has paid all taxes levied and assessed against" the lands in dispute, "the greater part of which is situated between the banks of Mormon Slough, as said banks now exist."

The decree adjudges "that the defendants should be, and each of them is hereby forever enjoined and debarred from asserting or claiming any right, title, estate, lien or interest in and to" the land found by the court to belong to plaintiffs.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land described therein, "lying southeast of the southeast bank of Mormon Slough," and sets forth the boundaries thereof by courses and distances; the northerly boundary being given as a meander line along the south bank of Mormon Slough. The answer of defendant Mapes denies the particular description contained in the complaint and alleges, in substance, that the southerly boundary line of his land is the "south bank of Mormon Slough." It thus appears that the only issue for the court to determine was the location of the south bank of Mormon Slough. The valuable part of the land in dispute is referred to as an island, above which Mormon Slough divides into two channels which unite again at the lower end of the island. The northerly channel is now a deep slough, while the southerly channel is shallow. There is a substantial and sharp conflict in the evidence as to which one of these was the original channel. Witnesses for the defendant Mapes testified that at a time 30 years or more before the trial the main slough ran south of the island, and that at that time there was a fence in the approximate location of the plaintiffs' northerly boundary as fixed by the judgment herein. As stated, the deed from Durham to Swaltney described the land thereby conveyed as containing 15.25 acres, while the land adjudged to belong to the plaintiffs contains 15.36 acres. The land described in the complaint as belonging to the plaintiffs contains 16.28 acres.

[1] It is clear that the findings of the court, based on the foregoing evidence, are conclusive on this appeal, notwithstanding the testimony of the plaintiffs' witnesses to the contrary.

[2] Appellants contend that the judgment does not quiet their title to the land found by the court to belong to them. The plaintiffs did not pray for a decree directly quieting their title, but for judgment that the claims on the part of the defendants are void, that they have no interest in or claim to the property, and that they be forever enjoined from asserting or claiming any right or interest therein adverse to the plaintiffs. The judgment forever enjoining the defendants from "asserting or claiming any right, title, estate, lien or interest" in or to the land belonging to the plaintiffs in effect quiets the latter's title thereto against the defendants. Wolf v. Gall, 174 Cal. 140, 144, 162 P. 115. There was no issue before the trial court as to the plaintiffs' title to such land. The answer admits that the plaintiffs own those parts of the land described in the complaint "lying southeast of the southeast bank of Mormon Slough, as said bank existed on the 4th day of October, 1873." The findings definitely locate such bank as it existed October 4, 1873, and the decree establishes such location as the plaintiffs' northerly boundary line. As said by this court, under somewhat similar circumstances, in Martin v. City of Stockton, 39 Cal. App.

552, 559, 179 P. 894, 897: "In view of the whole judgment roll, there can be no future controversy between the parties to this action as to the questions involved in this litigation."

[3] It is true, as urged by appellants, that courses, distances, and quantity contained in a description of land must yield to monuments. "However, to justify an application of the rule, the monuments must be fixed and certain." 4 Cal. Jur. 399. If the evidence relating to the location of such monuments is in substantial conflict, as in this case, then courses, distances, and quantity become important facts to be considered in deciding such conflict. Hostetter v. Los Angeles T. Ry. Co., 108 Cal. 38, 42, 41 P. 330; Goss v. Golsinsky, 12 Cal. App. 71, 76, 106 P. 604.

[4] Appellants attack the finding that the record title to the land in dispute is vested in Samuel Bollinger, who is not a party to this action and who, they assert, without citing any evidence to that effect, has been dead for many years. "The plaintiff in an action of this kind must show title in himself. His right to recover must rest on the strength of his own title—not the weakness of defendants." Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 682, 178 P. 712, 713; Knoke v. Knight (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 786.

[5, 6] Appellants contend that certain evidence, which they set out in their brief, was "extremely prejudicial." The only part of this evidence to which objection was made was to the effect that, based on "common reputation of the boundary line," the fence hereinbefore referred to was considered the boundary line between the plaintiffs' land and that lying to the north thereof at a time 30 years or more before the trial. All such testimony, based on reputation, was subsequently stricken out. The other evidence which appellants contend was prejudicial related to the location of the south bank of Mormon Slough about the year 1890 and was clearly admissible.

The evidence bearing on every material issue is in substantial conflict, but there is no doubt as to its sufficiency to support the findings.

The plaintiffs made a motion for a new trial, which motion was denied by the court. The affidavits produced in support of the motion contain nothing to warrant a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

JONES et ux. v. KELLY. (S. F. 12638.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Pleading ⚡49—Full scope should be given pleading and special consideration paid to leading allegations to determine whether pleading states cause of action ex contractu or ex delicto.

To determine whether pleading states cause of action ex contractu or one ex delicto, it should be construed according to its full scope and effect rather than according to a single sentence or expression contained therein, and special consideration should be given to prominent and leading allegations.

2. Action ⚡27(1)—Action arising from breach of promise is ex contractu, and one arising from breach of duty growing out of contract is ex delicto.

Cause of action arising from breach of promise is action ex contractu, and cause of action arising from breach of duty growing out of contract is ex delicto, and is none the less such because it incidentally involves breach of contract.

3. Action ⚡28—Duty to abstain from injuring person, property, or rights of another being independent of contract, plaintiffs may sue in tort or contract (Civ. Code, § 1708).

Duty under Civ. Code, § 1708, to abstain from injuring person or property of another or infringing upon another's rights is independent of contract, and attaches over and above terms thereof, and therefore plaintiffs may treat injury as tort or breach of contract at their election.

4. Appeal and error ⚡917(1)—Supreme Court passing on merits of demurrer must assume truthfulness of allegations of amended complaint.

On appeal, Supreme Court must assume truthfulness of allegations of amended complaint for purpose of passing upon merits of demurrer thereto.

5. Action ⚡27(2)—Complaint charging landlord maliciously, oppressively, and wantonly disconnected water supply from tenants' dwelling held to state cause of action in tort.

Tenants' complaint alleging that landlord, after having rented to them dwelling house, including supply of water for domestic purposes, maliciously, willfully, with express malice and evil motive, wantonly, oppressively disconnected and destroyed water supply, held sufficient to state cause of action in tort, since lease conveyed estate in demised premises which entitled tenants to equal protection of law in use and enjoyment of habitation, and shutting off water supply to residents used for domestic, household, and sanitary purposes is interference with use and occupation of property and in effect amounts to an ejection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Charles Jones and wife against Michael J. Kelly. Judgment for defendant and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Superseding opinion 274 P. 368.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. C. Flannery, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Appeal prosecuted by plaintiffs, husband and wife, in an action to recover damages, both actual and exemplary, for the alleged destruction by defendant of the plaintiffs' water supply, the parties occupying the relation of landlord and tenant. A demurrer, both general and special, to the amended complaint, was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment thereupon entered in favor of the defendant. From the fact that the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend the amended complaint, it is apparent that the trial court was of the opinion that a cause of action could not be predicated on tort, the main issue presented by the complaint, and therefore did not deem it necessary to pass upon other alleged infirmities of lesser importance which are easily amendable. We will therefore confine ourselves to the main issue discussed by the briefs.

The amended complaint is quite brief, and concisely sets out the contentions of appellants:

"Aver by way of inducement to the cause of action for the trespass hereinafter alleged, that heretofore to-wit: in the month of March, 1924, the plaintiffs hired from defendant and he let to them as his tenants from month to month, at a monthly rental, and for the use, occupancy and habitation of plaintiffs, as and for their home and dwelling place, the dwelling house and premises then and there owned by defendant and situated at No. 22 Harper street in said city and county of San Francisco, together with a sufficient supply of water to the same, for the household and domestic uses of plaintiffs in said dwelling and home and for their drink, bathing, washing of clothes, and also for necessary toilet and culinary purposes therein.

"That thereupon and with the consent of defendant and upon said terms of tenancy, including said water supply, the said plaintiffs on the 15th day of March, 1924, and as said tenants, entered into the possession and occupancy of said dwelling house as their home and habitation, and paid the said rental therefor to defendant, until the trespass hereinafter alleged. That during all the times said premises were occupied by plaintiffs as said tenants, the said water supply was necessary for said purposes, and essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment of said dwelling house as a fit and suitable place of habitation for human beings. That accordingly and by reason of the fact that said water supply was necessary for said purposes during the existence of said tenancy, the said defendant furnished said plaintiffs as said tenants with said water and in said dwelling house from said 15th day of March, 1924, until the time of the trespass hereinafter alleged, to-wit: on the 22nd day of May, 1926.

"That while said dwelling house was occupied as aforesaid by plaintiffs and during the continued existence of said tenancy and while plaintiffs as said tenants were in the quiet and peaceable possession, occupancy and enjoyment of said dwelling house as their home, place of abode and habitation, and were then actually using said water supply therein solely for the necessary purposes hereinbefore stated, the said defendant on the 22nd day of May, 1926, without the consent of plaintiffs and against their will and without notice or warning to either of them, did wilfully, maliciously and with express malice and evil motive, wantonly, oppressively and solely for the malevolent purpose of annoying, inconveniencing, harassing and injuring the plaintiffs, cut off, disconnect, discontinue, terminate and destroy said water supply and entirely deprive the plaintiffs of the same and did thereby seriously, maliciously, oppressively, wantonly and wilfully, annoy, inconvenience and harass plaintiffs and greatly injure them in their feelings and inflict upon them by said wilful and malicious trespass, very great trouble, severe hardship, detrimental privation, personal indignities and mental suffering, all of which is to their actual damage in the sum of three thousand dollars and in the further sum of two thousand dollars exemplary damages. That in support of said claim to exemplary damages the plaintiffs aver that this action is not brought for a breach of an obligation arising out of said contract of tenancy, in failing to supply water to plaintiffs in said premises, but is brought solely to recover for said trespass in maliciously, oppressively and wantonly cutting off said water supply, to the great annoyance, harassment, hardship and injury of plaintiffs as hereinbefore alleged."

[1-5] It is the contention of respondent that the amended complaint does no more than tend to establish a breach of the contract demising the premises described in the amended complaint, and that a cause of action sounding in contract cannot be converted into a trespass or tort by alleging the acts which form the basis of the breach were maliciously, oppressively and wantonly committed. On the other hand, appellants admit that the averments show the existence of a contract, but contend upon authority that the contractual relations between the parties are mere matters of inducement preliminary to the statement of a cause of action in tort. "In determining whether a pleading is intended to state a cause of action ex contractu or one ex delicto it should be construed according to the full scope and effect rather than according to a single sentence or expression contained therein; and special consideration should be given to the prominent and leading allegations." 21 Ency. Pl. and Pr. 657; Harding v. Liberty Hospital Corp., 177 Cal. 520, 171 P. 98. If the cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is ex contractu, but, if it arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is ex delicto. Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Randall, 74 Ala. 170. A tort and trespass is none the less such because it incidentally involves a breach of the contract. Stock v. Boston, 149 Mass. 410, 21 N. E. 871, 14 Am. St. Rep. 430. The law imposes the obligation that "every person is bound, without contract, to abstain from injuring the person or property of another, or infringing upon any of his rights." Section 1708, Civ. Code. This duty is independent of the contract and attaches over and above the terms of the contract. This being so, the plaintiffs may treat the injury as a tort or as a breach of contract at their election. 1 Page on Contracts (2d Ed.) § 57. That appellants have a proprietary interest in the demised premises which goes by the name of estate is not open for debate. 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, 162. The situation as presented by the pleadings, we think, is well encompassed by the following excerpt from Rich v. New York Central & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 382: "It may be granted that an omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty. But such legal duty * * * may spring from extraneous circumstances, not constituting elements of the contract as such, although connected with and dependent upon it, and born of that wider range of legal duty which is due from every man to his fellow, to respect his rights of property and person, and refrain from invading them by force or fraud." A tort may grow out of or make part of, or be coincident with a contract. The fact that there existed a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant would not immunize the latter from the penalty that is ordinarily visited upon tort-feasors. Had the defendant, under the relationship shown to exist between the parties, wilfully and maliciously removed the doors or windows from said premises occupied by plaintiffs, he could not have escaped the penalty which the law imposes upon tort-feasors on the theory that his relations with plaintiffs were also contractual. In effect the illustration and the act complained of are alike. By the lease the plaintiffs were conveyed an estate in the demised premises, and they were entitled to equal protection of the law in the use and enjoyment of their habitation against all persons, including the defendant. Shutting off the water which supplies a residence for domestic, household, and sanitary purposes is a serious interference with the use and occupation of property and in effect amounts to an eviction. The water supply which furnished said residence at the time plaintiffs leased said premises and went into possession and during the whole period of occupancy formed a material part of the estate, and, if disturbed in the manner alleged in the complaint, would amount to tortious conduct on the part of defendant. We must assume the truthfulness of the allegations of the amended complaint for the purposes of passing upon the merits of the demurrer.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

PEOPLE v. CHANDLER. (Cr. 3242.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

Homicide $\Rightarrow$ 231—Evidence that defendant, living illicitly with deceased, charged deceased with having another man and making false reports, established malice in murder prosecution (Pen. Code, §§ 188, 189).

In prosecution for murder, evidence that defendant lived in illicit relationship with deceased, and on evening of murder engaged in conversation with deceased, in which he accused her of having another man, and of making false reports to him as to what she received, held sufficient to show malice, both express and implied, as defined by Pen. Code, §§ 188, 189.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

James Chandler was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. V. Rude, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHENK, J. The defendant was prosecuted, by information, for the murder of one Jessie Gafford, 28 years of age. The jury returned a verdict of murder of the first degree, without recommendation. The defendant appeals from the judgment imposing the extreme penalty, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

For about 30 days prior to December 23, 1928, the defendant was living with Edwin Echols at Compton avenue and Adams street, in the city of Los Angeles. The deceased was living at the same place. Intermittently for three years past she had been living with the defendant in an illicit relationship. There was evidence that she was engaged in illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors, and there was also evidence from which the jury might reasonably infer that she was a prostitute, and was sharing with the defendant the proceeds from one or both of her activities. In the late morning and early afternoon of December 23, 1928, the defendant was at the nearby home of a woman at which the deceased was a frequent visitor. During that time the defendant had some drinks, and police officers were called to take him away. However, when the officers arrived, about 5 o'clock, they concluded that it was not necessary to arrest him. Whereupon he was taken to his own home by Echols.

Later on in the evening he returned to the neighbor's house, where he became engaged in a conversation with the deceased, in which he accused her of having another man. He continued to upbraid her for other reasons. He accused her of not charging enough in her illicit transactions with others, and of making false reports to him as to what she had received. The deceased disputed all of the accusations, but the defendant refused to accept her explanations and protestations of truthfulness and became violent. In the house of the neighbor he first began his physical abuse of her by beating her with a dead, but unpicked, chicken. Later he assaulted her by striking her body with a chair and kicking her. This conduct on the part of the defendant was seen by an eyewitness who testified at the trial.

After nightfall police officers were again called. When the police machine turned into the alley in the rear of the neighbor's house, the headlights disclosed the defendant kicking the prostrate and disheveled body of his victim. He endeavored to escape by running and hiding under the workbench of a nearby garage, where he was apprehended. The walls and the floor of the room where the defendant first assaulted the deceased were bespattered with blood. The remnants of the broken chair with which he struck her contained blood marks. A broken mop stick, with human blood on it, was found in the yard, and pools of blood were found where the body lay in the alley. There was evidence of marks on the ground in the rear of the house, which it was reasonable to assume were caused by dragging the body from the house to the alley.

The defendant did not claim that he was intoxicated at any of the times when he was seen assaulting the deceased. He protested that he was not, and the police officers testified that he was not intoxicated when he was arrested. His wholly inadequate explanation was that he was endeavoring to take the deceased to her home. The autopsy surgeon testified that there were numerous contusions and abrasions on the arms, legs, and body of the deceased, that her left wrist was fractured, and that death was caused by concussion of the brain and a subdural hemorrhage following injuries of the head.

The first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict of murder of the first degree because of the alleged absence of proof of malice. There is no merit in this claim. The accusations of the defendant against the deceased, considered in connection with their prior relations, fully furnished this element, and stamp the offense with malice, both express and implied, as defined by sections 188 and 189 of the Penal Code.

The only other point made by the defendant is that the court committed prejudicial error in giving certain instructions to the jury. The entire charge to the jury has been examined. It was full, fair, and complete, and no error appears therein.

The judgment and order are and each is affirmed.

RYAN v. FARRELL et al. (L. A. 9763.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨197(7)—Employer is not relieved of liability for injuries by employee because automobile was employee's private car used with employer's consent.

If person causing injuries was employee of defendant rather than independent contractor and was acting in course of employment when inflicting injuries, defendant would not be relieved of liability by reason of circumstance that automobile was not one supplied by defendant for use of employees, but was private car of employee used in performing services for employer with express or implied consent of employer.

2. Master and servant ⇨330(3)—Finding that automobile company had such control over salesman as made salesman employee, not independent contractor, held authorized by evidence.

Evidence that automobile salesman entitled to drawing account and commissions on sale of automobiles was employed for no definite length of time, and that company had right to discharge him at any time, and evidence that salesman was required to report every morning for instructions, authorized jury to conclude that company possessed right to exercise such control over salesman as made salesman employee of company not independent contractor.

3. Master and servant ⇨318(1)—That certain freedom is inherent in nature of work does not change character of employment, where employer has general control over work.

That certain amount of freedom of action is inherent in nature of work does not change character of employment in determining whether there was relationship of employer and employee, or employer and independent contractor, where employer has general supervision and control of work.

4. Automobiles ⇨193(8)—Automobile salesman, injuring plaintiff when returning from trip to interview prospective purchaser, held acting in "course of employment" at time of injury.

Plaintiff, injured by salesman of defendant company, did not fail to show salesman was acting in "course of employment" at time of injury, where automobile salesman made trip to interview prospective purchaser and was making return trip when he injured plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Course of Employment.]

5. Master and servant ⇨302(2)—Employee does not cease to act in course of employment when starting on return trip after performing errand for employer.

Employee who has gone on errand on behalf of master does not cease to be acting in course of employment at moment he starts on return trip after having performed errand.

6. Master and servant ⇨302(6)—Master will be held responsible for injury by servant combining own business with master's, unless it clearly appears that servant could not have been serving master.

Where servant is combining his own business with that of master's or attending to both at substantially same time, no nice inquiry will be made as to which business servant was actually engaged in when third person was injured, but master will be held responsible unless it clearly appears that servant could not have been directly or indirectly serving master.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. C. Haines, Judge.

Action by L. R. Ryan against J. W. Emerson Farrell and another. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial following entry of judgment of nonsuit, defendant Edwards-Merritt Company appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Hizar, of San Diego, for appellant.

P. M. Andrews and Allen E. Rogers, both of San Diego, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Defendant Edwards-Merritt Company, a corporation, appeals from an order granting a new trial on motion of plaintiff following the entry of a judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant in an action wherein plaintiff sought to recover damages for personal injuries received when an automobile in which he was riding was struck and overturned by an automobile operated by defendant J. W. Emmerson Farrell, claimed by plaintiff to be an employee of appellant company. The trial judge granted the nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence on the ground that plaintiff had failed to establish that said

J. W. Emmerson Farrell was an employee of appellant for whose negligence it would be liable on the doctrine of respondeat superior. Thereafter plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted by a different judge than the one who had rendered the judgment of nonsuit.

[1] The evidence bearing on the relationship of Farrell, the driver of the automobile, and appellant company is found in the testimony of Farrell. Appellant maintained a sales agency in the city of San Diego for the sale of Chrysler and Maxwell automobiles. Farrell had been connected with said agency as a salesman for about a year at the time of the accident. He received a commission on all sales made and was allowed a drawing account of $150 a month, amounts paid being deducted from commissions on sales made. In calling upon prospective purchasers Farrell used an automobile purchased from appellant on conditional sales contract and not fully paid for, and at the time he struck the automobile in which plaintiff was riding he was returning to San Diego, his place of residence, from Pacific Beach, where he had gone with the purpose of interviewing a prospective purchaser. He testified that salesmen connected with appellant generally used between 100 and 120 gallons of gasoline a month, 40 gallons of which were furnished by said appellant. If Farrell was the employee of appellant, rather than an independent contractor, and was acting in the course of his employment when he inflicted injuries upon plaintiff, appellant is not relieved of liability by reason of the circumstance that the automobile was not one supplied by it for the use of its employee, but was the private car of said employee used by him in performing service for his employer with the express or implied consent of said employer. Brimberry v. Dudfield Lumber Co., 183 Cal. 454, 191 P. 894.

Farrell further testified that he was employed for no definite length of time, and that the company had the right to discharge him at any time. All salesmen were required to report at appellant's office every morning at 8:15 for a sales meeting to receive instructions in regard to the promotion of sales from appellant's sales manager, who had charge of all salesmen. At these meetings the sales manager discussed with salesmen the details of their work. He also gave the salesmen the names of prospective customers to call upon. Farrell stated that he regarded himself as under the control and management of appellant.

Farrell's duties consisted in inducing prospective customers to agree to buy cars from appellant, at prices fixed by it. On behalf of appellant he procured the signatures of buyers to written contracts of purchase either at appellant's agency or wherever it might be convenient for the buyer to execute the contract. If a secondhand car was taken in, he secured an appraisal from the Certified Market, as directed by the sales manager, and the car was taken in at the valuation thus fixed.

[2] From the facts and circumstances testified to concerning the relationship between Farrell and appellant, the jury might well have concluded that appellant possessed the right to exercise that degree and kind of control over Farrell which distinguishes an employer from one for whom another is rendering services as an independent contractor. Hence the trial judge did not err in granting a new trial on motion of plaintiff following the judgment of nonsuit.

[3] Not only is the evidence consistent with a right of control, which is the governing factor, but it appears that there was an exercise of such control through the instructions which were given to the salesmen at the daily meetings. The fact that a certain amount of freedom of action is inherent in the nature of the work does not change the character of the employment where the employer has general supervision and control of it. Cameron v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 83, 159 P. 149.

In May v. Farrell (Cal. App.) 271 P. 789, the District Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment in an action against appellant herein growing out of the same collision as the instant case. Although the evidence given in that case was not identical in all particulars with that herein, the court in its discussion says much that is applicable in the instant case. We do not regard Barton v. Studebaker Corp., 46 Cal. App. 707, 189 P. 1025, as inconsistent with the decision we here make. Each case must necessarily be determined on its own particular facts, and while the court in that case did not regard the facts as indicating an authoritative right of control, in the instant case a jury may have concluded such right to exist.

[4-6] Nor can it be held that plaintiff failed to show that Farrell was acting in the course of his employment when plaintiff was injured. Farrell had made the trip from San Diego to Pacific Beach to interview a prospective purchaser and was making the return trip when he injured plaintiff. An employee who has gone upon an errand on behalf of his master does not cease to be acting in the course of his employment at the moment he starts upon the return trip after having performed the errand. May v. Farrell, supra. Plaintiff expected also to meet his wife at the Coronado ferry on his way home from Pacific Beach. It is the established rule in this jurisdiction that where the servant is combining his own business with that of his master, or attending to both at substantially the same time, no nice inquiry will be made as to which business the servant was actually engaged in when a third person was injured; but the master will be held responsible, unless it clearly appears that the servant could not have been directly or indirectly serving his master. Brimberry v. Duffield Lumber Co., 183 Cal. 454, 191 P. 894; Kruse v. White Bros., 81 Cal. App. 86, 253 P. 178; May v. Farrell, supra; Dennis v. Miller Automobile Co., 73 Cal. App. 293, 238 P. 739. It does not clearly appear here that at the time Farrell struck plaintiff he had so far departed from the normal or direct route of his return trip to San Diego that it could be said that he was acting without the course of his employment.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

Trial court's findings of facts on conflicting evidence were conclusive, where they were supported by the evidence.

2. Judgment $\S$ 580—Where appeal was still pending from judgment, such judgment could not be pleaded as bar to subsequent action (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1049).

Where appeal had been taken from judgment, and action was still pending and undetermined, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1049, at time of instant action, such judgment could not be pleaded as bar to instant action.

3. Abatement and revival $\S$ 16—Party in whose favor judgment appealed from was rendered, may plead prior action in abatement, and lay foundation for securing continuance until final determination of first action.

Party, in whose favor prior judgment, from which appeal has been taken, has been rendered, may, in subsequent action, plead prior action in abatement, and lay foundation for securing continuance of trial of second action until final determination of first.

4. Deeds $\S$ 54—Deed must be delivered to effectuate passing of title.

Delivery of a deed must be made to effectuate passing of title from grantor to grantee, and, if delivery is wanting, the deed is void ab initio, and is no better than a blank form.

5. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 229(1)—It was unnecessary that purchasers of lots have actual notice that title company executing sales contract held only legal title, and that approval of plaintiff, seeking to rescind contract, was necessary to consummate deal.

It was unnecessary that defendant purchasers of lots have actual notice that title company executing sales contract held only legal title to lots, and that approval of plaintiff, who was suing to rescind contract was necessary to consummate deal, but it was sufficient, if circumstances were such as to put prudent person upon inquiry.

6. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 244—Evidence supported finding that purchasers of lots had notice that title company, executing sales contract, held only legal title, and that plaintiff's approval was necessary to consummate deal.

In action to rescind contract for sale of real property, evidence held sufficient to support finding that defendant purchasers had notice that title company, executing sales contract, held only the legal title, and that approval of plaintiff was necessary to consummate deal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action to rescind a contract for the sale of real property by Marie Julie Pellissier against the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, Emma Summers, Francis W. Henry, and others. From a decree for plaintiff, the last-named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 274 P. 552.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Denis & Griffith and Lawler & Degan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Pellissier.

E. W. Sargent, E. J. Vaughn, G. B. Colby, Tanner, Odell & Taft, O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, and Homer I. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Title Guarantee & Trust Company.

PRESTON, J. After a careful reconsideration of this cause, we are pleased to adopt the opinion of Mr. Justice Plummer of the Third Appellate District as the opinion of this court in bank:

The plaintiff's complaint in this action sets forth the incorporation of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company; that prior to the date hereinafter mentioned the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple of all that certain real property described as the west half of the northwest quarter of section 25, township 1 south, range 14 west, S. B. M., in the county of Los Angeles; that on or about the ——— day of February, 1913, the plaintiff executed and delivered to the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company an instrument absolute in form, conveying all of said property to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company; that upon the same date an agreement in writing was entered into between the plaintiff and the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, wherein and whereby it was agreed that said conveyance, though absolute in form, was made in trust; that no consideration was paid therefor; that the title to said property was held in trust by the Title Company for the benefit of the plaintiff; that the conveyance was made by the plaintiff to the Title Company for the purpose of enabling the Title Company to subdivide and make sales of lots in said tract, to such persons, at such prices, and upon such terms as the Title Company should be thereafter instructed by the plaintiff; that said trust agreement has, since the date thereof, remained in full force and effect, and was in full force and effect at the time of the institution of this action.

It is further set forth in the complaint that, after the execution of the instruments just referred to, the Title Company proceeded to subdivide said real property into city lots, and had a map of the subdivision thereof duly recorded; that in said subdivision and upon said map there were two lots described as lots 188 and 189 of tract No. 2189, commonly known as Pellissier Square. The complaint further alleges that on or about the 1st day of February, 1923, and while said trust agreement referred to was in full force and effect, the Title Company executed a written contract for the sale of said lots 188 and 189 to one Francis W. Henry, for the total purchase price of $27,500. It is further alleged in the complaint that the defendant Emma Summers was the real party in interest, and that the contract executed in the name of Francis W. Henry was for her uses and purposes. The complaint then alleges that the defendants Summers and Henry, and each of them, knew and had actual notice that the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company held only the naked legal title to said property; that it was held in trust for the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was the real owner thereof, and that her consent and approval were required before the Title Company could make any conveyance or agreement for the sale of said lots, or either of them. It is then alleged that the plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of said property, or to execute or deliver the contract of sale therefor, and never consented to or approved the making of any such sale or such contract, and had no prior knowledge of the execution of said contract, and, immediately upon learning thereof, informed the Title Company that she did not consent to or approve the same, and forthwith caused defendants Summers and Henry to be advised of such fact, and demanded a return and cancellation of the contract.

The prayer of the complaint is for a decree declaring said contract void; that it be delivered up and canceled; that the defendants Summers and Henry be held as involuntary trustees for the benefit of the plaintiff, if any rights they have under said contract. A copy of the contract referred to is attached to the complaint, marked Exhibit A, bearing date of February 1, 1923, purporting to have been executed between the Title Guarantee & Trust Company and Francis W. Henry, whereby the Title Company agrees to convey to Francis W. Henry lots 188 and 189 of tract No. 2189, known as Pellissier Square, for the sum of $27,500, payable in installments, the first installment being the sum of $2,500, to be paid on the execution of the contract; the other installments to be paid at stated times and in the amount set forth in the contract. A number of restrictions are set forth in the contract, not necessary to be particularly referred to herein. The contract is signed by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, by A. F. Morlan, vice president, and A. R. Kilgore, secretary, and by Francis W. Henry; approved by W. H. Taggart, assistant trust officer. The answer of the defendants Summers and Henry denies each and every of the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint. The defendant Paul M. Reidy was brought in by an amendment to the complaint, but whatever interest the defendant Reidy acquired was acquired from the defendant Francis W. Henry, after the beginning of this action, or after the controversy, relating to the contract referred to, had arisen, and is subject to, and dependent upon, any rights, if any, which the defendant Francis W. Henry may have in and to said lots, and need not be further mentioned herein. The Title Company, by its answer, admitted practically all of the allegations of the complaint, but set forth in its answer that the contract referred to was never delivered by it to either the defendant Summers or the defendant Henry, although its possession was obtained by said defendants, who declined and refused to return the same to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company when demand was made therefor.

While the plaintiff's complaint does not allege the nondelivery of the contract by the Title Company to the defendant Francis W. Henry, or to his agent, Emma Summers, the cause was tried as though delivery was one of the issues tendered for determination by the court. As a considerable portion of the testimony is directed to the question of delivery, and the argument of counsel is directed to the same subject, we conclude that the trial was had upon the theory that the issue of delivery was tendered to the court, even though not specifically set forth in the pleadings, and the decision of this cause must be had in view of the theory entertained at the trial of the action.

The findings of fact, after referring to many items which are not disputed, find in paragraph No. 5: That the contract between the Title Company and the defendant Francis W. Henry was executed in duplicate, the material part of which is in these words: "The said contract was prepared in duplicate, and one copy of it was afterwards taken away from the office of said Title Guarantee & Trust Company, without the knowledge or consent of said Company or of plaintiff, and thereafter, without the knowledge or consent of said Company, or this plaintiff, was signed and acknowledged in due form by Francis W.

Henry before said Anna C. Durkee, as notary public, and the certificate of acknowledgment was signed by her under the date of March 15, 1923, and not otherwise. Said contract was never delivered to said Henry, or to any person for her, or at all. Said Emma A. Summers obtained possession of the said copy of said contract so acknowledged by said Henry, before said acknowledgment was made, and would not return it to said Title Guarantee & Trust Company, although due demand therefor was made on her." And then further found in paragraph No. 7: "That the said defendants Summers and Henry, and each of them, knew and had actual notice that the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company, held only the naked legal title to said property in trust for this plaintiff, and that this plaintiff was the real owner of the property, and that her consent and approval was required before said defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company could make any conveyance or agreement for the sale of said lots, or either of them." It may be here stated that the finding of the court that the contract was "signed" by Francis W. Henry before Anna C. Durkee, as notary public, has no support whatever in the testimony. There is no controversy whatever that both copies of the contract were signed by the defendant Francis W. Henry at the residence of the defendant Emma Summers, prior to the signing thereof by Morlan and Kilgore acting for the company. The finding as to acknowledging and recording is likewise unquestioned. The decree went in favor of the plaintiff, and from this decree the defendants Summers and Henry appeal.

Finding No. 8 is to the effect that the plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of the lots in question, or to execute or deliver any contract of sale therefor; that she never consented to or approved of the contract, and does not now consent thereto or approve the same; that, immediately upon learning of the contract, she informed the Title Company of her disapproval, and had demand made upon the defendants Summers and Henry for the return of the contract, etc.; and, further, that the plaintiff never received any of the purchase price for said lots.

The first point made by the appellants is that findings Nos. 7 and 8 are not supported by the evidence, in that there is no evidence to show that the appellants knew and had actual knowledge that said Title Company held only the naked legal title in trust for plaintiff, or that appellants knew that plaintiff's consent and approval was required before the Title Company could make any conveyance or agreement of sale, or that plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of the property, or execute or deliver said contract of sale, or that plaintiff had no prior knowledge of such contract, or that, immediately upon learning thereof, informed the Title Company that she did not approve.

Point 2 is based upon the denial of the appellants' motion for nonsuit.

Point 3 is based upon the fact that the evidence shows there was a previous action upon identical issues, wherein the same parties were adverse in interest, the Title Company suing in a representative capacity for Mrs. Pellissier.

Point 4 made by the appellants is to the effect that, by the terms of the trust agreement, Mrs. Pellissier is estopped from suing the defendants Summers and Henry.

Point 5: That plaintiff is bound by the acts of her agent.

Point 6 relates to the manner in which Mrs. Summers obtained possession of the contract.

The seventh ground for reversal set forth by the appellants is urged upon the theory that the plaintiff has no cause of action, and no standing in court.

Before considering the 7 assignments of why a reversal should be had, we will state that the admitted or uncontroverted facts set forth in the record are: Execution, delivery, and recordation of a deed, absolute in form, by which the plaintiff purported to convey to the Title Company the premises involved in this action, the same being included in the larger tract mentioned in the conveyance; that the trust agreement executed between said parties at the same time was not placed upon record, nor were its terms and conditions ever made known to the appellants; that for a period of some years James J. Donahue had been the real estate broker or sales agent negotiating and making sales of lots in Pellissier Square; that, while acting as such broker or sales agent, the appellant Summers interviewed him relative to the purchase of the two lots in controversy; that, following the negotiations between Summers and Donahue, Summers made an offer for the property of $27,500; that, in pursuance of this offer, Donahue executed a preliminary agreement for the sale of the lots and asked of, and received from, the appellants the sum of $500, which was to be applied as a part of the first payment to be specified in the contract of purchase; that the negotiations between Summers and Donahue resulted in an understanding between them as to the terms of payment to be set forth in the contract, and also as to other conditions to be inserted in the contract, not necessary here to mention; that, following these negotiations, a contract was drawn up in duplicate by the trust officer of the Title Company; that, after the contract was so executed in duplicate, it was delivered to Donahue, who took the same to the residence of Mrs. Summers, and there the duplicate copies of the contract were signed by the appellant Francis W. Henry, and then handed back to Mr. Donahue, who returned the contracts to the Title Company, and in a day or two thereafter

Mrs. Summers went to the office of the Title Company, having with her a cashier's check for the sum of $2,000; that Mr. Taggart, the trust officer of the company, produced the duplicate copies of the contract which had not then been signed or executed on the part of the company; that Mr. Taggart took the duplicate copies of the contract, went into the appropriate offices of the company, where the name of the Title Company was affixed by, and together with, the names of the vice president, A. F. Morlan, and the secretary, A. R. Kilgore, and the seal of the company affixed, following which Mr. Taggart returned to the presence of Mrs. Summers with the duplicate contract in his possession. The subsequent history of the contract is controverted.

The trust agreement, among other provisions, contained the following paragraphs, numbered third, fifth, and seventh, to which our attention has been specifically directed: "Third: When said map has been duly accepted and recorded as required by law, the party of the second part shall issue contracts of sale and convey lots in such subdivision to such person or persons, at such prices, and upon such terms as it shall be hereafter instructed by the said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns." "Fifth: The party of the second part shall impose such restrictions, covenants and conditions in all agreements and deeds executed by it as it shall be in writing requested to do by said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns." "Seventh: Any conveyance made by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company to the purchasers of lots shall vest in such purchasers an absolute and unassailable title, and there shall be no obligation on the part of the purchasers to see to the application of the purchase money, it being expressly understood by all parties hereto that any conveyance made by the party of the second part shall be binding upon all parties hereto, and should the party of the second part violate any of the provisions hereof, then the beneficiary shall have recourse only against said party of the second part."

While many reasons have been assigned by appellants for reversal, the determination of this cause really depends upon whether material findings are supported by the testimony. It may be here stated that finding 5, to the effect that the contract was never delivered, is not assailed as being contrary to the evidence, the argument of appellants being that, after the signature of the Title Company was properly attached, the delivery of the contract by the trust officer Taggart was immaterial.

Did the appellants know that the Title Company held only the legal title, and that the approval of Mrs. Pellissier was necessary to consummate the deal, or have knowledge of circumstances sufficient to put them upon inquiry? The deed and trust agreement herein referred to covering Pellissier Square were executed in the year 1913. The negotiations relative to lots 188 and 189 involved in this action practically all took place during the latter portion of January and the month of February, 1923. The record shows that in the year 1920, seven years after the execution of the deed of conveyance by the plaintiff to the Title Company, and three years preceding the negotiations involved in this action, Mrs. Summers had and carried on negotiations with Mr. Donahue, and, also, personally, with Mrs. Pellissier, relative to the purchase of a certain other lot included in Pellissier Square, fronting on that certain street known as Western avenue. It appears from the testimony that this lot was priced by Mrs. Pellissier at $3,700, and that Mrs. Summers offered to Mr. Donahue for said lot the sum of $3,500; that Mrs. Pellissier declined to accept Mrs. Summers' offer, and Mrs. Summers finally agreed to buy the lot at the figure named by Mrs. Pellissier. The testimony of Mr. Donahue is as follows: "At that time (1920) I had some lots south on Wilshire Boulevard on the east side of Western avenue, at $3,700.00. She (meaning Mrs. Summers) asked me if I could deliver one of them for $3,500.00. I told her no, I didn't think I could deliver it because of our price of $3,700.00. Mrs. Pellissier as a rule never cut her prices. She was very firm about prices she had given on properties. She (referring to Mrs. Summers) said, 'Isn't there any way for you to go to her, or for me to go to her?' I said, 'I don't see why it would be necessary, Mrs. Summers.' But after persuading me to go down, I had Mrs. Summers go in and meet Mrs. Pellissier at her residence at the corner of Serrano and Seventh street, Los Angeles, and she spoke to Mrs. Pellissier, and Mrs. Pellissier turned her down on the $3,500.00 offer." The testimony in the record shows that a contract for the sale of the lot just referred to facing on Western avenue was executed in favor of Mrs. Summers, but our attention has not been called to, and we have not discovered in the transcript, by whom the contract of sale was executed, unless it is covered by general testimony, set out in the record, that all contracts for the sale of lots in Pellissier Square were executed by the Title Company.

In relation to the negotiations covering the lots in controversy, the witness Donahue testified, in substance that, during the month of January, 1923, Mrs. Summers came to him and offered $22,500 for the two lots. The exact words of the witness' testimony in this particular are: "I refer now back to when she made the offer of $22,500.00, and I told her that Mrs. Pellissier would not take it, I was positive of that." The witness further stated that at that time he took the $25,000 offer from Mrs. Summers to Mrs. Pellissier, and it was refused; that the first offer was made on or about the 2d or 3d of January, 1923. In relation to the different offers, the witness Donahue further testified: "I told Mrs. Summers the $25,000.00 offer was refused by Mrs. Pellissier, and again she made another offer of $27,500.00, with the terms about the same that were in the former contract. When I speak of the former contract I mean the contract for $25,000.00. At this time I drew another contract, on the evening of February 3d, at her home—(meaning Mrs. Summers' home)—for $27,500.00. At that time Mrs. Summers said she wanted to have the deal completed as fast as possible. I told her I would. Within the next two or three days I went to the Title Company. I did not get hold of Mrs. Pellissier, and I ordered the Title Company to bring down a contract showing it in Francis Henry. I drew the contract for $27,500.00, and Mrs. Summers at the time put up $500.00 in currency. This was in the reception-hall at the home of Mrs. Pellissier. Mrs. Summers took the contracts, went out in the reception-hall and had the contract signed by Francis W. Henry." The testimony of the trust officer Taggart, tending to bring home to the knowledge of Mrs. Summers the interest of Mrs. Pellissier in the lots, is as follows: "When Mrs. Summers came in I passed the copy of the contract to her to read. She objected to certain things in the contract and asked for certain modifications or amendments. I said, 'I can't grant this. I will have to call Mrs. Pellissier up and see whether or not she will permit it.' I stepped to the telephone and called Mrs. Pellissier's phone, and Mrs. de Rulet answered the phone. I explained to her what Mrs. Summers wanted, and she said she couldn't answer the question for me that she would have to see her mother, so I came back from the phone and told Mrs. Summers that I couldn't give her an answer, and that if she would come in tomorrow, I would perhaps get in touch with Mrs. Pellissier, or words to that effect. I gave her a receipt, however, for her check for $2,000.00, before she left. I think, at the time she gave me the cashier's check, I gave her the receipt, because I wasn't ready yet to deliver the contract, and the receipt for the money would be sufficient until I delivered the contract." The testimony of Mrs. Summers, called as a witness for the plaintiff, and examined under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was to the effect that three years previous to the negotiations involved in this action she went with Mr. Donahue to the residence of Mrs. Pellissier to see her about a lot in Pellissier Square situate on Western avenue; that Mr. Donahue said: "We would have to go and see her about the piece of property." The testimony of Mrs. Summers, as to the negotiations had in 1923, covering the two lots, was substantially the same as that given by Mr. Donahue, save and except that, where the witness Donahue used the name "Mrs. Pellissier," Mrs.

Summers testified that Donahue used the name "owner." Appellants not having raised the question that the testimony was insufficient to support the finding of nondelivery of the contract, it is unnecessary to set forth any of the testimony further than to say there is sufficient testimony to show that the contract came into the possession of Mrs. Summers without any manual tradition from the Title Company. In other words, that, when the contract was handed to Mrs. Summers to look over or examine, she proceeded to take the contract away with her. As we read her testimony, this is not denied by Mrs. Summers, the contention of appellants being that delivery was nonessential.

[1] The record shows that at a date previous to the negotiations between Summers and Donahue, relative to lots 188 and 189, the plaintiff had substantially stated that she would sell the two lots for $27,500, but we find no testimony in the record that the plaintiff ever authorized the particular sale or execution of the particular contract now before the court. Whether the facts presented in the record were sufficient to justify the trial court in drawing the inference that such authorization had been given, rather than the finding that such authorization had not been given, was a matter exclusively for the trial court, as in all these matters there was considerable conflicting testimony, and nothing has been presented to us justifying the conclusion that the assailed findings have no support in the evidence.

The motion for nonsuit is so bound up with the other assignments of error as not to require separate consideration. The third assignment of error, and the reason why a reversal should be had, is based upon the fact that there was a previous action begun and prosecuted by the Title Company against the appellants, involving the validity of the contract now under consideration; that in such prior action the appellants had judgment against the Title Company.

[2, 3] While the record in the former action was introduced in testimony at the trial of this cause, a reference to the answer of the appellants shows that the pendency of said action was not pleaded in abatement of the present action, and that no effort was made to have the trial of this action continued until the final determination of the action between the Title Company and the appellants. The record in the case of the Title Company against the appellants showed that an appeal had been taken from the judgment of the trial court in that action, and that, under the provisions of section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was still pending and undetermined at the time of the trial of the present action, and did not constitute a bar. Until a judgment has become final, it cannot be pleaded as a bar to a subsequent action, but, if the party, in whose favor the prior judgment has been rendered, so elects, he may in a subsequent action plead a prior action in abatement, and lay the foundation for securing a continuance of the trial of the second action until the final determination of the first. Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 35 P. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314; Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 P. 589; Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 335, 26 P. 1097, 23 Am. St. Rep. 500; Estate of Ricks v. Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539; Howard v. Howard, 67 Cal. App. 56, 226 P. 984. By reason of the failure of the appellants to properly plead the judgment in the former action by way of abatement it is unnecessary for us to consider the cases cited to the effect that an action prosecuted by a trustee, in which the trustor does not join, is binding upon the trustor. The cases cited by the appellants state the law accurately as to the facts presented, but are not applicable here.

[4] We cannot agree with appellant's contention that delivery of the contract was not essential to its binding force and effect. The law applicable to delivery, and the necessity therefor, is very clearly stated in 9 California Jurisprudence, p. 149, § 48, and is peculiarly applicable here: "There is no better established legal principle than that the transfer of the ownership of real estate, so far as the transfer is to be made by deed, necessitates a delivery of that deed to effectuate the passing of title from the grantor to the grantee. Delivery is the force that vitalizes the instrument without which, though signed and acknowledged, it is invalid, and not effective for any purpose. If delivery is wanting, the deed is void ab initio, and it is no better than a blank form. Consequently it is recognized that prior to its actual delivery the grantor named in the instrument may change the character of the delivery originally contemplated, and has the right to destroy and nullify the instrument itself. And this operative characteristic of delivery is not peculiar to deeds, but attaches to all written contracts."

[5, 6] Whether the appellants had actual written notice is not necessary to support the finding of notice. If the circumstances are such as to put a prudent person upon inquiry, that is all that is required. See 25 Cal. Jur., page 637, § 283, where the rule is fully stated. It is argued, however, that under the terms of a trust agreement the only remedy on the part of the plaintiff is by an action against the Trust Company. This would be true if the other factors set forth in this opinion had not entered into this cause. The dealing of Mrs. Summers with Mrs. Pellissier in 1920, after the execution of the conveyance to the Title Company, unquestionably gave her knowledge of the beneficial interest and ownership of Mrs. Pellissier in the property involved. This, coupled with the fact that the finding, that the contract was never delivered, necessitates an affirmance of the judgment, and it is so ordered.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOY MFG. CO. v. JULIAN PETROLEUM CORPORATION. (L. A. 9968.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 18, 1929.

1. Sales ☞384(1)—Measure of damages for breach of contract to buy oil pumps held under contract to be $50 for each pump defendant refused to accept.

In action for breach of contract for purchase by defendant of oil pumps under which price was subject to revision at end of each six months' period, it being purpose of contract to allow net profit to plaintiff of $50 per pump, measure of damages held to be $50 per pump for each of undelivered pumps which defendant refused to accept.

2. Sales ☞49—In action for breach of contract, validity of severable provisions without bearing on recovery sought will not be determined (Civ. Code, § 1674; St. 1907, p. 984; 15 USCA § 1 et seq.).

In action for breach of contract for purchase by defendant of oil pumps, question whether contract was invalid under Civ. Code § 1674, St. 1907, p. 984, and 15 USCA § 1 et seq., will not be considered, where alleged invalid provisions had no bearing on recovery and, if invalid, were clearly severable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by the Joy Manufacturing Company against the Julian Petroleum Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, A. G. Ritter, McAdoo, Neblett & O'Connor, and Wm. H. Neblett, all of Los Angeles, and J. Hart Willis, of Dallas, Tex., for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and H. F. Prince, all of Los Angeles, and Stanley J. Smith, of Oakland, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This appeal is by the defendant from a judgment against it in the sum of $101,150 as damages for the breach of a contract for the purchase by the defendant of certain oil pumps, known as Joy pumps, from the plaintiff and respondent.

The contract involved provides that for the first 100 pumps to be delivered under the contract appellant should pay at the rate of $240 per pump, and for the second 100 pumps the appellant should pay at the rate of $220 per pump. The first 200 pumps were delivered and paid for and are not involved in this action. The contract provides that all pumps delivered in excess of the first 200 should be paid for at the rate of $210 per pump. It is further provided that the price set is "made subject to revision at the end of each six months' period in order that the price may at that time be adjusted to meet market conditions on deliveries following revision of price, it being the purpose of this contract to allow a net profit to the second party (plaintiff herein) of fifty dollars per pump."

The contract also contained a provision that, if the plaintiff did not make prompt deliveries, the defendant might manufacture, in plaintiff's plant, at its own expense, Joy pumps, in which event defendant should pay plaintiff a royalty of $50 per pump for every pump so manufactured. There is also a provision which recites that, if the plaintiff sells pumps on a wholesale basis for installation in Southern California, the price shall exceed the price "for the current period" to the defendant by at least $50.

One of the points made upon appeal has relation to the finding of the trial court "that as a result of the breach of the terms of said agreement by said defendant, said plaintiff * * * has been damaged in the sum of $50 a pump for all pumps provided for in said agreement to be delivered by plaintiff to defendant and to be paid for by said defendant, which were not delivered by plaintiff solely because of the refusal of said defendant to comply with the terms of said agreement and the breach of said agreement by said defendant." It is further found "that on account of said failure, plaintiff * * * has been damaged in the sum of $50 a pump for each of said 2,002 pumps, making a total of $100,100, in addition to the damage in the sum of $1,050 which plaintiff has suffered because of the refusal of defendant to make the payment provided for in the modification agreement for the month of March, 1925."

[1] The appellant admits that 2,002 pumps were undelivered because of its refusal to accept the same, and the only question with reference to damages is whether the plaintiff should recover at the rate of $50 per pump for each of these pumps. No evidence was offered upon the question of cost of production, profits, etc., and, unless the contract is susceptible of the construction that a price adjustment was to be made at stated periods which could and would guarantee a profit of $50 a pump to plaintiff, the findings with reference to damages are not sustained by the record.

As stated by appellant, "the trial judge broadly interpreted the contract in question as in and of itself fixing a minimum measure of damages for its breach at $50 per pump bought of the respondent corporation, not, from his viewpoint, as liquidated damages, but as a fixed profit to be realized according to the expressed 'purpose of this contract' under the prices fixed in the contract, or under the prices to be mutually fixed by each six months' revision of prices provided for in paragraph 5."

The construction placed upon the contract by the trial judge seems not only a permissible one to us, but it seems the only construction which could be placed, fairly, upon its terms, and this conclusion disposes of several of the arguments made upon appeal.

[2] It is contended, under many subheadings assigning reasons for the contention, that the contract sued upon is invalid upon its face. It is contended that certain provisions of the contract are invalid because violative of section 1674, Civil Code, and that certain provisions thereof violate the so-called Cartwright Act (St. 1907, p. 984) and the federal anti-trust acts (15 USCA § 1 et seq.). It is unnecessary for us to decide these points because the asserted invalid provisions have no bearing upon the recovery sought here, and no necessary connection with the provisions of the contract relied upon in this action, which is for breach of the condition to receive and pay for certain specified pumps. If the provisions relied upon by defendant and appellant be invalid, they are clearly severable from the remainder of the contract.

In the case of Ragsdale v. Nagle, 106 Cal. 332, 39 P. 628, 630, it was claimed that a contract was invalid, as violative of sections 1673, 1674, and 1675 of the Civil Code. The court said: "It is claimed that the contract is void because it goes beyond the scope of the law in certain particulars. For present purposes only, let us concede that the contract is broader in certain respects than the law; still, it is entirely valid in all those particulars in which it comes within the provisions of the law. Brown v. Kling, 101 Cal. 295, 35 P. 995; City Carpet, etc., Works v. Jones, 102 Cal. 506, 36 P. 841."

This rule of law applied to the contract in question upon this appeal disposes of the second group of objections made by appellant, and it is unnecessary to discuss them.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CONTINENTAL SECURITIES & INVESTMENT CO. v. RAWSON et al.

1. Corporations ☞1—Corporate entity of corporation owned entirely by two brothers could not be disregarded, to fraudulently deprive nonresident brother of profits of corporate transactions.

Evidence that two brothers acquired entire stock of corporation domesticated in California for purpose of transacting business there, and brother becoming manager of corporation alone remained in state and transacted business in name of corporation, and thereafter falsely represented to brother outside state that corporation was failing, and sought to extinguish nonresident brother's right by changing contracts in name of corporation and substituting own name in place of corporate name, showed that transactions were those of corporation, and did not justify court in setting aside corporate entity to deprive nonresident brother of profits of transactions, since disregard of corporate entity would work fraud on nonresident brother.

2. Corporations ☞1—Disregard of corporate entity requires proof that owners control corporation and that adherence to corporate fiction would work fraud.

Whether corporation is one-man corporation or two-man corporation, it is necessary to show that absolute control of corporation was in hands of owners, and that adherence to fiction of separate existence of corporation would sanction fraud, to authorize court to disregard corporate entity.

3. Corporations ☞430—Trustees innocently participating in carrying out purpose of common-law trust held not immune from accountability to corporation for transactions between corporation and trust.

Trustees of common-law trust innocently participating in carrying out purposes of legitimate common-law trust are not immune from accountability to corporation for transactions conducted in name of corporation with trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by the Continental Securities & Investment Company against W. D. Rawson and others, in which defendants Rawson filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Halverson & Price and George Halverson, all of Los Angeles, and O. P. Soule, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for appellants.

Fred Mansur, of Los Angeles, Thos. Marieux, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and Dryer, Castle, McConlogue & Richards, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an action wherein it is sought to compel the defendants to make an accounting of certain transactions alleged to have taken place on behalf of the plaintiff corporation. The defendants W. D. and Lydia K. Rawson filed a cross-complaint, to quiet their title to the real properties involved in the transaction. Findings and judgment went for the defendants, and their title as cross-complainants was quieted. The plaintiff appeals, under the so-called alternative method.

John F. Rawson and the defendant W. D. Rawson are brothers. While both were residing in Utah, and in 1916, they, with others, organized the plaintiff, the Continental Securities & Investment Company, under which the two brothers, as principal owners of the stock of the corporation, conducted a general real estate and stock and bond brokerage business. When the Securities Commission Act, or so-called "Blue Sky" Law, of Utah went into effect in 1919 (Laws 1919, c. 111), the plaintiff corporation ceased to do a brokerage business in that state, although it continued to maintain an office in Salt Lake City. In June, 1918, the brothers acquired all of the stock of the corporation and thereafter continued to own the same in equal proportions. After the Utah Securities Commission Act went into effect, the defendant W. D. Rawson remained for a time in Utah, selling stock of the Utah-California Oil Products Company. Later in 1919 he came to California in connection with the business of the latter company, and has remained here in business in and around Los Angeles. In 1920 he organized the United States Oil Company. Thereafter, and until June, 1922, he engaged in promoting the interests of both oil companies and in conducting a brokerage business for himself.

In June, 1922, John F. Rawson made a trip to Los Angeles at the suggestion of his brother. Prior to that time W. D. Rawson had negotiated for the subdivision of 40 acres of land in Orange county belonging to Henry and Cordelia Winters, with the view of selling the same in small lots, with certain reservations as to oil production. In July, 1922, the first contract was entered into between the plaintiff corporation and Henry Winters and wife for the sale of the Winters tract in lots of 25x25 feet in dimension, with 2 acres reserved for "club" and oil-drilling purposes. On July 18, 1922, an application was made by the plaintiff to the real estate commissioner for a real estate broker's license. On July 21, 1922, the plaintiff, as a foreign corporation, filed its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, complied with all of the laws of the state of California, and thus became entitled to do business in this state. A bank account was opened in the name of the plaintiff corporation, consisting of $1,688.11, joint funds of the brothers, and $805 furnished by W. D. Rawson. With these funds the land was surveyed, corporate stationery, including letterheads in the usual form, were purchased, a lecture hall 30x70 feet long was constructed at an expense of some $1,500, and a lot-selling campaign was started. The venture at first met with scant success, for only 14 or 15 lots were sold. Liabilities in excess of receipts were incurred. Also, the plaintiff was notified that, owing to the form of the contract with the purchasers of lots, the Corporate Securities Act of this state (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended) was being encroached upon, and that it would be necessary for the plaintiff corporation to secure a permit from the commissioner of corporations, if it desired to carry on its lot selling campaign under the plan then in force.

After consulting at some length with reference to the prospects, John F. Rawson announced to his brother that "he didn't think he wanted to stay" in California any longer; that it "didn't look like" they would be able to succeed in selling the subdivided tract, and that he "felt that he would go home; and, as his son was now getting married, that he would go home and go in business with him." W. D. Rawson testified: "And I told him, if he left me now, with all these difficulties on my hands, and this matter to straighten out, that it created a great hardship upon me, and I tried to persuade him to remain here and help me, and would eventually get a contract worked out, so that this thing could be sold.

* * * His response to that was that he felt he owed a duty to his son, and that he preferred to go home and go in business with himself, and that I could work out something here for myself." The "difficulties" which W. D. Rawson had in mind were that their funds were exhausted, debts had been incurred, and it appeared that it would be necessary to refund the money paid by the purchasers to whom the 14 or 15 lots had been sold. Under these circumstances John F. Rawson returned to Salt Lake City about August 17, and engaged in business with his son under the name of the plaintiff corporation.

W. D. Rawson then entered upon negotiations to obtain a new contract with the Winterses which he concluded under date of August 22, 1922. This contract was in writing. The Winterses were named as the parties of the first part, and Continental Securities & Investment Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Utah, as party of the second part. The corporate name was signed to the document by W. D. Rawson, president, and J. F. Rawson as secretary. Under date of August 23, 1922, W. D. Rawson mailed to his brother at Salt Lake City a copy of the new contract, and in the letter accompanying the same told his brother that he had signed the brother's name as secretary, explained the terms of the new contract, and his plans for a new lot selling campaign in considerable detail and stated: "Can tell you more after a few days' run. I am having a hell of a time with bills and no money to pay them, because must have some to start up with. Anything you can send will help much in getting started up."

Under the contract of August 22, 1922, the plaintiff corporation was constituted the exclusive fiscal agent of the Winterses in the sale of the lots. W. D. Rawson immediately entered upon a renewed lot-selling campaign, printed maps, literature, cards, and stationery, all in the name of the plaintiff corporation, employing numerous salesmen, and carrying on all of the business in the name of the plaintiff corporation. A trust agreement to handle the proceeds from the sale of the lots and the conveyance of title was entered into with a local bank, with the plaintiff corporation as a party thereto. The sale of lots developed slowly through September and much of October, but in the latter part of October, 1922, sales were frequent and the returns were large. By July, 1923, the larger part of the Winters tract was sold, and the Winterses were paid the balance of the purchase price to them, the total being $70,000.

About May, 1923, W. D. Rawson made arrangements for the purchase of the Edenwild tract from Fred W. Griffith for the sum of $30,000, on terms of $5,000 cash and the balance in notes secured by a trust deed on the property. When asked to whom the Griffith deed should run as grantee, W. D. Rawson replied, "To the Continental Securities & Investment Company." When requested for a resolution of the board of directors authorizing the execution of the trust deed back to Griffith, W. D. Rawson stated that it would be unnecessary to go to that trouble, but to make the deed run to W. D. Rawson, which was done under date of June 4, 1923. W. D. Rawson then paid the initial payment of $5,000 by check made in the name and from the funds on deposit in the name of the plaintiff corporation. From sales in the Winters tract and in the Edenwild tract the deposits in the bank to the credit of the plaintiff corporation totaled $232,368.45. In January, 1924, W. D. Rawson organized the Continental Finance Corporation under the laws of this state, continued thereafter to transact the same business as theretofore conducted under the name of the plaintiff corporation, and the deposits to the credit of the Continental Finance Corporation from January 18, 1924, to October 15, 1925, totaled $79,959.52. The trial of the action was commenced on November 10, 1925.

After the efforts of W. D. Rawson, all in the name of the plaintiff corporation, were plainly meeting with success, and, according to his testimony, some time between January and June, 1923, he went to the Winterses, reported to them that John F. Rawson had gone back to Utah and was no longer interested in the Winters tract enterprise, and requested them to change the fiscal agency contract of August 22, 1922, so as to name W. D. Rawson individually as the agent. The Winterses complied with the request, signed a new contract embodying the same terms as the contract of August 22d, but substituting the name of W. D. Rawson for the name of the plaintiff corporation wherever the latter appeared in the old contract. Thereupon, in the presence of the Winterses, W. D. Rawson "tore up" the contract of August 22, 1922, made in the name of the corporation. On September 6, 1922, W. D. Rawson wrote to his brother, stating that he was about ready to start; that "the new plan appeals, but can't say how it will sell, and if it don't I am down and out, for I have spent my last dollar. * * * Will know to-morrow how business is going. Will drop you a line when I come in; all is rush now."

On September 7th John F. Rawson wrote to his brother from Salt Lake City, stating that he had "broken up" the office there and was negotiating for the sale of the office furniture; that he had been unsuccessful in selling his home on satisfactory terms, and concluded: "Realizing your position as I left you—the perils and hazards of the situation—I have watched every mail with the hope you would keep your promise and advise me on the conditions. I can only imagine one interpretation for your long silence, and that is continued adversities. Your silence interpreted by me thus has caused me to play more cautiously, to halt, to hesitate, to be indecisive. If the business has gone bad with you there, which I am inclined to infer, and we can establish a business here that is substantial, lucrative, and on a broad enough basis, I am sure we shall be glad to invite you to join us. * * * I have negotiations under way for the office furniture, negotiations for the sale of my home, and while negotiations along either line are not satisfactory to me, they may become so, and I may advise you I am loose here and starting for there; but I cannot hardly believe I shall be successful for a little time yet."

Under date of September 11, 1922, W. D. Rawson, still using the stationery of the Continental Securities & Investment Company, fiscal agents, W. D. Rawson, managing director; J. F. Rawson, secretary-treasurer, wrote to his brother as follows: "We have made two runs to Winters so far, but without any sales. We start to-morrow to make steady runs. I now have about 45 salesmen and solicitors working, and we expect 150 people out to-morrow, but can't tell with what results. * * * I haven't any money, in fact had $7 overdraft, not knowing you had drawn, so I am holding on and hoping; if money comes soon we survive, otherwise bust, with bills galore. I believe, however, it will go this time, though the profit will not be large, but it will be a start along a new line of business."

On October 21, 1922, W. D. Rawson wrote to his brother as follows: "There has not been anything developed of material interest in the [Winters] subdivision, and I am arranging to take in a bunch of fellows, who ought to be able to get an organization, so that the property can be handled. Of course,

I will have to make concessions to suit them, owing to circumstances which you are well acquainted with. I had great hopes in Brown, but have waited as long as it is possible to wait. Therefore, any plans that we previously had will have to be forsaken, so I hope that you and Brown will be able to succeed in the Bear Lake and Mineral Point undertakings. We went down to the property yesterday, but did not have any one there to make any sales to."

Again on January 18, 1923, W. D. Rawson wrote to his brother as follows: "I am working with a group of fellows here. We are handling all kinds of real estate, exchanges, and business chances, and in fact most everything that we can get to handle that is marketable here. Do not know just how successful we will be yet, as it is something new, and has not been fully tried out. * * * I am still working to clear up the outstanding obligations of the Continental incurred in the early subdivision undertaking, but just how long it will take I cannot tell."

Under date of February 22, 1923, John F. Rawson wrote to W. D. as follows: "Attached to this letter is a clipping of an ad of some fellow who says he has some money to invest. I am making an effort to get in touch with this fellow, with a view of interesting him in the Winters contract. I hope that the Winters line-up is in shape, so we can take this fellow on, if I catch him. I wish you would tell me frankly and by return mail what the chances are for me to make a living and some money, if I came to Los Angeles and help in the business there. Can we put the Winters over? I have got to move here now. I must either join you in Los Angeles, or I must enter into business alliances here which will make it impossible to join you. * * * I want your reply as to the business outlook by return mail."

Finally on February 28, 1923, W. D. Rawson wrote to his brother as follows: "Yours of the 22d inst. received and carefully noted. Also the clipping of the ad attached, but we cannot do anything in the way of taking the party in on handling Winters' property. The Corporation Commission rule that the club memberships, as arranged when you were here, are a security and have tied the matter up for considerable time. In fact, every move that has been made they have undertaken to kill the proposition. Real estate in not moving in Los Angeles. We have worked for two months on local business and haven't made a single sale. We are now looking at some mining property with the view of taking hold of it, but do not know yet what the results will be. Business is quiet, so I cannot offer any encouragement in anything. Brown was here about a month ago, and I showed him things as they were at that time, and there isn't any improvement, so he decided to continue with his soap people. We have been expecting for weeks that something might pick up in the way of business, but it seems to get worse, and every move that is made the commission put their stamp of disapproval on, so that it is almost impossible to do anything except work for wages for somebody else."

In July, 1923, John F. received information that there had been much activity and success with sale of lots in the Winters tract since October of the previous year, and contrary to his brother's "discouraging" letters from October 21st on. He went to Los Angeles, became acquainted with the true situation, and demanded an accounting from his brother. After many conferences between the two, and failing to arrive at a solution of their difficulties, they came to a final break in October, 1923. On January 5, 1924, a meeting of the stockholders of the plaintiff corporation was held in Salt Lake City, directors were elected and the board was organized with Roscoe, son of John F. Rawson, as president, Kate Rawson, vice president, and John F. Rawson, secretary-treasurer. On January 8th, by authority of the board of directors, John F. Rawson, on behalf of the plaintiff corporation, made a demand on W. D. Rawson for an accounting of all of the latter's transactions with relation to the business of the plaintiff corporation in the state of California. Following a refusal to comply with the demand this action was brought on March 14, 1924.

From the standpoint of the plaintiff the case was tried and is now presented on the theory that on the facts the brothers were the equal owners of the stock of the plaintiff corporation, with W. D. Rawson as the managing director and John F. as the secretary-treasurer; that all of the transactions, from the inception of the Winters tract enterprise down to the demand of the plaintiff corporation for an accounting, were corporate transactions, in which each brother would be entitled to the proceeds in proportion to his stock ownership. On the part of the defendants, the cause was tried and is now presented on the theory that the relationship between the two brothers was that of copartners; that upon the departure of John F. Rawson for Salt Lake City on August 17, 1922, he abandoned the partnership enterprise and effected a dissolution of the partnership by his failure to perform his duties under the alleged agreement of partnership as provided in subdivision 2 of section 2452 of the Civil Code as it existed prior to August 14, 1929; that during all of said transactions the plaintiff corporation was but the alter ego of the two brothers; that the corporation was a two-man corporation, whose corporate existence should be disregarded in adjusting the rights of parties; that the success in handling the two tracts of land was due entirely to the efforts and activities of W. D. Rawson, and that it would be inequitable to permit John F. Rawson to share in the proceeds.

The court found in favor of the defendants on their theory of the case and entered judgment dismissing the action. The main contention of the plaintiff on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings so made.

[1] The foregoing statement of facts is supported by the record without substantial conflict. From what has been related, and from further examination of the record, it is established without question, and without any substantial showing to the contrary, that the plaintiff corporation was at all times involved in the controversy a legal entity, entitled to transact business in the states of Utah and California; that from the inception of the Winters tract enterprise all of the activities of W. D. Rawson were carried on in the name of the plaintiff corporation, down to the time of his organization of the Continental Finance Corporation in January, 1924; and that there was no thought or purpose on the part of W. D. Rawson to dispute or deny the rights of his brother as a stockholder in the corporation until the Winters enterprise was plainly approaching success. He then entered upon a willful and deliberate scheme of misrepresenting to his absent brother the conditions as they truly existed. In the execution of his purpose he sought to extinguish his brother's rights, by tearing up the contract of August 22, 1922, made in the name of the corporation, and prevailing upon the Winters to sign a new contract of the same date, substituting his own name in the place of the corporate name. If the relationship of the brother was that of a copartner, and the copartnership was dissolved on August 17, 1922, when John F. Rawson returned to Salt Lake City, as contended by the defendants, what was the purpose of W. D. Rawson in misrepresenting to his brother the true situation with reference to sales in the Winters tract as disclosed by his letters written to his brother from October 21st on, when in fact the success of the enterprise appeared beyond question, and in attempting to wipe out his brother's interest by destroying the contract made in the name of the corporation, in which the absent brother had a half interest?

The only rational conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that all of the transactions here involved were transactions of the plaintiff corporation, as such, and were so considered by W. D. Rawson, until he conceived the plan to deceive his brother as to the corporation's success. The plaintiff corporation was domesticated in this state for the purpose of transacting business here. All letterheads, literature, contracts, and bank accounts were in the name of the corporation. Accounts were kept and W. D. Rawson made income tax returns in the name of the corporation. Real estate brokers' licenses were obtained in the name of the corporation. It is not seriously contended by the defendants that the misrepresentations were not made by W. D. Rawson to his brother. It is argued, however, that because the court found the plaintiff corporation to be a two-man corporation, and that the interests of the brothers were equal, the court should cast aside the corporate veil and award the proceeds of the transactions to the defendants, because, in truth, the success ultimately attained was due to the efforts of W. D. Rawson after the departure of his brother from the state.

The documentary evidence discloses without substantial conflict that the absent brother was ready and anxious to return to California, if conditions would seem to render it probable that he could further the enterprise by his assistance. If the other original stockholders in Utah, who sold their holdings to the brothers, had retained their stock interests there could be no reasonable basis for the claim that they, although absent from this state, would not be entitled to share in the profits of the corporation's activities, notwithstanding said profits might accrue only because of the energy, foresight, and ability of the corporation's managing director. The fact that the brothers became the sole owners of the stock did not destroy the interests of either, and a court would not be justified in wiping out the interest of either in favor of the other, unless it be made to appear that in the interest of justice, or to prevent fraud, the corporate entity should be disregarded. In Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, at page 487, 202 P. 673, 676, it was said: "Before the acts and obligations of a corporation can be legally recognized as those of a particular person, and vice versa, the following combination of circumstances must be made to appear: First, that the corporation is not only influenced and governed by that person, but that there is such a unity of interest and ownership that the individuality, or separateness, of the said person and corporation has ceased; second, that the facts are such that an adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would, under the particular circumstances, sanction a fraud or promote injustice. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. page 7, 200 P. 641; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 155 P. 986." See, also, Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723.

[2] When the corporation is organized or perpetuated for the particular purpose of carrying out the plans of partners or associates in business, the same rule has been held to apply. Wise Realty Co. v. Stewart, 169 Cal. 176, 146 P. 534; Shorb v. Beaudry, 56 Cal. 446; 6 Cal. Jur. p. 595. Whether the corporation be deemed a "one-man" corporation or, as here claimed, a "two-man" corporation, the rule would be the same and the two essential elements must be present. The first element, viz. the absolute control of the corporation at the times in question was in the hands of the brothers, was present. But the second element, viz. a state of facts upon which the adherence to the fiction of the separate existence of the corporation would sanction a fraud, is lacking. On the contrary, there is present herein such a state of facts that, if the corporate existence is to be disregarded, the result will be to sanction the fraud of one brother against the other, and permit the one to become enriched by his own dishonesty and deceit; whereas, if the separate corporate existence be adhered to, such a result will be prevented. If the brother in Utah had been truthfully informed of the approaching success of the Winters tract enterprise, the conclusion is inevitable from the record that he would have joined his brother in Los Angeles and assisted in promoting the project, in which event their original understanding would have been carried out, whether they operated under the name of a corporation, or under an authorized fictitious name, or in their individual names. It is by reason of the wrongdoing of W. D. Rawson that the defendants are now endeavoring to erect a barrier to the accounting and in doing so are seeking the aid of a court of equity in accomplishing the purpose. Equity will not so lend its aid, and the chancellor should lend a deaf ear to the plea.

Therefore, since the defendants must be held to the corporate form of the transactions conducted by W. D. Rawson, it would seem to be quite immaterial whether John F. Rawson was in Utah during the time that the business was being conducted by the corporation. Wherever he might be, his stock ownership was sufficient evidence of his interest in the corporate transactions. No contention is advanced that the corporation may not in a proper case call to account one of its officers on behalf of its stockholders.

[3] There is and can be no criticism of the conduct of the individual defendants other than W. D. Rawson. The defendants, trustees of the Winters Club, were innocent participants in carrying out the purposes of an obviously legitimate common-law trust; but their right, so far as the accounting is concerned, are in law no more immune from accountability than the defendant W. D. Rawson himself.

The judgment is reversed.

TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST CO. v. HENRY et al. (L. A. 8465.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 23, 1929.

1. Quieting title $\S$ 47(2)—In action to quiet title, finding that plaintiff was owner of property could not stand where plaintiff was only trustee.

In action to quiet title, where court had stated during trial that plaintiff was merely holder of legal title and that full equitable title was in third party, finding that plaintiff was owner of property could not stand.

2. Specific performance $\S$ 120—In purchaser's suit for specific performance of contract for sale of realty, declaration of trust held admissible to show that beneficiary was indispensable party.

In purchaser's suit for specific performance of contract for sale of realty against trustee, declaration of trust held admissible to show that beneficiary was indispensable party.

3. Trusts $\S$ 189—Conveyance in violation of terms of trust would not have been act of trustee in exercise of its powers.

Conveyance in violation of terms of trust would not have been act of trustee in exercise of its powers, but would have been act in defiance of restrictions upon trustee.

4. Trusts $\S$ 371(8)—Purchaser must allege and prove purchase for value and without notice to obtain protection of statute providing that grant to trustee not disclosing trust must be deemed absolute as to bona fide purchasers (Civ. Code, $\S$ 869).

To entitle purchaser to protection of Civ. Code, $\S$ 869, which provides that grant to trustee which does not disclose trust must be deemed absolute as to purchasers for value and without notice, purchaser must allege and prove that he was innocent purchaser for value.

5. Specific performance $\S$ 120—In purchaser's suit for specific performance, declaration of trust held admissible, since it might have shown that vendor being trustee had no power to convey.

In purchaser's suit for specific performance, declaration of trust making vendor trustee held admissible, as it might have shown that vendor had no real interest in property and had no power to convey.

6. Specific performance $\S$ 120—In purchaser's suit for specific performance against trustee, declaration of trust held admissible as material to question of delivery of contract of sale to purchaser.

In purchaser's suit for specific performance against trustee, instrument creating vendor trustee of property conveyed held admissible as material to question as to whether contract for sale of realty had been delivered to purchaser; there being some evidence that third party was real owner and in charge of disposition of such property.

7. Specific performance $\S$ 106(4)—In purchaser's suit for specific performance beneficiary was necessary party, although trustee alleged itself to be owner in action against purchaser to quiet title.

Where trustee as vendor brought action to cancel contract of sale of realty in which action purchaser filed cross-complaint for specific performance of such contract, fact that trustee in original complaint alleged itself to be owner did not excuse purchaser from duty of making beneficiary party, since in original action trustee was acting in consonance with its powers under declaration of trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Suit by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company against Francis W. Henry and another, in which the named defendant filed cross-complaint against the named plaintiff. From a judgment for the defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 274 P. 572.

E. W. Sargent, E. J. Vaughn, G. B. Corby, Tanner, Odell & Taft, O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, and Homer I. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, and T. E. Davis, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. The judgment is reversed. Enough of the facts and the principles applicable thereto to show the propriety of this conclusion will now be set forth.

Plaintiff sued defendants to cancel a certain outstanding instrument, purporting to be a contract of sale and purchase, made by it with defendant Henry under date of February 1, 1923, affecting the title to certain lots in Los Angeles known as Nos. 188 and 189 of tract 2189 or Pellissier Square, as per the official map thereof. The complaint was in two counts, the first in the ordinary form of an action to quiet title, and the second attacking specifically said written instrument alleging that it was never executed and delivered; the material allegations upon which the prayer for cancellation was based being as follows: "That on or about February 5, 1923, the defendant Emma Summers was proposing to purchase the above described real estate and to place the same in the name of Francis W. Henry, above mentioned as a defendant, for the sum of $27,500.00, on terms and conditions to be contained in a written contract and to be approved by one Marie Julie Pellissier. That plaintiff caused to be prepared contracts for the sale of said real estate in duplicate, a copy of which is hereto annexed marked Exhibit 'A,' and had signed the same, but said contracts were not complete or ready for delivery and had not been approved by said Marie Julie Pellissier. That on or about said date the defendant Emma Summers had deposited with plaintiff checks in the sum of

$2,500.00, which said checks would be accepted and applied on account of said contract as soon as said contract should be ready for delivery. * * * That said defendant Emma Summers surreptitiously and without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff or its said employee took one of said duplicate copies of said alleged contract and departed from the office, and is now claiming that said contract was delivered to her."

Defendants answered, putting in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, including specifically a denial of ownership of the property by plaintiff. Defendant Henry at the same time interposed a cross-complaint wherein he set up said contract and alleged performance on his part and his further readiness, willingness, and ability to perform each and every term thereof, repudiation and refusal to carry out the terms thereof by plaintiff, adequacy of the purchase price; that said contract was in all respects just and reasonable, and that plaintiff's assent thereto was not obtained by misrepresentation, concealment, circumvention, or unfair practices of any kind, and that defendant Henry had fully and fairly performed all conditions precedent on his part to the obligations of plaintiff, wherefore he prayed that he have specific performance of said contract decreed, and a conveyance of said property directed to him upon compliance with the terms and conditions mentioned therein. But there was no allegation in said cross-complaint that plaintiff owned any estate, right, title, or interest in or to said property, nor indeed that plaintiff as a grantor was in possession thereof.

To this cross-complaint plaintiff answered denying execution of said written instrument, denying that defendant Henry paid it the sum of $2,500, but admitting that checks were left with it in that sum, which checks were not accepted or cashed, and specifically pleading, in accordance with the second count of its complaint, that said instrument was never delivered at any time to defendant Henry or his codefendant, but was surreptitiously and unlawfully taken from its possession without its consent.

The court made findings and gave judgment denying relief to plaintiff and decreed to defendant Henry the relief prayed for by him, including specific adjudication of the due execution and delivery of said written instrument, performance thereof so far as required on the part of said Henry, payment by him of said sum of $2,500, and his willingness and ability to complete the contract in accordance with its terms and repudiation thereof by plaintiff. The court also found that plaintiff owned the property in fee simple; that it was not necessary that said contract of purchase be approved by said Marie Pellissier; and that in truth and fact the document was delivered to said defendant Henry.

Many claims are put forth by appellant as grounds for reversal of this action, chief among which are that under the evidence offered, including the documentary evidence rejected, it became the duty of defendant Henry, as a cross-complainant, and of the court, inasmuch as he failed to do so, to make Marie Julie Pellissier a party to this action before entering a decree of specific performance; that in this connection the court erred particularly in refusing to admit in evidence the terms of the trust under which the legal title to the property in question was held by plaintiff, the contention being that said trust instrument on its face showed that plaintiff held only the naked legal title to said property, whereas the equitable and real title was in the said Marie Julie Pellissier. These two contentions only need receive our attention.

At the opening of the trial of said cause, plaintiff offered in evidence said instrument referred to, being a declaration of trust made on the 25th day of February, 1913, setting forth the terms upon which said property was conveyed to and held by it, said Marie Julie Pellissier being the beneficiary thereunder. Said instrument, among other provisions, contained the following: " * * * Party of the second part (plaintiff) shall issue Contracts of Sale and convey lots * * * to such person or persons, at such prices, and upon such terms as it shall be hereinafter instructed by the said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns." Further: "The party of the second part shall impose such restrictions, covenants and conditions in all Agreements and deeds executed by it as it shall be in writing requested to do by said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns."

It was stipulated in open court by both parties that said Marie Julie Pellissier did not consent to the execution or delivery of the contract of purchase in question. It was further announced by the court several times during the trial that plaintiff was merely the holder of the legal title and that the full equitable title was in the said Pellissier. It was also testified to by several witnesses that no sales of any kind were made without first securing the consent of said equitable owner.

[1] Under this situation it is manifest that the finding by the court that plaintiff was the owner in fee simple of the property in suit cannot stand. It should also be noted that the cross-complaint contained no allegation of ownership or estate or possession in the plaintiff. On the contrary, the answer to the cross-complaint denied that plaintiff was the owner thereof. It is true that at the trial permission was granted to said defendant to withdraw that portion of his answer in this respect, but the defect in the cross-complaint was never supplied by any allegation or proof that plaintiff held any estate whatsoever in or possession of said lands.

[2, 3] Under the terms of the declaration of trust as it appears in the record, it would have been a breach of duty on the part of the trustee and a direct violation of the terms thereof for it to have executed the contract in question without consent of the real owner, Marie Pellissier. Had the declaration of trust been admitted in evidence it would have clearly followed that Marie Pellissier was an indispensable party to the determination of the issues in said action. A conveyance in violation of the terms of the trust would not have been an act by the trustee in the exercise of its powers but would have been an act in defiance of the restrictions upon it. The principle announced in the case of Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275, is here applicable because the situation here is but the converse of the situation there. See, also, the recent case of Lake v. Dowd (Cal. Sup.) 277 P. 1047.

Defendant Henry is doubtless desirous of coming within the operation of that portion of said declaration of trust which reads as follows: "Any conveyance made by the Title Guarantee and Trust Company to the purchasers of Lots shall vest in such purchasers an absolute and unassailable title, and there shall be no obligation on the part of the purchasers to see to the application of the purchase money, it being expressly understood by all parties hereto that any conveyance made by the party of the second part shall be binding upon all parties hereto, and should the party of the second part violate any of the provisions hereof, then the Beneficiary shall have recourse only against said party of the second part."

The waiver of certain rights for a violation of the trust does argue that the trustee is acting within the line of his authority. If plaintiff is forced to convey, the said Marie Julie Pellissier will be forced to accept such action and will be relegated to a cause of action against the trustee personally. This is an added and convincing reason why she is a necessary party to this action. It has been well said in O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 16 P. 236, 239: "If the necessary parties to a full determination are not before the court it is the duty of the court on its own motion to order them brought in; and this, although the defendants in the action have omitted to raise an objection of defect of parties by demurrer or answer. The failure of the court so to do is fatal to the judgment." See Mitau v. Roddan, supra, and Lake v. Dowd, supra.

[4] Defendant invokes section 869 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "Where an express trust is created in relation to real property, but is not contained or declared in the grant to the trustee, or in an instrument signed by him, and recorded in the same office with the grant to the trustee, such grant must be deemed absolute in favor of purchasers from such trustee without notice, and for a valuable consideration." The contract here in question is an executory contract, and the cross-complainant could not under the evidence be interested as a purchaser without notice for a valuable consideration beyond the initial payment made by him at the inception of the transaction. Davis v. Ward, 109 Cal. 186, 41 P. 1010, 50 Am. St. Rep. 29; Henry v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 135, 140, 124 P. 837, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 39. This observation brings to the foreground the absence of any allegation or proof that cross-complainant was an innocent purchaser for value. The rule is stated in Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 45, 73 P. 803, 806, as follows: "To entitle a party to protection as such a purchaser, he must aver and prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the premises, the payment of the purchase money in good faith and without notice, actual or constructive, prior to and down to the time of its payment; for, if he had notice, actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser. Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 167, 3 P. 641; Davis v. Ward, 109 Cal. 190, 41 P. 1010, 50 Am. St. Rep. 29; County Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Fox, 119 Cal. 64, 51 P. 11."

[5] Said declaration of trust was admissible in evidence upon another theory. A seller cannot be required to specifically perform in a case where he is entirely without power so to do, as, for example, where he has no estate of any kind or character in the property the subject of the action. Here had said document been introduced in evidence in connection with other testimony, it might easily have been determined that plaintiff was without any real interest in said property and the decree of specific performance would only have had the effect of clouding the title of said Marie Pellissier. Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 364, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522; Bell v. Bank of California, 153 Cal. 234, 239, 94 P. 889; Farnum v. Clarke, 148 Cal. 610, 618, 84 P. 166.

[6] It is also true that the reception by the court of this declaration of trust in evidence might have had a bearing upon the finding as to whether or not delivery was actually made to cross-complainant of said contract, there being sufficient evidence in the record for at least an investigation of the question as to whether or not the cross-complainant knew at all times that Marie Pellissier was the real owner and in charge of the disposition of said property and that a sale could not be made without her consent.

[7] There is no merit in the contention that because plaintiff in its original complaint alleged itself to be the owner of this property, cross-complainant would not be required to make Mrs. Pellissier a party to the action. The answer to that claim is pointed out in the cases of Mitau v. Roddan, supra, and Lake v. Dowd, supra, because by such action plaintiff was not acting in violation of its trust but in consonance with its powers thereunder. See, also, Solomon v. Redona, 52 Cal. App. 300, 193 P. 643.

It should be noted that we are not measuring here the rights defendants might have against the trustee as an individual, but we are declaring that under the showing made specific performance should not be decreed without the presence of Marie Pellissier as a party to the action.

We think the subject need not be pursued further.

CAMM & HEDGES CO. v. BANK OF COVELO et al. (S. F. 12580.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Fraud ⇨58(1)—In materialman's action for fraudulent representations, evidence held insufficient to support plaintiff's contention that defendants by statements and promises substituted themselves as principal debtors.

In action by firm supplying materials for school building seeking to recover damages for false representations which prevented plaintiff from filing a "stop" notice, and thus diverting last payment of contract to payment of plaintiff's claim, evidence held insufficient to support plaintiff's contention that defendants by statements and promises substituted themselves as principal debtors.

2. Fraud ⇨20—Materialman suing for fraudulent representations held not entitled to recover on theory that defendants' misrepresentations caused plaintiff to waive certain rights of lien.

In action by firm supplying materials for school building seeking to recover damages for false representations which prevented plaintiff from filing a "stop" notice, and thus diverting last payment of contract to payment of plaintiff's claim, plaintiff held not entitled to recover on theory that defendants by making misrepresentations which plaintiff believed and relied on caused plaintiff to waive certain rights of lien.

3. Contracts ⇨90—Evidence held insufficient to show any consideration for defendants' promises to materialman to notify him when notice of completion was filed and money paid (Civ. Code, §§ 1709, 1710).

In action by firm supplying materials for school building seeking to recover damages for false representations which prevented plaintiff from filing a "stop" notice, and thus diverting last payment of contract to payment of plaintiff's claim, evidence held insufficient to show any consideration for defendants' promises to notify plaintiff when notice of completion was filed and when certain money was paid over, so that there was no liability on theory of breach of contract nor under Civ. Code, §§ 1709, 1710.

4. Mechanics' liens ⇨132(14) — Materialman has constructive notice of recorded filing of notice of completion.

Filing of notice of completion was matter of public record of which materialman is held to have constructive notice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by the Camm & Hedges Company against the Bank of Covelo and others, for damages for fraudulent representations. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 275 P. 828.

G. P. Hall and Emmett I. Donohue, both of Petaluma, for appellant.

Thomas, Thomas & McCowen, Will Van Dyke, and Hale McCowen, Jr., all of Ukiah, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This action was brought to recover damages for alleged fraudulent representations and promises. Motions for nonsuit as to each of the individual defendants were granted at the close of plaintiff's case, and at the conclusion of the trial judgment was entered in favor of the defendant bank on a directed verdict. The plaintiff appeals.

A. W. Biggers was engaged in constructing a school building near the town of Covelo for the Round Valley union school district. He was indebted to the Bank of Covelo for overdrafts and loans in the sum of about $6,100 and assigned to that bank all moneys due and to become due him under the contract. Plaintiff supplied materials for the school building and had an unpaid claim therefor of over $3,200. Mr. Owens, representing plaintiff, went to Covelo on January 21, 1924, for the purpose of collecting this claim. While there, he met some of the defendants who are alleged to have made fraudulent statements and false promises which prevented plaintiff from filing a "stop" notice, and thus diverting the last payment on the contract to the payment of plaintiff's claim.

The money due Biggers was collected by the bank, and after satisfying its own claim, the balance was placed in the checking account of Biggers and was disbursed by him.

[1] It is contended by appellants, first, that defendants by their statements and promises substituted themselves for and in place of A. W. Biggers as principal debtors. The contention is not supported by the evidence. The testimony of Owens is to the effect that he first made inquiry of defendant Long, thinking he was the secretary of the board of trustees. Long introduced him to defendants Johnson and Rohrbough, who at the time were standing on the sidewalk in front of the Bank of Covelo. A general conversation followed. Defendant Long was a stockholder and officer of the bank. Defendants Johnson and Rohrbough were each directors and stockholders of the Bank of Covelo, the latter being president and the owner of a majority of the capital stock. Mr. Owens testified:

"Mr. Rohrbough told me that there was $11,000 of money that was yet to be paid on account of the contract for the school building; that there was sufficient money there to pay our bill, together with all other bills, and Mr. Rohrbough said that all of the money was being paid through the Bank of Covelo and that the bill of Camm & Hedges would be paid together with all bills, because there was sufficient money with which to pay it.

"Q. Now, at that time state whether or not Mr. Rohrbough said to you all of the accounts are being paid through the bank? A. He positively stated all bills are being paid through the Bank of Covelo.

"Q. And on the 21st of January when you had this interview he said there was sufficient funds on hand to meet the bills? A. Sufficient money on hand to meet the bills because there was over $11,000 that was still to be paid out on account of that contract.

"Q. What was said by you and what was said by Mr. Rohrbough in the presence of Mr. Long and Mr. Johnson and what did they say? A. That I was there for the purpose of filing a stop notice if there was—if the notice of completion had been filed; but they said it hadn't been filed because the architect had not yet accepted the building owing to some changes made—some extras, and that had been held up. * * * I asked Mr. Johnson after I found out he was the secretary of the Board of Trustees if he would notify Camm & Hedges whenever the notice of completion was filed and the warrants drawn for the payment—for the last payment, and he promised he would notify Camm & Hedges when that took place. * * * Having received this assurance that our bill would be paid, I relied upon that assurance and left for Petaluma."

The foregoing conversation indicates no promise on the part of the defendants nor any of them to be substituted as principal debtor in the place and stead of the contractor Biggers, nor does it contain any promise on the part of plaintiff which would furnish a consideration for such alleged substitution. The plaintiff was not bound to withhold a stop notice and might have filed one at any time had it so desired, without violating a legal duty to defendants. There is nothing in the record which would warrant submitting this question to the jury, and any finding by a jury in favor of plaintiff upon this contention would be unsupported by the evidence.

[2-4] It is also contended by appellant that defendants, by making certain misrepresentations and promises without intention of keeping them, which misrepresentations and promises were believed and relied upon by plaintiff, caused plaintiff to waive certain rights of lien to plaintiff's damage.

The misrepresentations alleged are: "That there was then due and owing to said A. W. Biggers for and on account of the construction of said school building the sum of $11,000 or thereabouts, and that said sum was sufficient to pay all bills against said building and for labor and materials furnished and consumed in the construction thereof and that said sum was in the Bank of Covelo and being held by said bank in a fund for the payment of the claims against said building and said fund and that the bank was handling said fund and that all bills for labor and material furnished and consumed in the construction of said school building would be paid by said defendants through said bank and from said fund and that said defendants would notify said plaintiff when said money was to be paid over."

There is no proof that the sum of $11,000 or thereabouts was not owing to Biggers on account of the school building. The only evidence in the record on this question is to the effect that something over this amount was due him at the time the statement is alleged to have been made. There is no proof that this sum was not sufficient to pay all bills against said building for labor and materials. There is no proof that the individual defendants knew that the bank would not pay all such bills out of the fund collected by it through Biggers' assignment and no proof of any authority in said defendants to make representations on behalf of the corporation defendant, the Bank of Covelo. There is no proof of any consideration for the promise of Johnson to notify the plaintiff when the money was paid over, as stated in the pleading, nor for the promise to notify plaintiff when the notice of completion was filed, as testified to by Mr. Owens. There is no liability, therefore, on the part of these defendants on the theory of breach of contract, nor is there a liability under section 1709, Civil Code, for there is no proof of any of the conditions enumerated in section 1710, Civil Code. While the plaintiff introduced a copy of the recorded notice of completion, showing its filing on January 17, there is nothing in the record to show that the defendants knew of its filing. It is true it had been signed and sworn to before a notary public by defendant Johnson, as clerk of the board of trustees, but the record shows that it was recorded at the request of G. R. Redwine and it does not appear that the defendants knew of its filing and recording. The testimony of Owens is that they told him the architect was "holding it up" because of some extra work which he had not accepted, and there is nothing in the record to show that this was not their belief at the time of the conversation with Owens. It is further to be observed that the filing of the notice of completion was a matter of public record of which the plaintiff had constructive notice.

We are in accord with the ruling of the trial court that the facts of this case can create no legal liability on the part of the defendants. The plaintiff neglected to protect its rights and relied upon others to do so for it, but the persons relied upon were under no legal liability to protect the plaintiff and accepted no moral responsibility in the matter.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA v. JONES.*
(S. F. 13383.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ☞31, 32—Statute creating State Bar and regulating practice of law held valid (St. 1927, p. 38).

St. 1927, p. 38, providing for creation, organization, and powers of State Bar of California, and for regulation of practice of law, held not unconstitutional.

2. Attorney and client ☞54—Attorney who failed to demand public trial in proceedings for his suspension could not claim that he was deprived of public hearing (St. 1927, p. 38).

Where attorney was denied public hearing in proceedings for suspension from practice, due to his failure to demand a public trial, under the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), there was no denial of right to public trial, since purpose of providing for private trial, unless public trial is requested, is to shield attorney.

3. Attorney and client ☞58—One-year suspension from practice for attorney's attempt to cause miscarriage of justice through inducing clients to give perjured testimony held not excessive penalty.

Suspension of attorney from practice of law for period of one year, on account of attempt to cause miscarriage of justice through advising clients to give perjured testimony, held not excessive penalty.

4. Attorney and client ☞53(2)—Charge that attorney attempted to cause miscarriage of justice through perjured testimony held sustained by evidence in proceedings for suspension (St. 1927, p. 38).

In proceedings for suspension of attorney under State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), evidence held to sustain charge of attorney's attempt to cause miscarriage of justice through perjured testimony, on account of which Board of Governors of State Bar recommended one year's suspension from practice.

Application for review of Order of Board of Governors of State Bar of California.

Proceedings by the State Bar of California against Edward V. Jones, attorney at law. The State Bar, through its Board of Governors, recommended suspension, and the attorney petitions for review. Action of Board of Governors approved, and petitioner suspended from practice for one year.

E. H. Hoar, of Bakersfield, for petitioner.
Strother P. Walton, of Fresno, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This proceeding was instituted to review an order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California, recommending to this court the suspension of petitioner for a period of one year from the practice of law in this state. Said recommendation is based upon the following findings made by the local administrative committee of Kern county, after its hearing, upon legal notice and in due form, of the charges preferred against him.

That the evidence showed that petitioner was not guilty of any misconduct in connection with the first transaction set forth in the notice to show cause. As to the facts set forth in the second transaction, the committee found that: "On May 11, 1928, in the superior court * * * in the case of People * * * v. * * * Powers * * * and Newberry, * * * accused of robbery, the said accused was the attorney for said defendants at the trial of said case on said day. That on said day, said accused advised the said defendants to testify therein and thereat that the defendants 'had gone to the place of the alleged robbery in the evening prior to the alleged robbery, got drunk there, and later woke up in an automobile, and discovered that all our money had been taken from us, and that on looking around in the automobile that we discovered a six-shooter, and that we decided to take the six-shooter and go in the house and recover our money.' That the said accused, at the time he gave such advice, believed the same to be false. That said defendant Al Powers attempted to so testify and would have so testified, had not the court sustained objection of the district attorney to such testimony, on the ground that it was irrelevant. That by said advice the said accused intended to cause a miscarriage of justice." From the foregoing findings, the committee found said accused was guilty of conduct involving moral turpitude, in that in said action he intentionally endeavored to cause a miscarriage of justice, and for that reason said committee recommended that his license and right as an attorney at law be suspended for the period of one year.

Petitioner alleges: (1) That the State Bar Act is unconstitutional; (2) that he was deprived of a public hearing; (3) insufficiency of the evidence to sustain said charge; and (4) that the penalty imposed is excessive.

[1] The first contention may be disposed of quickly, for recent decisions have established beyond question the constitutionality of said

[2] As to the second contention, the rules of procedure provide that these hearings shall not be public, unless so ordered by the Board of Governors or requested by the accused. Petitioner claims that a request by him for a public hearing would have antagonized the committee, and by so placing the burden of such request upon an accused the rule, in effect, deprives him of his right to a public trial. We cannot subscribe to this view. The clear purpose of the rule is not to prejudice the rights of an accused, but rather, where circumstances do not decree that a public hearing would be wiser, to shield and protect him from public criticism. Here petitioner was denied such a hearing through his own indifference only, for he failed to exercise his privilege of making demand therefor.

[3] The other two contentions, insufficiency of the evidence and excessive penalty, may be considered together, for, granting that the evidence was sufficient to prove the charge, the penalty is not excessive. A deliberate attempt to cause a miscarriage of justice through perjured testimony is not a light offense, and might justify a penalty more severe.

[4] In support of the charge there were introduced and received in evidence, by the express consent of the accused, affidavits of the two defendants convicted in said robbery case, to the effect that the accused suggested said untrue defense to them. While these documents were properly admitted at a hearing of this character upon the consent of petitioner, by reason of their source, they carry little weight. However, testimony, corroborated to some extent by petitioner himself, was given by Judge R. B. Lambert, of the Kern county superior court, before whom said robbery trial was had, and therein lies the foundation of the case against petitioner. It is unnecessary to detail said testimony, for sufficient it is to say that, taken in connection with the other evidence, it amply and abundantly supports the findings and justifies the recommendation of the local administrative committee. A reading of the record impels the conclusion that it was in the mind of petitioner, knowing said defendants were guilty, to have the court, if possible, accept said fabricated defense, an imposition meriting disclosure and punishment.

It is therefore ordered that the action and recommendation of the Board of Governors in this matter be approved, and that the petitioner herein, the said Edward V. Jones, be and he is hereby suspended from the practice of law in this state for the period of one year from and after the date of filing of this order.

 DYER v. McCORKLE et al. (S. F. 12847.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Automobiles ☞193(11)—Boy assisting truck driver in making deliveries was invitee as to driver's employer, if employer consented, or gave driver express or implied authority to grant such privilege.

Boy, who boarded moving truck while helping driver thereof to make milk deliveries, was invitee as to truck driver's employer, if present with consent of employer, or with consent of employee having express or implied authority to grant the privilege, though presence without knowledge of master, and with knowledge of servant, who had no authority to hire him, would make him a mere licensee.

2. Master and servant ☞302(1)—Servant's negligence as to master's invitee is binding on master, if servant is engaged in accomplishing object in line of assigned duties.

One who occupies position of invitee as to master is entitled to ordinary care at hands of servant, and servant's omission to exercise ordinary care is binding on master, if at time of injury the servant is engaged in accomplishing object in line of duties assigned him by master.

3. Automobiles ☞245(30) — Whether truck driver's employer consented to driver's engaging boy to assist in deliveries held question of fact in boy's action for injuries.

Whether employer of truck driver, engaged in making milk deliveries, consented to driver's procuring assistance of boy in delivering milk, held question of fact for jury, in action for boy's injuries received in boarding moving truck as result of driver's negligence.

4. Automobiles ☞244(26)—Employer's consent to truck driver's engaging boy to assist in deliveries could be implied from custom, usage, or conduct, without direct evidence, in boy's action for injuries.

Consent of employer to practice of employee driving milk truck to engage boy to help him in making deliveries could be implied from custom, usage, or conduct, without necessity of direct evidence of consent in action for injury sustained by boy claimed to be invitee as to truck driver's employer.

5. Master and servant ☞308—Nature of servant's work may indicate that master consented to presence of person procured by servant as helper.

Nature and character of work done by servant may contribute force to conclusion that master knew of and consented to presence on his premises of person procured by servant to aid servant in his work.

6. Automobiles ⚡244(26) — Verdict against truck driver's employer for injuries sustained by boy, mounting truck while assisting in making deliveries, held sustained.

In action for injuries sustained by boy in boarding moving truck, while engaged by truck driver to assist him in making deliveries of milk, evidence of custom of driver to employ boy's services, and of consent of driver's employer, held sufficient to sustain verdict against employer.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Dayton Dyer, also known as Dayton Dyer Sibley, by Winifred Dyer Sibley, his guardian ad litem, against B. T. McCorkle and Frank M. Helm, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 274 P. 587, and superseding judgment in 274 P. 592.

Fenston, Williams & Hansen and Frank Kauke, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The judgment is affirmed. As justification for this holding we offer the following:

The action is by plaintiff, an infant, at the time the cause of action arose, of 12 years, against defendant corporation, as master, and the other defendant, as its servant, to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff on April 11, 1926, on account of the alleged negligence of said servant. Negligence was denied by both defendants, and contributory negligence was pleaded, defendant master especially denied liability for the acts of its servant which resulted in said injuries to plaintiff. Plaintiff had judgment. The amount of the verdict, as such, is not questioned; neither is serious contention made that negligence was absent. In fact, no defense of any kind is urged for the defendant servant. The prime issue is the liability, if any, of the master under the facts here appearing.

Defendant corporation owned and operated at the time in question a dairy farm near and milk route in Fresno city. The codefendant, its employee, was engaged in delivering milk and cream to customers in said city, using therefor an electric truck. For a considerable period of time next prior to said accident, he had practiced the plan of enlisting the aid of young boys in making deliveries to the various homes served with milk and cream. The boy then so engaged would ride upon the running board of the truck and deliver bottles to one side of the street, while the driver delivered them to the other side. In the dispatch of this business, if the driver of the truck was in his seat prior to the return of the boy to the truck, he would set the truck in motion before the lad actually reached it; the latter jumping on the running board and seizing an upright bar while the truck was in motion. These boys would be paid small sums of money by the driver, as well as given candy to eat and milk to drink.

The older brother of plaintiff had followed this practice for a period ending about six weeks before the accident, and during the subsequent six weeks plaintiff had almost daily followed the truck in its afternoon deliveries. He estimated that he made 50 trips with said driver during said period. He had received small sums of money frequently from the driver, as well as candy and milk. At the time in question the driver, having no milk to deliver on his side of the street, was in his seat on the truck as plaintiff, returning from a delivery at a home, reached a point some 4 or 5 feet distant from the truck. The truck then began to move, and in endeavoring to jump to the running board, and to seize said bar to balance himself, plaintiff fell, was run over, and his leg was broken, and other injuries were received by him.

The question is: Did the master of the truck, under these circumstances, owe the plaintiff the duty of ordinary care? It should be noted that defendant driver did not take the witness stand, nor did the manager or any other officer of the corporation deny knowledge of or assent to this practice on the part of said driver of engaging these young boys to assist him. The manager was simply asked whether the authority of the servant included power to hire assistants in his work. Presumably this question related to the authority of the servant to employ assistants for the company, and did not relate to authority in the servant to solicit and procure assistance on his own account.

The contention of appellant is that, if authority in the servant to engage the services of boys is conceded, plaintiff becomes an employee of the master, and hence comes under the Workmen's Compensation Act; that, if the servant had no authority to engage such services, then plaintiff was a mere volunteer, to whom the master owed no duty, except for injuries resulting from the servant's willful act.

[1, 2] There is no evidence whatever upon which to conclude that plaintiff was an employee of the master. In attempting to board the truck of defendant corporation, plaintiff was there as one of three classes of persons: A trespasser, a licensee, or an invitee. If there without the knowledge or consent of the master or servant, he was a trespasser. If there without the knowledge of the master but with the knowledge of the servant, who had no authority to invite him, he was a mere licensee. But, if there with the consent of the master or with the consent of the servant having authority, express or implied, to grant the privilege, he was an invitee. As an invitee he was entitled to ordinary care at the hands of the servant, and the omission in this particular would be binding upon the master, if at the time of infliction of the injury the servant was engaged in accomplishing an object in the line of the duties assigned to him by such master.

[3] Whether or not the consent of the master was present is a question of fact. The verdict for plaintiff includes such a finding by the jury, if evidence may be found in the record to sustain it. Save this, no other question is here in doubt.

[4] Direct evidence of such consent is not required. It may be implied from custom, usage, or conduct on the part of the master or servant. Brown v. Feather River Lumber Co., 203 Cal. 493, 498, 265 P. 203, 57 A. L. R. 812; Lawrence v. Kaul Lumber Co., 171 Ala. 300, 55 So. 111; Harvey v. Deep River Logging Co., 49 Or. 583, 90 P. 501, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 131; Hodge v. Sycamore Coal Co., 82 W. Va. 106, 95 S. E. 808.

[5] It may also be true that the nature and character of the work being done by the servant will contribute force to the conclusion that the master knew of and consented to the presence on his premises of a person procured by his servant to aid him in his work. In the case of Purtell v. Phila., etc., Coal, etc., Co., 256 Ill. 110, 99 N. E. 899, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 335, where employees of a coal company, engaged in unloading coal from vessels, hired and paid an 11 year old boy to carry water for them, the custom of so doing having prevailed for many years, the court concluded that said employment of a water boy must have been known to those in charge of the company's yard, and that it was a reasonable and economical measure taken by said employees in the performance of their work. The boy was struck and injured by a block hanging from a boom in such a manner as made working conditions unsafe on the coal dock. The court, affirming the judgment awarding him damages, further held that he was on the premises of the company by its implied invitation, to do work in which he and the company were interested, and that the company was required to exercise reasonable care for his safety while so working there.

In Atkins v. Lackawanna Transportation Co., 182 Ill. 237, 54 N. E. 1004, it was held that, where the owners of a vessel engaged in carrying merchandise permitted a boy to board it for the purpose of supplying its employees with drinking water, for which purpose they hired him, said owners must exercise reasonable care towards the boy while he was on the vessel.

In Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Hopkins, 200 Ill. 122, 65 N. E. 656, it was held that one going to a railroad depot to deliver meals to mail clerks on a train, pursuant to their agreement with her, such practice having been followed for years with the knowledge and consent of the railroad company, was not a mere licensee upon the depot platform, but was to be regarded as there by the implied invitation of said railroad company.

[6] Here we have neither a denial by the servant or the master of authority in the servant to engage upon his own account the services of plaintiff in the dispatch of the master's business. Neither do we have a denial by the master of knowledge of or consent to the custom practiced by the servant. Indeed, the custom was so open, notorious, and continuous that the master could hardly have been ignorant of it. In fact, the character of the work was such as to make probable acts of this kind on the part of the servant. Viewing the evidence as a whole, coupled with the absence of pertinent evidence in the possession of defendants, we are of the clear view that it is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

In the case of Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80, there is not only denial by both master and servant of authority to engage the services of the plaintiff, but there is an entire absence of facts upon which to predicate holding that authority in the servant to engage the plaintiff was granted. Moreover, the nature of the work of the servant was such as to practically preclude the idea that aid or assistance would or should be sought. We therefore find no conflict between the holding there made and the one we here make.

There is a second appeal in the case entitled "Winifred Dyer Sibley, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. B. T. McCorkle and Frank M. Helm, Inc., a Corporation Doing Business under the Firm Name and Style of Jersey Farm Dairy Company, Defendants and Appellants," Appellate Court No. 6351, Civil, an action for hospital and medical bills incurred in treating the infant plaintiff for the injuries received. That case is controlled by the ruling above and such is the stipulation of the parties.

On authority of the conclusion we have announced, the judgment in this cause too is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

LANGDON, J. I dissent. The opinion of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 1, heretofore filed herein and written by Justice Parker, pro tem., clearly expresses my views of the legal situation presented by the record, and I hereby adopt the following portion thereof as my dissenting opinion:

"The main point presented and urged by appellant goes to the liability of the dairy company, the admitted employer, and appellant urges its freedom from responsibility on the ground that the driver was acting wholly without the scope of his employment. Appellant contends that the boy either was an employee of the dairy company or he was not; that, if he was an employee, his recourse was to the accident commission; that, if he was not an employee, he was a mere volunteer. The theory of the trial in the lower court was that there was no employment, and the plaintiff insists such to be the case. Appellant seems content, as far as its argument proceeds, to concur in this. However, the main question to be determined is as to the acts and conduct of the servant McCorkle and the scope of his employment and authority. There is no evidence in the record that the dairy company ever had any knowledge of the fact that the driver was permitting boys to ride in the truck or to assist in the deliveries. True, the infant plaintiff testified that one time the driver told him that he did not want 'too many kids' on the truck, but as against the dairy company this one item of testimony cannot be considered as even the slightest evidence of knowledge or acquiescence on the part of the employer. It is manifest that throughout the transaction the driver was acting within the scope of his employment in so far as the delivery of the milk might be regarded as the very purpose of such employment. It is further apparent from the record before us that in pursuit of the employment the servant had no authority, express or implied, to employ, invite, or permit assistants to aid him in his work.

"Appellant has put forth many reasons why the judgment of the trial court should be set aside; respondent, on the other hand, urges as many reasons why it should be affirmed. It would serve no useful or instructive purpose to set out in detail these various contentions and analyze each—distinguishing, approving, or rejecting in turn. * * * From the facts of the case as hereinafter outlined we are of the opinion that the relationship of employer and employee did not arise or result as between the infant plaintiff and either McCorkle or the dairy company. That is to say, no such relationship arose or was implied to the extent that the matter of compensation would properly or at all come before the industrial accident commission pursuant to the Workmen's Compensation Act. * * * As between plaintiff infant and the dairy company there was no appointment or contract or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written; nor was there any authority, express, implied, or incident to the performance of his duties, that empowered the driver, McCorkle, to create, as between the infant and the dairy company, the relation of master and servant or employer and employee. The term of service was on no schedule, nor was any wage provided therefor. No duty of service was accepted by the plaintiff or any obligation of wage payment fastened upon defendant dairy company.

"The case of Giannini v. Campodonico * * * is illustrative of the law applicable. In that case the facts bear a striking resemblance to the case at bar. Plaintiff there was a boy of 14 years of age and resided across the street from the stable owned by defendant, who employed a colored stableman to take care of the horses and wagons and keep the stable in order. On the morning of the accident the boy saw the stableman leaving in a buggy, and at that time the stableman requested the boy to clean the stable during his absence, and promised him a nickel upon his return. A small door which was part of a large sliding door was left open for the boy. Subsequently the boy and two other boys entered the stable, and while in the premises the large sliding door fell, breaking the leg of the boy who had been engaged by the stableman, and inflicting other injuries upon him. Upon several occasions theretofore the boy had performed errands for the stableman at the latter's request and received some sort of remuneration. The door which fell down had previously been out of order and the stableman had attempted to remedy the defect. The court holds as follows: 'Disregarding the testimony advanced by defendant and looking only to the case as presented by' plaintiff, 'no ground for holding the defendant liable appears. It is well settled that as against a trespasser or mere licensee the owner of property owes no duty to keep the premises in safe condition. The only duty is to abstain from wilful or wanton injury. In other respects one who thus enters upon the premises does so at his own risk and subject to all the ordinary risks which attach to such premises. * * * It is only in the case of one who has been expressly or impliedly invited upon the premises that the duty exists to exercise due care not to injure him or permit the premises to be in such condition that injury results. * * * The first question is whether the request of the stableman in this case is such an invitation as to render' the boy 'an invitee. * * * The facts * * * show that the duties of the stableman were of such a menial character that the position could not have carried with it the implied right to delegate the work or hire others to assist in the same. * * * In fact, the duties were such that the stableman could very easily perform them without aid. It must therefore be held that the request to do the work was unauthorized and could not impose any additional liability upon the defendant. * * * The stableman's promise to pay' the boy 'to clean the stable could not make the latter an invitee. Neither can prior services raise such a relation, especially where it is not pretended that they were brought home in any way to the defendant. The fact that respondent is a minor does not give him any greater rights under the circumstances. "That might excuse him from concurring negligence, but cannot supply the place of negligence on the part of 'defendant,' or confer an authority on one who has none. It may excite our sympathy, but cannot create rights or duties which have no other foundation." This ends quotation from Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80.

"In the case of Curry v. Addoms, 166 App. Div. 433, 151 N. Y. S. 1017, where plaintiff had been engaged by a janitor who was without authority to engage any other person, the court says: 'It is also urged that the plaintiff was a licensee. If so, she must trace her license to the defendant; but as he knew nothing of her, and was not bound to do so, and as the janitress,' by her contract with plaintiff, 'had no right to commit the defendant, he owed her no duty in the matter of steps.' The case of Higbee Co. v. Jackson, reported in 101 Ohio St. 75, 128 N. E. 61, is exhaustively annotated in 14 A. L. R., commencing at page 131. The action concerned the rights of a boy who had been invited to ride in a truck. The invitation was extended by the driver, without the knowledge of his employer, and accepted. The court says: 'The grant of permission, so far as the company is concerned, was a mere nullity.' The most that can be said is that the boy had no right upon the truck and that when he got in he was a trespasser as far as the defendant was concerned.

"The foregoing cases can in many respects be directly applied to the case at bar. The work of the truck driver was menial work, as the term goes. Surely it is demonstrated that it was not work that required assistance, inasmuch as it was work that a 12 year old child could do, as far as the delivery of the milk itself was concerned, and the assistance was not rendered in the driving of the truck. Relying, also, on the Campodonico Case, we conclude that the boy was not an invitee. Therefore, being neither an employee, nor a licensee, nor invitee, there is but one other status in which he can be placed, and that is he was a trespasser as far as defendant Dairy Company was concerned. As such trespasser he was entitled to protection from willful or wanton injury. Sessions v. Southern Pacific Co., 159 Cal. 599, 114 P. 982; Higbee Co. v. Jackson, supra. If the driver of the truck had permitted the boy to be seated upon the truck and after driving some distance had suddenly become mindful of his breach of duty, he would not have been permitted to recklessly push the boy off and injure him. Likewise, seeing the boy in a dangerous position, he would not be permitted, ruthlessly and with no regard for the boy's safety, to run him down.

"Notwithstanding the confused and indiscriminate use at times of the terms 'negligence' and 'willfulness' by judges and text-writers it is certain that the weight of authority supports the view that these terms have a distinct and well-defined meaning which is clearly pointed out in Holwerson v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 157 Mo. 216, 57 S. W. 774, 50 L. R. A. 850, and accepted by California courts in Tognazzini v. Freeman, 18 Cal. App. 474, 123 P. 540; Taylor v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 172 Cal. 645, 158 P. 119. Willful misconduct means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. The term 'serious and willful misconduct' is described by the supreme court of Massachusetts as being something 'much more than mere negligence, or even gross or culpable negligence.' To constitute 'willful misconduct' there must be actual knowledge or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the danger to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury. Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal. App. 416, 185 P. 510. Wanton negligence, likewise, means something in addition to mere actionable negligence. To constitute wantonness in the eye of the law it is not necessary to allege or show an intent to injure. Gross negligence, or what is sometimes called the 'last' negligence, may be the equivalent of willful or wanton negligence; and where the conduct of defendant exhibits reckless indifference to probable consequences, with knowledge of facts and circumstances likely to result in injury, it becomes wanton negligence. Kramm v. Stockton R. Co., 3 Cal. App. 618, 86 P. 738, 903. 'Recklessness' and 'wantonness' are stronger terms than ordinary negligence, and mean a disregard of security equivalent to bad faith and a willful or malicious disposition to injure. To constitute wantonness there must be a design, purpose, or intent to do wrong, or cause the injury, but a recklessness amounting to an utter disregard of consequences will supply the place of a specific intent. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 78 Kan. 622, 97 P. 1025. See, also, Words and Phrases, Second Series, vol. 4, p. 1236 et seq.

"Without going further into the various constructions placed upon the term 'wanton,' it will suffice to say that to lawyer and layman alike the word, in common usage, immediately suggests something of complete abandonment of care. We are unable to conclude that the negligence here established on the part of the driver of the milk truck can be characterized as either willful or wanton in the sense contemplated by the law applicable. To so hold would be disregarding the plain import of the terms. The boy had been doing the same thing for over a month and a half and his brother before him for some months. Day after day exactly the same procedure was followed. If the driver was on the truck before the boy got back, he would start up and move to the next house or next point of delivery. The boy would jump on and ride to that point. This boy was of the age of 12 years and normal, as far as appears, for that age. The truck was stopped at a distance of four feet, which demonstrates the speed at which it was traveling. We do not mean to say that because a course of conduct, such as a boy jumping on a truck, had been pursued for some months, that fact alone would render it free from negligence. But it is obvious that knowledge and experience serves the purpose of illustrating what is safe and what is dangerous, because these factors serve to a great extent in pointing the course of the future. There is not a scrap of testimony from which it can be inferred that the driver knew the boy was getting on the truck or was attempting to get on. One witness testified that the boy shouted to the driver to go ahead, but the boy denied so doing. Taking either view of this, our conclusion would not be affected. If it could be held that the boy assured the driver it was all right to proceed, then the driver might reasonably assume the boy in a position of safety.

"Respondent contends that inasmuch as the complaint alleged that the driver willfully, wantonly, and recklessly drove the truck, and that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the wantonness, willfulness, and recklessness of the defendants, the verdict of the jury, being a general verdict, imports a finding for plaintiff upon these issues. To sustain this contention it is necessary that there be some evidence supporting the allegations. Surely if plaintiff had offered no evidence at all, save as to the extent of his damage, and had offered no evidence at all as to the negligence, nor had defendant, a verdict for plaintiff would find no support in the mere allegations of the complaint. In the case of Higbee Co. v. Jackson, supra, the entire subject is completely annotated. Many authorities have been collected in the note, and from a reading of the cases it becomes evident that the allowing of the rights of even a trespasser to the person invited by the servant, without the scope of his employment, is a question of much dispute, and where granted is a concession, and extension of the doctrine of respondeat superior. The doctrine of respondeat superior had its origin in consideration of public policy. Out of the necessities of new social and economic conditions it has been developed and extended, and its growth and application have been influenced and directed by these conditions. The rule itself and its development are examples of the process by which the judgment of society as to what is necessary to the public welfare has from time to time been expressed in juristic form. But in extending the doctrine we cannot destroy it and deprive the master of all rights. If an employer's business and fortune were committed wholly to a servant or employee without regard to the nature or scope of the latter's employment, modern business would practically cease. The law has been exceedingly generous as to the plaintiff in cases such as in the instant case to give him the protection it has, in so far as it renders the master liable for a situation over which he has so little control. The basis of this solicitude of the law is the principle which is sometimes characterized as the humanitarian doctrine which is only invoked to prevent willful or wanton injury.

"We are of the opinion that by no specious reasoning should the doctrine be extended. By giving such loose or careless construction to the terms 'willful' and 'wanton' as is sought here would be to destroy entirely any distinction between the various degrees of negligence. To sustain the contention of respondent here would be to hold affirmatively that wanton and willful misconduct means lack of ordinary care and would be in direct defiance of authority and destruction of principle. The court below, under the facts, should have granted the defendant's motion for a nonsuit."

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 26, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1010(1)—Appellate court merely reviews action of trial court, and findings below founded on substantial evidence are conclusive, notwithstanding provisions authorizing additional findings on appeal (Const. art. 6, §§ 4½, 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Appellate tribunal possesses none of functions of jury and cannot weigh evidence or determine facts, but its sole province is to review action of trial court and correct its errors, and findings of trial court founded on substantial evidence are conclusive on appeal; this rule not being affected by Const. art. 6, § 4½, requiring that error be prejudicial to warrant reversal, or by section 4¾, permitting Legislature to give appellate courts power to make findings of fact contrary to or in addition to those made by trial court in cases tried by the court, or by Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, enacted pursuant thereto, permitting appellate court to make additional findings.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1012(1)—Supreme Court on appeal from judgment rendered on exhibits and transcript of evidence by judge not hearing testimony, held without authority to determine weight of testimony in reviewing findings (Const. art. 6, §§ 4½, 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Supreme Court on appeal from judgment rendered by trial court, sitting without a jury, on basis of exhibits and transcript of evidence and proceedings had before another judge, held limited to questions of law and without authority to reconsider weight and credibility of evidence in reviewing findings, notwithstanding fact that trial judge had not seen the witnesses or heard their testimony, and notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4½, relative to harmless error, and section 4¾, and Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, empowering appellate courts to make findings of fact contrary to or in addition to those made by appellate court.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1178(1)—Reviewing court on reversal after making new contrary findings should remand cause (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Where reviewing court makes findings additional or contrary to those made by trial court under authority given by Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, under which appellate court may give or direct the entry of judgment, reviewing court should not render judgment, but should on reversal remand cause for further proceedings, in view of necessity of having proper judgment below for issuance of process.

4. Appeal and error ⇨14(2), 1202—Straight reversal necessitates new trial, but if reversal is with directions to enter judgment for appellant, respondent may move for new trial or appeal from judgment so entered (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 963, and § 956a as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

If judgment of reviewing court is a straight order of reversal, new trial must be had upon going down of remittitur, but if judgment is reversal with directions to enter judgment against respondent under Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, authorizing additional findings on appeal, respondent may move for new trial, or take appeal from judgment so entered under Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1176(2)—Power to direct trial court to enter judgment for appellant should be exercised only where respondent could not succeed on retrial (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Power of reviewing court to direct trial court to enter judgment for appellant under Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, authorizing additional findings on appeal, should be exercised only when, upon a full consideration of the record, the party against whom the judgment is for the first time entered in the trial court could not successfully meet the contentions of his adversary upon a retrial or reconsideration of the case below.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1176(2)—Reversal, based on new findings by appellate court, with directions to enter judgment, cannot be ordered unless it appears that respondent could not make substantial showing below (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

If new findings by appellate court be made basis of reversal with directions to trial court to enter judgment for appellant, pursuant to authority given by Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code

Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, it must appear from the record, or from the new evidence taken, that on no theory grounded in reason and justice could respondent make a further substantial showing in the trial court in support of his case.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1122(2)—Reviewing court may not make additional findings, where judgment must be reversed and new trial ordered (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

When judgment appealed from must be reversed and a new trial ordered, either pursuant to a general order of reversal, or a specific remanding of the cause for new trial, findings of fact by reviewing court are unauthorized, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4¾, and Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, relative to findings on appeal additional or contrary to those of trial court.

8. Mines and minerals ⇨101—Finding of abandonment of joint enterprise to acquire claims on government oil lands, and that defendants in procuring royalty interest therein were not guilty of fraud, held sustained.

In action for accounting of profits received by defendants through royalties under lease from government of oil lands, based on claim of joint enterprise between plaintiffs and defendants to acquire claims and of conspiracy among defendants to defraud plaintiffs by inducing applicant for patent to abandon pending application, findings of abandonment of joint enterprise under which plaintiffs claimed interest, and that defendants were guilty of no fraud, held sustained by evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey and Pat R. Parker, Judges.

Action by H. I. Tupman and others against C. F. Harberkern and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

F. E. Borton and Borton & Petrini, all of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action wherein the plaintiffs sought an accounting of profits received by the defendants by virtue of a transaction involving a lease from the United States government of certain oil lands in the Elk Hills district in Kern county. The action was brought on the theory that the lease procured at the conclusion of the events hereinafter outlined was the fulfillment of a joint adventure entered into among the plaintiffs, H. I. Tupman, Fred V. Gordon, and C. V. Anderson, and two of the defendants, C. F. Haberkern and S. P. Wible. The defendant T. E. Klipstein was joined in the action on the theory that he conspired with the other two defendants to deprive the plaintiffs of their alleged share of profits.

By their amended complaint plaintiffs allege in substance that they and the defendants Haberkern and Wible on April 10, 1910, entered into an agreement whereby they became associated for the purpose of acquiring a five-sevenths interest from one R. J. White, in certain placer mining claims designated as Red Top Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, which embrace all of section 2 in township 31 south, range 24 east, M. D. B. & M., in Kern county; that the parties to the agreement should aid in the acquisition of said interest but that the same should stand of record in the name of R. J. White until such time as applications to the United States government for patent to all of said claims should be successfully prosecuted and concluded; that on June 4, 1910, said R. J. White executed a grant deed conveying a one-seventh interest each to H. I. Tupman, Fred V. Gordon, C. V. Anderson, C. F. Haberkern, and S. P. Wible, parties to this controversy, and a one-seventh interest to his son R. E. White; that R. J. White made application to the United States government for patent, which application remained pending until about March, 1922; that pursuant to an alleged conspiracy among the defendants to defraud the plaintiffs of their interests, the defendants, by falsely representing to R. J. White that the plaintiffs were not longer interested, procured an abandonment by R. J. White of the pending application and a conveyance of said land to the United States government, which was the consideration for the lease by it to Pan-American Oil Company of the northerly 1,000 feet of said section 2; that the consideration paid by the Pan-American Oil Company was a royalty to R. J. White of 2 per cent, and a royalty to the defendants of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of all oil or gas produced therefrom; that oil was developed and produced from the leased land; and that plaintiffs are entitled to a proportionate three-fifths of the royalties paid to the defendants. The answers of the defendants contained denials of the association mentioned and of the allegations of fraud and conspiracy. By their amended answer the defendants Haberkern and Wible admitted the execution and delivery of the deed of June 4, 1910, but alleged that it was made and delivered as to said defendants in confirmation of their original locators' rights and interests to which the plaintiffs were strangers, and that nothing was to be furnished or contributed by the defendants; that on the other hand the deed as to the plaintiffs was in consideration of their joint efforts to prosecute the application of R. J. White for a patent and to procure one Coffin to do the necessary development work upon the land. They also grounded their defense on the alleged fact that the plaintiffs had abandoned their interest in the lands and in the enterprise. They admitted the lease by the United States government of a portion of said section to Pan-American Oil Company, but on a basis of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. royalty to all of the defendants, a portion of which went to the defendant Klipstein for his services.

The issues framed by the pleadings were tried before Hon. T. N. Harvey, judge of the superior court, sitting without a jury. After the trial was completed, but before he rendered his decision, Judge Harvey resigned from his office as judge of the superior court. Upon stipulation of the parties the exhibits and a transcript of the evidence and proceedings had before Judge Harvey were submitted to Hon. Pat R. Parker, judge presiding, for decision and judgment, and whose findings accorded with the view of the transaction alleged by the defendants. Judge Parker found that the transactions of April 10th and the deed of June 4, 1910, did not constitute a joint adventure; that all interest of the parties to the transaction had been abandoned on February 24, 1921, and their interests in said section 2 on said date relinquished to R. J. White. It was also found that there was no conspiracy nor any false representations and that no fraud or deceit was practiced upon any of the plaintiffs. The judgment for the defendants was accordingly made and entered.

The main contention of the plaintiffs on their appeal from the judgment is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, and principally the finding that there was not a joint venture among the plaintiffs and the defendants Haberkern and Wible which subsisted at the date when the lease transaction was consummated. If the findings of fact are supported by the record, the plaintiffs' appeal must necessarily fail. Needless to state, the evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom present a serious conflict in the record. The appellants make the contention that this court is in the same position in reviewing the evidence to determine whether the findings are supported as was the judge who made his findings and decision from the printed record. In other words, the appellants urge that, in such a case as this, namely, where the record is presented for decision to a trial judge who has not seen the witnesses and heard their testimony, the reviewing court must also determine whether the "deciding judge," as appellants have designated him, was justified in giving weight and credibility to the evidence introduced by the prevailing party; that is to say, that this court itself must determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony.

This contention calls for a declaration of the law in effect at this time with reference to the powers of the court on appeal to weigh the evidence and make findings in addition to or contrary to the findings of the trial court.

[1, 2] Prior to the adoption of section $4\frac{1}{2}$ of article 6 of the Constitution, in 1914, section $4\frac{1}{4}$ of the same article, in 1926, and section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure, in 1927 (as added by St. 1927, p. 583), it was firmly established that an appellate tribunal in this state possessed none of the functions of a jury, and that the sole province of the court on appeal was to review the action of the trial court, correct its errors, and thus pass upon questions of law only. This was the established rule at common law. Slocum v. New York Life Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 S. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879. In Bauder v. Tyrell, 59 Cal. 99, it was said: "The trial court decides as to the facts, the court of review (in this state) as to questions of law only." Such has been the unbroken rule since the adoption of the Constitution of 1879. Prior to that time this court had declared in at least two cases that when the testimony in the trial court consisted entirely of depositions, the court on appeal would examine the evidence to determine whether the trial court had correctly found the facts therefrom and would not be bound by the rule which forbids a disturbance of the judgment where there is a conflict in the evidence. Wilson v. Cross & Co., 33 Cal. 60; Lander v. Beers, 48 Cal. 546. But in 1881, in Bauder v. Tyrell, supra, and in 1892, in Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 206, 30 P. 208, 209, the court adhered to the general rule; the latter case holding that the general rule should govern even as to deposition evidence. We find therein the following significant statement: "It was said, however, in the opinion of the court in two or three cases, notably in Wilson v. Cross, 33 Cal. 60, that the reason of the rule is that the court below has the advantage of observing the appearance and bearing of the witnesses, and that such reason does not obtain when the witnesses do not appear personally in court. But it may be well argued that such is not the only reason of the rule; that it is founded in the essential distinction between the trial and the appellate court under our system, and grows out of considerations of jurisdiction; that it is the province of the trial court to decide questions of fact, of the appellate court to decide questions of law; that this court can rightfully set aside a finding for want of evidence only where there is no evidence to support it, or where the supporting evidence is so slight as to show abuse of discretion." Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 206, 214, 30 P. 208; 2 Cal. Jur. 912 et seq., and cases cited. We find no good reason for applying a different rule as between evidence consisting of the transcript of the testimony taken before another judge and deposition evidence. In neither case has the deciding judge the witnesses before him so that he may appraise their credibility, but he has the facts before him, and his findings therein, unless there is no substantial basis therefor, are final. The general rule must be applied in the present case unless the recent constitutional enactment and legislation above referred to have so modified it as to empower the court to weigh the evidence and in effect become generally a judge of the facts. Certainly section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, adopted in 1914, does not confer such power. The theory of that section is based upon the assumption that the reviewing court may find error in the record as a matter of law, and the effect of the section was to release the reviewing court from the rigid rule that prejudice was presumed from error and to enjoin upon the reviewing court the duty to declare, when confronted in the record with any one or more of the enumerated errors, whether the error found to exist has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and not to reverse the judgment unless such error be prejudicial. Whether the error found to be present "has resulted in a miscarriage of justice" presents a question of law on the record before the court, and the purpose of the section was to require the court to declare as matter of law whether the error has affected the substantial rights of the party complaining against it, and not for the purpose of determining the evidentiary value of the testimony or where the preponderance of the evidence lies. Snyder v. Miller, 29 Cal. App. 566, 575, 157 P. 22.

When we turn to section 4¾ of article 6 of the Constitution, as adopted in 1926, we find that it is not self-executing. It is a grant of power to the legislature. That section provides: "Sec. 4¾. In all cases where trial by jury is not a matter of right or where trial by jury has been waived, the legislature may grant to any court of appellate jurisdiction the power, in its discretion, to make findings of fact contrary to, or in addition to, those made by the trial court. The legislature may provide that such findings may be based on the evidence adduced before the trial court, either with or without the taking of additional evidence by the court of appellate jurisdiction. The legislature may also grant to any court of appellate jurisdiction the power, in its discretion, for the purpose of making such findings or for any other purpose in the interest of justice, to take additional evidence of or concerning facts occurring at any time prior to the decision of the appeal, and to give or direct the entry of any judgment or order and to make such further or other order as the case may require."

Pursuant to the foregoing grant of power, the Legislature adopted section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure at its session of 1927. That section is in the following language:

"In all cases where trial by jury is not a matter of right or where trial by jury has been waived, the supreme court or a district court of appeal may make findings of fact contrary to, or in addition to, those made by the trial court. Such findings may be based on the evidence adduced before the trial court either with or without the taking of evidence by the court of appellate jurisdiction, pursuant to such rules as the supreme court may prescribe.

"The said courts of appellate jurisdiction may, for the purpose of making such findings or for any other purpose in the interest of justice, take, pursuant to such rules, additional evidence of or concerning facts occurring at any time prior to the decision of the appeal and may give or direct the entry of any judgment or order and make such further or other order as the case may require. This section shall be liberally construed to the end, among others, that wherever possible causes may be finally disposed of by a single appeal and without further proceedings in the trial court, except where the interest of justice requires a new trial."

Following the effective date of the new section, this court adopted rule XXXVIII, prescribing the method of procedure for taking additional evidence, either on the court's own motion or on application of a party to the action—in either case on notice to the parties to be affected thereby.

When section 4½ of article 6 was presented for adoption to the electors of the state, the argument in its favor (and there was no opposing argument) stated:

"This amendment empowers the legislature to grant to the appellate courts the right in non-jury cases, where a judgment is based on findings of fact which are unwarranted or insufficient, to make new findings and to direct the entry of a different judgment in accordance with the new findings. This will enable the appellate courts to dispose of many cases finally on one appeal, whereas now the appellate court must always send cases back to the trial court for retrial and the making of new findings, even though it conclusively appears from the record what the findings should be.

"The other important power given the legislature is to authorize the appellate courts to take new evidence on appeal concerning matters which occurred prior to trial in the lower court or pending the appeal. It often happens that a litigant neglects to prove some simple fact in the trial court which is essential to his case and which, if he could prove it in the appellate court, would produce a result favorable to him. The right to take new evidence on appeal will also enable more cases to be finally disposed of on the first appeal, and will bring about a more just disposition of cases. The appellate courts will not develop into trial courts because they will undoubtedly exercise this power sparingly and will refer any complicated questions of new evidence to the trial court or a referee for hearing.

"The amendment works for elasticity, simplicity and expedition of procedure."

In line with the purpose of the proposed constitutional amendment, as disclosed by its language and the very appropriate argument in its favor, the Legislature incorporated the final sentence in section 956a, as follows: "This section shall be liberally construed to the end, among others, that wherever possible causes may be finally disposed of by a single appeal and without further proceedings in the trial court, except where the interest of justice requires a new trial." Neither the constitutional amendment nor section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure was intended to abrogate the general rule respecting the powers of the trial court in its determination of questions of fact or the rule that the reviewing court is bound by the findings of the trial court if based upon substantial evidence. It is plain that in order to transform or convert appellate tribunals into triers of fact and thus require them to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, the intention so to do must be clearly disclosed. The respective provinces of the trial and reviewing courts are so distinct and well defined and of such long standing that in order so to do it must clearly appear that it was the purpose of the new law to uproot the old system and supplant it with a fact-finding appellate system. This we do not believe to have been the purpose of the changes in the law. In other words, it was not the purpose generally to so confuse the functions of the respective courts as to make the findings of the trial courts, when based on substantial evidence, merely recommendations as, for example, the finding of a referee or commissioner.

We arrive at the foregoing conclusion without detracting in the least from what we believe to be the true meaning and purpose of the new law. In the light of the history of the constitutional amendment and the phraseology of the legislation adopted pursuant thereto, and having in contemplation the evils or defects in practice and procedure thus attempted to be remedied, we perceive the primary and principal purpose of the change in the law to be that, whenever possible, and the interests of justice would seem to require, the reviewing court should have the power to make new findings contrary to or in addition to those made by the trial court, either on the record presented or on new evidence to be taken under the direction of the court, all with reference to material issues framed by the pleadings, to the end that the judgment or order appealed from may be affirmed and further litigation terminated, and where otherwise under the old practice the judgment or order would have to be reversed. The evils intended to be remedied by this primary and principal purpose of the legislation were, for example, the requirement under the old practice that when the trial court failed to find on a material issue the decision was against law and the judgment or order would have to be reversed (see 24 Cal. Jur. p. 940 et seq. and cases cited), notwithstanding the fact that there existed in the record ample evidence to support a finding in favor of the party prevailing in the trial court if a finding on the issue had been made and no contrary conclusion from the evidence could reasonably be drawn; in which event, under the new practice, the reviewing court could make the omitted finding, affirm the judgment and thus terminate the litigation. Again, the requirement under the old practice that where the prevailing party had omitted to prove a fact to support a finding in his favor the judgment must be reversed notwithstanding the obvious ability of the prevailing party to prove such fact. In such case the court of review could, under the new practice, order proof of such fact, either on its own motion, or on application of the party interested, make a finding thereon and, if favorable to the prevailing party, affirm the judgment and terminate the litigation. An illustration of the state of the old practice in this regard is found in the case of Central Sav. Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 62 Cal. App. 588, 217 P. 563, where the judgment was reversed because the prevailing party had omitted to prove the formal substitution of trustees in a suit involving the validity of a sale under a trust deed. The case was reversed for that reason and on retrial the proof of the substitution was made. Central Sav. Bank of Oakland v. Lake, 201 Cal. 438, 257 P. 521. Under the present practice the reviewing court on the first appeal could have taken evidence of the fact omitted to be proved at the trial, made a finding thereon, affirmed the judgment, and thus terminated the litigation. Other illustrations might be given, but sufficient have been noted to indicate defects in the old procedure intended to be remedied by the new law to the end "that wherever possible causes may be finally disposed of by a single appeal and without further proceedings in the trial court."

[3, 4] When the reviewing court is importuned by the appellant, as in the present case, to make findings on the evidence in the record contrary to the findings of the trial court and to reverse the judgment on the findings so made on appeal and to give or direct the entry of a judgment in favor of the appellant, a more complex situation is presented. It may not be gainsaid that the language of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, followed in hæc verba in section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure, purports in terms to vest in the reviewing court the power "to give" any judgment in the appellate tribunal which the case might seem to require. It needs no argument to support the statement that the power "to give" a judgment is tantamount to the power "to render" or "to pronounce" a judgment. But the power to render a judgment thus purported to be given an appellate tribunal cannot be interpreted to mean that the court on appeal would have the power to render in such court any judgment which the case on the record might seem ultimately to require. It is beyond question that under the new law the court on appeal may, on the findings made contrary to the findings of the trial court or in addition thereto on the record evidence, or pursuant to new evidence taken in the reviewing court, render such a judgment in the reviewing court as would affirm or modify and affirm the judgment of the trial court, thus terminating the litigation. But if the reviewing court should assume to make contrary or additional findings, or findings on new evidence taken, and on such findings reverse the judgment and render and enter in the reviewing court a judgment for the appellant, this singular and impossible situation would be presented: The records of the trial court would disclose a judgment for the respondent with no authority in law for the clerk of the trial court to issue process thereon except in accordance with the terms of the contrary judgment entered in the trial court. The records of the reviewing court would disclose a judgment for the appellant, with no means prescribed by law for the issuance of process out of the office of the clerk of the reviewing court for the enforcement of the judgment.

[5] The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable that upon a reversal of a judgment the cause must be remanded and further proceedings be taken in the trial court. If the judgment of the reviewing court be a straight order of reversal, a new trial must be had upon the going down of the remittitur. If the judgment of the reviewing court be an order of reversal with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment in favor of the appellant, the party against whom a judgment for the first time is rendered, namely, the respondent on the appeal, would have the right to move for a new trial or to take an appeal from the judgment so entered, or he might do both. See Estate of Baird, 198 Cal. 490, 246 P. 324; Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 P. 876; section 963, Code Civ. Proc. It is true that the new law in terms purports to vest in the reviewing court the power to direct the trial court to enter a judgment for the appellant. But such direction can be effectual only upon a reversal of the judgment appealed from, and, as has been stated, the judgment entered pursuant to such direction does not terminate the litigation. It may be true in a practical sense that the judgment on appeal may so establish the law of the case as to make further proceedings in the trial court or a subsequent appeal from the directed judgment futile. But such has always been the law. Reviewing courts in this state had the power upon reversal to direct the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the appellant long prior to the enactment of the new law under consideration. This power, however, has been exercised sparingly and should be exercised only when, upon a full consideration of the record, the party against whom the judgment is for the first time entered in the trial court could not successfully meet the contentions of his adversary upon a retrial or reconsideration of the case in the trial court. We are convinced that it was not the intention of the new law that the reviewing courts should develop generally into trial courts; that it was contemplated that the courts of appellate jurisdiction would exercise the new power sparingly and, as a general rule, would exercise it only when the purpose of the new findings was to constitute a basis for an affirmance of the judgment or a basis for a reversal of the judgment with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment for the appellant.

[6] It is obvious that, if new findings be made by the reviewing court, and the judgment based on such findings on appeal be a straight order of reversal, or an order of reversal with a remanding for a new trial, the reviewing courts to that extent would be usurping the power of the trial court as an arbitrator of the facts. And if new findings be made as a basis of a reversal, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment for the appellant, it must appear from the record or from the new evidence taken that on no theory grounded in reason and justice could the party defeated on appeal make a further substantial showing in the trial court in support of his cause.

[7] We therefore conclude, on this branch of the case, that by the adoption of section 4¾ of article 6 of the Constitution and the enactment of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure it was not intended to convert the appellate tribunals of the state into triers of fact, nor to abrogate the general rule that findings of the trial court founded on substantial evidence are conclusive on appeal; that the effect of the new law is to create and establish an exception to the general rule; that the primary and principal purpose of this exception is to enable the reviewing courts to make contrary or additional findings on the record presented or on new evidence taken, to the end that the judgment be affirmed or modified and affirmed and the litigation be terminated; that when the judgment appealed from must be reversed and a new trial is ordered, either pursuant to a general order of reversal or a specific remanding of the cause for a new trial, findings of fact by the reviewing court become inappropriate and unauthorized; and that when the judgment appealed from is to be reversed and the trial court is to be directed to enter a judgment for the appellant, the reviewing court may make findings in support of the judgment so to be entered, but this power should be exercised with caution, and only when it may be declared, as matter of law, that the respondent could not make a substantial showing in support of his cause if a new trial were had, or that the respondent could not, or should not in the interests of justice, make or be permitted to make a further showing upon a retrial if one should be had. This construction of the new law not only preserves generally the fundamental distinction between the functions of the trial courts and the appellate tribunals, but also affords to litigants and the cause of justice the relief which the recent law intended to afford.

[8] In the light of the foregoing observations as to the powers of the court on appeal, we approach the question of whether the findings of the trial court in favor of the defendants herein are supported by substantial evidence in the record. If we find them so supported, the judgment must be affirmed.

Among the facts presented in the record favorable to the defendants, and which, taken as true, fairly and sufficiently support the findings and judgment, are the following: During the year 1910 and prior thereto the plaintiff H. I. Tupman was president of the Kern County Abstract Company in Bakersfield. The plaintiff C. V. Anderson, an attorney at law, was employed as manager and also performed legal services when required. The defendant Klipstein was employed as secretary in charge of the abstracting department. The plaintiff Fred V. Gordon, throughout these and other transactions, was an associate of the plaintiff Tupman.

The defendants Haberkern and Wible were oil and mining property operators and had known and had had dealings with Tupman and Klipstein for a period of 15 or 20 years. Prior to 1910, Tupman, Klipstein, Haberkern, and Wible had followed the procedure of locating and acquiring public mineral lands of the United States in the naval reserve area known as "Elk Hills," upon the basis of discoveries of gypsum or of fullers' earth. This had become customary because, though the land was reputed to contain oil, prospecting for oil was so expensive and burdensome that locations and applications for patent were being made on the basis of discoveries of fullers' earth, gypsum, or other such placer minerals. Consequently, R. J. White and members of his family, the plaintiff Tupman and the defendants Haberkern, Wible and Klipstein, all made or participated in the making of a large number of locations in eight or more sections in the Elk Hills district. Neither Tupman nor Klipstein participated in any of the Red Top locations made in section two by locators including R. J. White and members of his family and the defendants Haberkern and Wible. A large group, including Tupman, Klipstein, Haberkern, Wible, and members of the White family, laid claim to the largest and most valuable area in the first naval reserve. This group, with the exception of the White family, organized the "Eight Oil Company," and its interests and the so-called "White" interests were segregated, the latter retaining section two involved here. Still another independent group in which Haberkern, Wible, and Tupman were also interested, located a number of claims which have been designated in the record as the "Munzer locations." The plaintiff Tupman conducted much of the detail concerning the transactions among the parties to this controversy. In fact, Tupman, Haberkern, Klipstein, and Wible were interested extensively in oil and mining transactions. It was in evidence that: "Mr. Tupman had handled virtually all of the contracts, papers and details of that nature for all of our Elk Hills matters. Those matters were very extensive. Over a period of about 15 years." The interests of the locators in section 2 were, about April, 1910, deeded to R. J. White for the purpose of his securing a patent title from the United States government in his name. The defendant Wible testified: "Mr. White, Mr. Haberkern and myself were all located in section 2. My and Mr. Haberkern's title was vested in Mr. White ultimately for him to secure a patent."

About that time the plaintiff Tupman had some negotiations with R. J. White as a result of which he procured for Mr. White a Mr. Coffin to do the development work on the claims in section 2 on a "fifty-fifty" basis, and a contract on that basis was entered into between White and Coffin. On June 4, 1910, R. J. White executed a deed whereby he conveyed a one-seventh interest in the Red Top locations to each of the plaintiffs and the defendants Haberkern and Wible, and a one-seventh interest to his son R. E. White, retaining thereby a one-seventh interest in himself. It was in evidence that this deed was made subject to White's contract with Coffin, and that it remained off the record for the purpose of facilitating application for patent in the name of R. J. White only. As a reason for the fact that Anderson and Gordon were made grantees, it was in evidence that at about that time the plaintiff Tupman stated to the defendant Klipstein that the latter was not declared "in" on the transaction because he (Tupman) had "carried" Klipstein in other deals and that he wanted Anderson and Gordon "in" on this transaction.

The application for patent to the Red Top claims was sent by Tupman to Mr. Perkins, an attorney at law residing in Visalia. The application was contested and an answer to the contest was prepared by Perkins and sent to Tupman to be verified by White. Tupman sent the answer back without the verification and allowed the matter to go by default. An application to have it reopened, however, was made, "when," as Mr. Tupman testified, "the situation had changed somewhat, was more hopeful, looked as if there was a chance to succeed in getting consideration on our Eight Oil application. * * * Prior to that, a number of years ago, we had taken up with Mr. Coffin the question of getting more money. One reason we were so indifferent about this was the absence of anybody to put up money. * * * We anticipated no losses. If our interests matured into something we could dispose of, we naturally would make a profit out of it. Our five-sevenths interest, that is, the five-sevenths interest of the parties to this joint enterprise, was to come to them absolutely clear of any expense for the supervising of the work of Coffin, and the expense of applying for patent, defending any actions brought against us, any protest against the patent, and any other expenses incidental to procuring a patent to the land; we were not to pay for any assistance furnished to Mr. Perkins to enable him to procure patent for this land. That was included in the price that Mr. Coffin paid. Coffin was to pay Perkins for procuring the patent, besides doing all the work necessary for the application for patent. I think the agreement so states. We were not to supervise Perkins also. In return for our five-sevenths interest we in regard to this application for patent were to do whatever we could to help the thing along. You see we had been busy for some time, attempting to get patent for the Eight Oil Company; it took our time and attention. It was understood we would do what we could to assist the matter along."

The trial court's finding as to the nature of the inception of the enterprise and the character of each person's interest therein is further borne out by a letter written by Mr. Tupman to Mr. Perkins at Visalia, dated June 30, 1911, in which the former states: "Re Section 2, 31/24. All of the work performed on the above described section prior to the 10th day of April, 1910, was done by and for the original locators. Under date of April 10, 1910, Fred V. Gordon, C. V. Anderson and H. I. Tupman acquired an undivided interest in the section, C. F. Haberkern, R. J. White, S. P. Wible, and R. E. White of the original locators retaining an interest. The consideration for the transfer of interest to the last named parties was a valuable one. H. T. Coffin's interest as you understand, is that acquired under a contract made under which he advanced the additional money needed on the 10th day of April, for the further development of the land. * * *

Subsequent to these events the government withdrew from mineral entry the Elk Hills lands in Kern county and created Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1 in that county. On February 25, 1920, Congress passed what was called the "Federal Oil Land Leasing Act" (41 Stat. 437). Pursuant to that enactment the government, in order to clear that reserve of all clouds, claims, and litigation, adopted the policy of making compromise concessions to persons who had made valid locator's claims within the area by patenting to them other lands, or leasing lands within the reserve for a royalty consideration and a relinquishment of their claims. Throughout the record it is apparent that the White claims for a patent were not considered to have much value for the reason that they were based on fullers' earth discoveries of doubtful merit and for the further reason that it had not been established that claims to a mineral patent could be based on discoveries of fullers' earth. It was admittedly questionable whether the White claims had more than a "nuisance" value by reason of their being an uncanceled cloud on the government's title to section 2 in the First Naval Reserve.

In the fall of 1920 representatives of the Eight Oil Company, of which Tupman, Haberkern, Wible, and Klipstein were four of the five directors, were working to effect a compromise with the government "under which the Eight Oil Company by surrendering all of its interest would be enabled to get certain land without dispute and free from any claim, either in the form of a working agreement or lease." The record supports the following brief statement of the history of these efforts: During the negotiations and early in 1921 government representatives required that interests in section 2 of all Eight Oil Company members be surrendered. This was at a time when the claims to section 2 were to be settled along with its own and other claims in the compromise which the Eight Oil Company was endeavoring to effect. About this time Mr. Tupman by telephonic communication with a representative at Washington authorized the representation to government officials that none of the parties hereto who were members of that company, specifically referring to himself, Haberkern, and Wible, claimed any interest in section 2. Tupman confirmed his oral representation as to Haberkern and Wible, who appeared in the abstract record as original locators, by a telegram to the title searcher at Washington in Wible's name. There is additional evidence that both Haberkern and Wible represented that they were disclaiming interest in section 2 for the purpose of effecting a compromise of the Eight Oil Company's interests and claims. Tupman testified that he was "working for the interest of the Eight Oil Company" and "didn't want to have that deal held up." It may parenthetically be stated at this point that unquestionably the interests of the plaintiffs Anderson and Gordon were controlled by Tupman throughout. A compromise of the claims of the Eight Oil Company, joining with the Munzer, Doheny, and other interests with the exception of the White record interests, was finally concluded in 1921. Tupman, Haberkern, and Wible reported to White that they were unable to "get anything for section 2," and apparently that was thought to be an end of the White claims. However, a few months later, a government representative voluntarily stated to Klipstein that a compromise settlement of the locators' rights in section 2 might then be favorably considered for the reason that it had become known to Washington officials that section 2 was being drained by wells belonging to the Pacific Oil Company on section 35 adjoining. Klipstein took the matter up with Coffin and with White, as a result of which a six months' option was given to Klipstein signed by White and Coffin which was at its expiration renewed to Klipstein and Wible. Wible agreed to divide his compensation with Haberkern in consideration of the latter's assistance in obtaining the new option agreement from White and Coffin. Their efforts finally were accelerated by the fact that the government called for bids on section 2 and it became necessary immediately to interest some concern or group in bidding for a lease on said section. Klipstein and Wible took up the matter with Pan-American Oil Company, with whom they made the following agreement: "For and in consideration of one dollar ($1.00), the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, we hereby agree that in case you make a compromise with the Government under the claim of R. J. White, on section 2-31-24, Elk Hills, within thirty days (30) from date, we do hereby agree to have all interest of R. J. White and H. T. Coffin, in above mentioned lands, quitclaimed to yourself or the Government, for the consideration of your agreeing to pay us seven and one-half per cent. royalty, out of which we agree to settle in full with R. J. White and H. T. Coffin. This gives you an exclusive option for thirty days (30) from date, of the R. J. White claim upon this section of land (2-31-24). T. E. Klipstein S. P. Wible." With this instrument and the option agreement to Klipstein and Wible signed by White and Coffin, the Pan-American Oil Company succeeded in having its bid for a lease of the northerly 1000 feet of section 2 accepted. This transaction terminated the so-called "White interests" in section 2.

The appellants assign forty specifications or particulars in which they claim the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and decision. But a careful review of the evidence printed in the bill of exceptions and consideration of the arguments of counsel does not disclose that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. The conclusion or theory amply supported is that if any joint enterprise was created by the transaction of June 4, 1910, its purpose and object was frustrated largely by the government's withdrawal from mineral entry lands in the Elk Hills district and the navy department's contesting the locators' claims theretofore made to those lands. It was recognized by all the parties that the White claims thereafter constituted but a questionable cloud on the government's title, which in fact had so little value in the estimation of the government officials themselves and the parties hereto that those interested outside of White preferred to disclaim or abandon any claimed interest rather than hold up a settlement of claims in which they were also interested and which appeared more likely to produce returns. So lightly did the government consider the White claimants that it called for bids on section 2, and the only chance which White had to obtain anything for his interest in section 2 was to act on the suggestion made to and followed up by Klipstein, without any evidence of a conspiracy or an intention to cheat, that a "trade" with the government might better be accomplished by a prospective bidder who could offer a relinquishment of the White claims, which, it is fair to assume under the evidence, initiated an entirely new venture concerning these claims or interests after the abandonment thereof by all concerned except White. See Commercial Bank v. Weldon, 148 Cal. 601, 84 P. 171.

Furthermore, if it be assumed, as contended by the plaintiffs, that a joint enterprise originally existed, the personnel of that original joint adventure was not perpetuated. The original group included R. J. White, the plaintiff Tupman, and the defendants. Upon the execution of the deed of June 4, 1910, R. J. White took title to the Red Top claims in trust for his grantees under the unrecorded deed. The personnel of the joint enterprise thereby became crystallized in R. J. White and his son R. E. White, the plaintiffs and the defendants other than Klipstein. By the deed of June 4, 1910, Klipstein was eliminated. Tupman testified that he told Klipstein at the time that he was not included in the new arrangement. Klipstein apparently considered himself out and has made no contention to the contrary. He was thereafter in position to deal with freedom with any one or all of those interested in the "White" claims. The difficulties of the Eight Oil Company finally were adjusted and the government's title to section 2 had been cleared except as to the nebulous claims of the beneficiaries under the title held by R. J. White, and Klipstein was not one of them. The United States government desired to lease section 2 or a portion thereof for the reason that the oil wells on section 35 adjoining and belonging to the Pacific Oil Company were draining section 2. One of the attorneys in the department of justice attending to legal matters on behalf of the federal government in connection with clearing the title to section 2 knew of the claims of R. J. White and his associates, and suggested to Klipstein that it would be of advantage in awarding the lease on section 2 if the so-called "White" claims could be cleared up at the same time. Klipstein thereupon saw Mr. Coffin in Los Angeles, who admittedly had acquired a one-half interest in whatever White and his associates claimed. Thereafter, under date of May 17, 1921, a written option was given to Klipstein, signed by Coffin and R. J. White, agreeing to transfer to Klipstein one-half of what Coffin and White might recover on the settlement of the latter's claims. This option was to run for a period of six months from its date. When the six months was about to expire, Klipstein desired to obtain a renewal of the option, but further handling of the matter entailed additional expense. Whereupon he made a proposition to Wible that if Wible would go in with him he would share the proceeds, if any, with him. The two went to Los Angeles and obtained an extension of the option running, however, to both Wible and Klipstein. Some time thereafter the Secretary of the Interior sent out letters calling for bids on a strip of land on section 2. Klipstein and Wible endeavored to enlist the interest of Mr. J. C. Anderson of the Pan-American Oil Company in obtaining an adjustment of the claims of White and Coffin in and to said lands. Upon the agreement of Haberkern to share Wible's expense in the matter, the latter agreed to divide whatever the former might realize.

The transactions of the parties need not be further recounted. Suffice it to say that there is ample evidence in the record that whatever joint enterprise existed in the first instance had been abandoned long before Klipstein's activities in obtaining the options. Furthermore, we find no basis for the contention of the plaintiffs that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the defendants were not guilty of any fraud in connection with their dealings with the plaintiffs or with the so-called White and Coffin interests.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

PRESTON, J. I concur. But I think it should be emphasized that the door is open to appellants and respondents alike to ask for the introduction of new evidence or a reconsideration of the evidence already in the record.

I agree that in the matter of the introduction of new evidence and the making of new or contrary findings, the power should be sparingly exercised, and that unless it can be seen that controlling questions will be thereby introduced, all such applications should be denied.

I agree further that in a certain sense formal findings are not necessary or appropriate in causes where a reversal is ordered. But the order of reversal upon the new evidence, or on a reconsideration of the evidence, is tantamount to a finding for the appellant. In such a case, the proper practice in most instances would seem to be to direct the proper judgment to be entered by the trial court. If the opportunity to resort to the new procedure is equal and coexistent between the litigants and is restricted to the consideration of only such questions as will determine the course of the litigation, I see no reason why this innovation may not work for justice and the dispatch of causes pending in the courts.

JOHNSTON v. WOLF et al. (L. A. 11443.)

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1929.

1. Appeal and error Ⓒ32—Whether appeal lies to appellate court from superior court's judgment, affirming, modifying, or reversing judgment of municipal court, depends on whether cause of action arose in city where municipal court was located (Const. art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928 (see St. 1927, p. 2386), whether an appeal to District Court of Appeal lies from judgment of superior court affirming, modifying, or reversing judgment of municipal court, whose jurisdiction is established by Deering's Gen. Laws Consol. Supp. 1925-1927, p. 1607, depends on the place where cause of action arose, as disclosed by record, whether inside or outside limits of incorporated city wherein municipal court is situated.

2. Constitutional law Ⓒ22—Amendment to Constitution relating to appellate court jurisdiction became law on date people ratified it (Const. art. 18, § 1; art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928).

Amendment in 1928 to Const. art. 6, § 4b (see St. 1927, p. 2386), relating to appellate jurisdiction of District Courts of Appeal on appeal from superior courts, held to have become law on date it was ratified by the people, under Const. art. 18, § 1, providing that, if people shall approve and ratify amendment by majority of qualified electors voting thereon, amendment shall become part of Constitution.

3. Appeal and error Ⓒ32—In determining appellate court's jurisdiction, cause of action for nonpayment of trade acceptance is considered as arising at place designated for payment.

In determining whether District Court of Appeal had appellate jurisdiction on appeal from judgment of superior court, affirming judgment of municipal court in action on a trade acceptance, assumption is that cause of action arose at place designated in instrument for its payment.

4. Evidence Ⓒ10(2)—Judicial notice taken that Florence, Cal., is outside city of Los Angeles.

District Court of Appeal takes judicial notice of fact that Florence, Cal., is outside the city limits of the city of Los Angeles.

5. Appeal and error Ⓒ32—Original jurisdiction of action on trade acceptance payable at Florence was in superior court, instead of Los Angeles municipal court, and appellate jurisdiction in District Court of Appeal (Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928).

Where trade acceptance for less than $1,000 was made payable at Florence, Cal., cause of action arose there, and original jurisdiction in action thereon for nonpayment was in superior court, instead of municipal court of Los Angeles, where action was instituted and appellate jurisdiction thereof in District Court of Appeal, under Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928 (see St. 1927, p. 2386).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by R. G. Johnston against Robert Wolf and Louis Wolf, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Wolf Cabinet & Furniture Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the superior court, and defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 274 P. 1028.

Andreani & Haines, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, and David A. Sondel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. A petition for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, was granted in this case to permit of further consideration of the questions involved upon the appeal, because there was presented a new problem in interpretation of a recent constitutional amendment. After careful consideration, we are in accord with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, written by Justice Ira F. Thompson, and adopt the same as and for the opinion of this court as follows:

This is a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. The facts are as follows:

The respondent commenced an action in the municipal court of Los Angeles, in which he sought to recover from the defendants the sum of $680.75. Judgment was rendered in his favor on the 21st day of June, 1928, in the amount prayed for, and on July 19, 1928, the defendants and appellants took an appeal therefrom to the superior court. On November 28, 1928, the last-named court rendered its decision, affirming the judgment of the municipal court. On December 12, 1928, appellants filed a notice of appeal from the judgment of the superior court to this court.

At the last general election, held November 6, 1928, the people ratified a constitutional amendment, proposed by the Legislature (see St. 1927, p. 2386), containing among other things, an amendment to section 4b of article 6, which, so far as pertinent to the question here involved, reads: "The District Courts of Appeal shall have appellate jurisdiction on appeal from the superior courts except in cases in which appellate jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court in all cases at law in which the superior courts are given original jurisdiction. * * * Section 5 of the same article of the Constitution, amended at the same time, now states in part as follows: "The superior courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases and proceedings except as in this article otherwise provided, and except, also, cases and proceedings in which jurisdiction is or shall be given by law to municipal or to justices' or other inferior courts. * * * The superior courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in municipal and in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties or cities and counties as may be prescribed by law." Sections 983, 984, 985 (added by St. 1925, p. 942, and amended by St. 1927, p. 118, §§ 1-3, and sections 986, 987, 988, 988a-988h, of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 118, §§ 4-14), provide for appeals from the municipal to the superior courts, and a comprehensive mode of procedure for the hearing and disposition thereof. Section 29 of the act authorizing the establishment of municipal courts, etc. (Deering's Gen. Laws Consol. Supp. 1925-1927, p. 1607), provides that municipal courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all cases at law in which the demand exclusive of interest amounts to $1,000 or less arising in the city where the court exists, and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior and justices' courts of causes of like amount arising outside the city but within the county in which the court is situated. Finally, section 13 of article 6 of the Constitution, also amended at the last election, gives to the Legislature the right to fix by law the jurisdiction of the municipal courts and concludes with this language: "Any action heretofore taken by the Legislature in fixing exclusive jurisdiction of municipal courts in cases at law is hereby ratified and confirmed."

[1] It would seem that nothing had been overlooked which would make it clear and inevitable that the superior courts, and the superior courts only, should have appellate jurisdiction of causes tried in the municipal courts, where the last-named courts have exclusive original jurisdiction. It must be manifest, however, from the language of section 4b of article 6 that the Constitution vests in the District Courts of Appeal appellate jurisdiction of all appeals from the superior court, where the latter possesses original jurisdiction, and not merely in those cases where the original jurisdiction is exercised. The words employed are "all cases at law in which the superior courts are given original jurisdiction." It cannot be gainsaid that they are given original jurisdiction of cases in excess of the jurisdiction of justices' courts and under $1,000 arising outside the limits of an incorporated city which has a municipal court but within the county. Over such causes they have concurrent original jurisdiction with the municipal courts. Whether an appeal to this court lies from a judgment of the superior court affirming, modifying, or reversing a judgment of the municipal court, therefore, depends upon where the cause of action arose as disclosed by the record—whether inside or outside the limits of the incorporated city where the municipal court is situated.

[2] In our discussion of the problem we have assumed that the constitutional amendment embodying the changes we have mentioned went into effect on November 6, 1928, the date when it was ratified by the people. That it may not be thought we have overlooked this feature of the case, we now assert that to be the law. The closing sentence of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution, in referring to amendments submitted by the Legislature, says: "If the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, or any of them, by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this Constitution." In Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 122, 36 P. 424, 427 (25 L. R. A. 312), it is said that it is beyond the power of the Legislature to submit an amendment "that will not, upon its adoption by the people, become an effective part of the Constitution, nor is it authorized to propose an amendment which, if ratified, will take effect only at the will of other persons, or upon the approval by such persons of some specific act or condition." And in Kingsbury v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 574, 99 P. 985, the court aptly states: "It is beyond dispute that the amendment went into effect upon its adoption and ratification." A similarly succinct statement is found in San Francisco v. Pac. Tel. & Teleg. Co., 166 Cal. 244-252, 135 P. 971, 975, as follows: "The amendment, which is by its own terms * * * self-executing, was adopted at an election held on November 8, 1910, and became a part of the organic law on that date."

[3-5] But one question remains. Where did the cause of action arise? The affidavit supporting this motion says that the complaint alleges "that defendants accepted a trade acceptance in the sum of $680.75, payable at the Florence National Bank, Florence, Cal., to Brents' Furniture Company." For the purposes hereof we must say that the cause of action arose at the place designated in the instrument for its payment. The breach must be held to have occurred at the place the appellants were bound by their promise to pay. Raphael v. People's Bank of Benicia, 45 Cal. App. 115, 187 P. 53. We take judicial notice of the fact that Florence, Cal., is outside the city limits of Los Angeles, and for that reason conclude that original jurisdiction of the action was given to the superior court, and appellate jurisdiction to this court.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨32—Right of appeal to District Court of Appeals from judgment of superior court reversing judgment of municipal court held not affected by fact action was transferred from superior court of another county (Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928).

Right of defendant under Const. art. 6, §§ 4b and 5, as amended in 1928, to appeal to District Court of Appeals from judgment of superior court reversing judgment of municipal court, with directions to enter new judgment after action had been transferred from superior court of another county, is the same as the right to appeal from any other judgment of the municipal court, and fact that defendant would have right of appeal from judgment of superior court transferring action would not give him right of appeal from judgment rendered.

2. Constitutional law ⇨249—Courts ⇨160—Constitutional provision relating to appeal from municipal court does not deny equal protection (Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 4b and 5, as amended in 1928, relating to appeal from municipal court, is not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, guaranteeing equal protection of the laws.

3. Constitutional law ⇨23—Constitutional amendment relating to remedy only held to govern right to appeal, though action was commenced prior to adoption of amendment (Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928).

Since Const. art. 6, §§ 4b and 5, as amended in 1928, governing appeals from municipal courts, relate to remedy only, it governs right to appeal from judgment of superior court reversing judgment of municipal court, with directions to enter new judgment, though action in question was commenced prior to adoption of constitutional amendment.

LANGDON, J. A petition for hearing in this court, after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 1, was granted in this case to permit of further consideration of the questions involved upon the appeal, because they included an attack upon the validity of a recent constitutional amendment. After careful consideration, we are in accord with the decision of the District Court of Appeal, written by Justice Frederick W. Houser, and adopt, as and for the opinion of this court, said decision which is as follows:

On motion to dismiss appeal. There are two judgments of the superior court, and two appeals, in form; but, in substance, they are one judgment and one appeal, and will be so considered for the purposes of this decision.

The action upon which the proceeding before this court is predicated was upon a bond executed and delivered within the city of Los Angeles. Plaintiff originally filed a complaint in the county of Ventura. On motion presented by defendant to the superior court of that county, the place of trial was changed from Ventura county to the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, in which court a trial resulted in judgment for plaintiff. On appeal to the superior court of the county of Los Angeles from the judgment, and from an order made after judgment, the judgment and order of the municipal court were reversed, and the case was remanded to the municipal court with directions to enter a new judgment in favor of the defendant and against plaintiff. From the judgment in the superior court plaintiff has appealed to this court, and the present proceeding is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that this court is without jurisdiction to entertain or act upon the appeal attempted to be taken.

[1] It is contended by the defendant that, under the provisions of sections 4b and 5 of article 6 of the Constitution as amended in 1928, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. In resisting the motion to dismiss the appeal, plaintiff urges that, inasmuch as the cause of action was "transitory," the superior court of Ventura county had jurisdiction thereof. The argument seems to be that, as he would have had a right of appeal to this court from a judgment of the superior court of Ventura county, if a judgment had been rendered against him in that court, he has a right of appeal to this court from the judgment when rendered against him by any other court to which the cause was transferred. We fail to see that any such conclusion follows. The action having been transferred to the municipal court, the right of appeal from its judgment was in no respect different from the right to appeal from any other judgment of that court.

[2] Plaintiff also maintains that section 4b of article 6 of the Constitution is violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees "to each person the equal protection of the laws." In principle, the case of Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989, is decisive of the point against plaintiff's contention. See, also, Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 7 S. Ct. 350, 30 L. Ed. 578; Zikos v. Oregon R. & N. Co. (C. C.) 179 F. 893.

[3] Finally, plaintiff urges that, because at the time the action was commenced (which was prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendment to which reference has been had) he had a right of appeal to this court, such right could not be taken from him by subsequent legislative or constitutional enactment. However, aside from other considerations, it is clear that, so far as the instant matter is concerned, as the constitutional amendment in question related to a change in remedy only, the point advanced by appellant is not well taken. People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148; Pacific Gas Radiator Co. v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 200, 232 P. 995.

The motion to dismiss the appeals is granted, and the appeals are dismissed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

PRESTON, J. I concur in this judgment. But, in order to prevent confusion between this cause and the opinion in the case of Johnston v. Wolf (L. A. No. 11443) 280 P. 980, it should be specially noted that the cause of action here arose within the jurisdiction of the municipal court of Los Angeles. This is not a case arising in a county where no municipal court exists, and transferred under section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure to a municipal court for trial. Under the reasoning of Johnston v. Wolf, supra, I take it the right of appeal in such a case would not be abridged by transfer to a municipal court for trial and judgment.

In burglary prosecution, old finger print card in possession of police before commission of burglary held inadmissible; the fact that it was inspected by finger print expert during investigation preceding arrest of accused not authorizing its introduction for sole purpose of showing that accused had previously been in hands of police.

Refusal of instructions on circumstantial evidence and reasonable doubt held not erroneous, where the jury were adequately instructed on such matters.

5. Criminal law §1186(4)—Errors in trial of burglary prosecution held not harmless (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Errors in trial of burglary prosecution, particularly introduction of old finger print apparently merely for purpose of showing that accused had previously been in hands of police, held not harmless error, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of the unsatisfactory character of the evidence.

PRESTON, J. After a careful reconsideration of this cause, we are pleased to adopt in part, as follows, the opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice Works of the Second Appellate District, as the opinion of this court in bank herein:

"Defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] "It is first contended by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. The complaining witness, a woman, left an apartment in which she resided at about 10 o'clock on a certain evening. Before she departed, she saw in their accustomed places in the apartment certain articles which were ascertained, later in the night, to have been abstracted therefrom. It was because of the disappearance of these articles that the charge was made against appellant upon which he was convicted. When the complaining witness left her apartment, she drove in her automobile to a certain residence, where she met appellant, who theretofore had been her associate and friend, and some other persons, among whom was one Akins. Shortly after she arrived at this place of meeting, the complaining witness discovered that a dog she had brought with her had disappeared. She then gave to appellant a bunch of keys, including those to her car, to the exterior door of the apartment house in which she lived, to her apartment, and to her trunk, and she asked appellant to drive her car about the neighborhood of the residence mentioned, in an endeavor to find the missing dog. This was the purpose of the delivery of the keys. Appellant immediately departed upon the quest, taking Akins with him. The two returned, after an absence of from 25 to 45 minutes, with the dog. After some considerable time spent at the residence, and after having been to a restaurant for supper, together with Akins and a fourth person, appellant and the prosecuting witness drove to the latter's apartment and entered it by means of her keys, which had meanwhile been returned to her. They reached the apartment at about 2:30 in the morning. From certain appearances about the rooms it was apparent to the prosecuting witness that the place had been entered during her absence. She at once unlocked her trunk with a key on the bunch she had earlier entrusted to appellant. She testified that four diamond rings, of the value of $4,000, together with $140 in currency, had been taken from drawers in the trunk.

"The evidence tended to show that the burglar had entered the apartment by means of a key, as there was no indication that the place had been broken into, in the ordinary acceptance of that term. The drawers in the trunk, five in number, were held in place by a metal bar which passed across their front and which it was necessary to move before they could be opened. The police found a print of appellant's thumb upon this bar. Other finger prints were upon it also, but none of them could be identified or plainly discerned. All the prints, except that alone of appellant's thumb, were, in the language of an expert upon the witness stand, but 'smears.' Before the night on which the burglary occurred, appellant was familiar with the 'lay' of the apartment of the prosecuting witness. He had visited her there at least as often as every other day for a period of two months. Particularly, according to some of the evidence, he was familiar with the trunk and the mechanism by means of which it was opened, for he had often gone into it to get articles desired by the complaining witness when he was in the apartment with her, or to get articles which he himself desired. Indeed, it is contended by appellant that the sole distinguishable finger print on the metal bar was made by him upon some occasion earlier than the night upon which the burglary occurred. It will be remembered that the owner of the trunk had opened the drawers before she left her apartment at 10 o'clock and had seen the rings and money in their places. She had been compelled, necessarily, to handle the metal bar in order to open the drawers. Under all these circumstances the inference is perhaps possible that appellant's thumb print was impressed on the bar between 10 in the evening and 2:30 in the early morning of the night upon which the burglary was committed, although more will be said on that subject later. There was evidence also that, after appellant's arrest, and while he was in the county jail, he said to a police officer and to the complaining witness: 'If you would let me out for twenty-four hours I believe I can get the diamonds back for you.' It was testified by the officer that he further said that, if he was unable to produce the diamonds, 'he would pay her back in the way of an installment from time to time.' Appellant was not allowed to leave the jail, because he was unwilling to go after the diamonds in the company of an officer. We think there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict."

The next claim is that the trial court committed prejudicial error. We quote further from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, as follows:

[2] "A witness for the defense, a Mrs. Howard, was on the stand when the time for a noon recess arrived. As the recess was about to be taken, and after the judge had given the usual admonition to the jury, counsel on both sides joined in the unusual request that 'this witness be instructed not to talk about this trial during the recess.' Thereupon the judge said to the witness: 'You are instructed not to discuss with any one or allow any one to discuss with you any subject connected with this trial between now and 2:00 o'clock, when you resume the witness stand.' Some time after Mrs. Howard had taken the stand following the recess, the district attorney, while conducting his cross-examination, charged in his questions that she had answered interrogations which she had failed to answer before noon, or had answered them differently. The officer then inquired whether she had talked with any one during the recess, the trial judge examined her at some length upon the same subject, and it seemed to appear that she had indulged in some conversation with at least two persons. It was suggested by counsel that the judge ask her the specific question whether she had conversed about the case, and it was stated that she had been admonished not to talk upon that subject. The judge then said: 'I think that was made clear. At the request of both counsel the court admonished her to that effect, and I myself saw her talking in the back of the courtroom with Mrs. Van Cleave, the wife of the defendant, after court adjourned and while counsel was making an offer of proof, and also saw her walk into the courtroom with the lady dressed in black sitting in the front row; I don't know who she is, but they came into the courtroom together. Is that the mother of the defendant?' It is this statement of the judge which is assigned as misconduct. After making the statement, the judge questioned the witness further, and it developed plainly that she had talked with the two persons named by him, but she denied that her conversations were in relation to the case. It also transpired that the 'lady dressed in black' was the mother of appellant. The judge was in error in making the statement to which exception is taken. The matters of fact recited by him, if given a place in the record at all, should have come from the mouth of a witness, and he was no witness. He was neither called as a witness nor was he sworn. He could have become a witness, of course, but a judge should not be put even into such a position except as a matter of final necessity, especially in a criminal case, where there is always a likelihood that the judge who is made a witness will be deemed by the jury to have espoused one side or the other in the controversy being tried before him. The statements of fact made by the judge were intrinsically harmless. He said merely that he had seen the witness talking with the wife and mother of appellant, and she herself admitted that she had talked with them. Notwithstanding this truth, we think the remarks of the court constituted misconduct. Taking the context, as shown by the record, we think the jury must have believed that the judge held the view that the conversation related to the facts of the case. His remarks, therefore, operated to impeach the witness in the estimation of the jury. It is true that his observations were not assigned as misconduct at the trial, but we doubt whether their effect could have been wholly removed by an admonition to disregard them. When a jury believes that a judge has embraced the cause of the prosecution in a criminal case, it is most difficult to remove the impression.

[3] "After appellant's arrest, his finger prints were taken by an expert in the police department. The expert testified that the distinguishable thumb print on the metal bar which held in place the drawers in the trunk of the complaining witness was the counterpart of a thumb print taken by himself from appellant, and that it was made by appellant. Some time later the prosecution offered in evidence finger prints upon a card found in the identification bureau of the police department, and bearing the name of appellant. The expert testified, over the objections of appellant, that he had examined this card as a part of the investigation leading up to the arrest of appellant, and that a thumb print upon it was made by the same thumb which made the print on the metal bar and the one taken by him from appellant after his arrest. The finger prints on the card were taken at some time before the burglary was committed with which appellant was charged and for which he was convicted in the present action. The card was admitted in evidence over the objection of appellant. This was error. The exhibit was offered merely because it was inspected by the finger print expert during the investigation which preceded appellant's arrest. It was not admissible for that reason, nor can we conceive of any other ground upon which it was entitled to a place in the record, and it demonstrated to the jury that appellant once before had been in the hands of the police.

[4] "Appellant asked the trial judge to give five instructions, each of which he says, was designed to inform the jury 'that conviction on circumstantial evidence must exclude any and every reasonable hypothesis of innocence based on the adduced facts,' and each of them was refused. We think the proffered instructions, although they were differently phrased, related only to the question of reasonable doubt, and the judge instructed the jury amply upon that subject. The requested instructions were therefore unnecessary.

[5] "In order to determine whether there has probably been a miscarriage of justice because of the errors committed at the trial, and in accordance with the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we have examined the entire cause, including the evidence. It will be observed that, with the exception of the testimony to the effect that appellant, after his arrest, made an offer to return the stolen diamonds if he were released, or to pay for them in installments, the evidence is purely circumstantial. Let us consider this excepted testimony first. Appellant denies that he made the offer. Not only so, but the testimony came from a police officer who said that the offer was made in the presence of the complaining witness, and she did not testify on the subject. The testimony concerning appellant's thumb print on the metal bar of the trunk was not as satisfactory as the prosecution might have desired. The trunk was of the wardrobe variety. It stood on end when it was to be opened. One side of it was arranged to accommodate clothing on hangers. The other side was completely occupied by five drawers, extending from top to bottom of the side. It was from the second of these drawers that the rings and money were taken. The metal bar ran from top to bottom of the trunk and extended, when in place, across one end of the five drawers. It was fastened at the top by a lock. The sole distinguishable finger print, that of appellant's thumb, was found near this lock. The other prints, 'smears,' as the expert called them, were at various places along the bar, and it is to be noticed that the record fails to show just where any of them was located and especially whether any of them was under the thumb print of appellant. It is particularly worthy of note that the expert declared that he could not determine whether the print of appellant's thumb was impressed upon the bar before or after any other of the prints upon it. Appellant denied strenuously that he committed the burglary, and in the denial he was fully supported by Akins.

"One other circumstance of the case deserves mention. Appellant was a married man, but it is evident from the record that the complaining witness was his paramour. The alleged burglary was committed on the night of July 11. Appellant's wife had left him on July 2 or 3. Before the burglary she had caused divorce papers to be served upon him. On the night of the burglary, appellant occupied the apartment of the complaining witness with her, and she drove him to another place in the morning. On this ride, before any charge was made against him and before the record shows that he was suspected of the burglary, appellant says he told the complaining witness that he was to go that morning to the office of his wife's counsel in order to effect, if possible, a reconciliation with her. He says that the complaining witness asked him not to do so. The mother of appellant, with whom the complaining witness was well acquainted, and another witness, testified that the complaining witness said, later in the same day, that things had gone so far between her and appellant that, if he returned to his wife, he would be sorry, that she would see that he never lived with her. Akins testified that on this same occasion the complaining witness said that appellant had been 'cheating' on her and that she would 'fix him' for it. Appellant and his wife had apparently become reconciled at the time of the trial, as there was testimony that they were then living together.

"It will be seen from all these circumstances that the case was a close one. It is quite likely that a miscarriage of justice has resulted from the errors committed at the trial. Appellant must have been harmed materially by the reception in evidence of the old finger print record found in the police archives. It is quite probable that this item of damaging evidence turned the scale against him."

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

WASTE, C. J. I dissent. The majority opinion admits, without qualification, that "there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict." The further analysis of the evidence made "in order to determine whether there has probably been a miscarriage of justice," because of the errors committed by the trial court, does not, in my opinion, establish that the case was "a close one." The evidence in the case, aside from, and unaffected by, any errors of the trial court, being sufficient to support the conviction, no miscarriage of justice resulted.

In re JOHNSON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 7045.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 21, 1929.

1. Wills §303(4)—Undisputed testimony of one subscribing witness to will regarding testator's soundness of mind held sufficient.

Undisputed testimony of one subscribing witness to will regarding soundness of mind of testator held sufficient, though the other subscribing witness testified that he had never met testator before he signed the will and was unable to state whether testator was mentally competent.

2. Wills §120—It was not essential that testator make verbal and audible request of subscribing witness to sign will as witness.

It was not essential that testator make verbal and audible request of subscribing witness to sign will as witness, and witness' testimony that the only words spoken were that he asked in joking manner if testator wanted to make his will, and he stated he did, and that witness and the other subscribing witness and testator then signed the will, did not warrant decision that he became subscribing witness without request of testator.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Petition for the probate of the will of Charles Johnson, deceased. From an order denying the petition, the petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Charles A. Hill, of Fresno, for appellant.

Ray C. Wakefield, of Fresno, for respondent Wakefield.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for probate of the last will and testament of Charles Johnson, deceased. The appellant was the petitioner and was named in the will as an executor. The record on appeal is a clerk's transcript and a printed transcript which prints the clerk's transcript and also prints the bill of exceptions signed and approved by the judge. The notice of appeal and the appellant's brief were duly served upon the attorney for C. K. Wakefield, special administrator of the estate of said deceased. No brief or argument in support of the order appealed from has been filed. Appellant states that he does not know why the petition was denied, but assumes that it was on account of the supposed insufficiency of the testimony of the subscribing witnesses in respect to either the sound mind of the testator or in respect to his request of the witnesses to act as subscribing witnesses.

The witnesses to the will were F. J. Kitching and F. E. Wells. Both signed the will in the presence of the testator and of each other, subscribing to the usual statement reciting the details of the due execution of the will.

The subscribing witness Kitching testified to all the details of a due execution of a will, including the statements that he was acquainted with the testator, that the testator was of sound and disposing mind, free from fraud, undue influence, etc., and that he and the other subscribing witness signed as witnesses at the request of the testator. The other subscribing witness testified that he was requested by the petitioner to come to the sick room of the testator to witness a will, and, as to the execution of the will, he testified as follows:

"* * * There was there present at said time besides myself and said C. A. Dwarack and said Charles Johnson, D. T. Winne, an attorney at law, and I. J. Kitching. On entering the room of Charles Johnson, whom I had not met before, I asked him in rather a joking manner if he wanted to make his will and he stated he did; that these were the only words spoken to or by me while I was in Mr. Johnson's room; that said Charles Johnson then signed said instrument hereinbefore referred to which had been previously prepared; that said Charles Johnson signed the same in the presence of myself and said I. J. Kitching and said I. J. Kitching and myself then and there signed the same in his presence and in the presence of each other; that neither Charles Johnson or any other person in his presence requested me to sign said instrument as a witness; that I left immediately after signing said instrument;

"That at the time of the signing of said instrument said Charles Johnson appeared to be physically ill; that I am not able to state whether or not he was mentally competent; I believe that he knew he was signing an instrument purporting to be his last will, but I do not know whether or not he knew the contents thereof, as it was not read to him in my presence."

[1, 2] The soundness of mind was testified to by the subscribing witness Kitching and not denied by any other witness. The testimony of the subscribing witness Wells did not warrant a decision that he became a subscribing witness to the will without the request of the testator. It was not essential that the testator make a verbal and audible request of the subscribing witness Wells. We quote from Estate of Silva, 169 Cal. 116, at page 120, 145 P. 1015, 1016:

"It does not appear that the testator in words asked that these persons sign as witnesses, or declared to them that the document was his will, but from the whole transaction as shown by the testimony it is very clear that all of them understood that he was promulgating the document as his will, that he desired these persons to sign the same as witnesses, and that they were signing in compliance with his desire so manifested by his manner and actions.

"It is not necessary that the testator should have spoken words declaring the document to be his will, or that he should expressly request the witnesses to sign it as such. It is sufficient if this declaration and request are unmistakably indicated to the persons signing as witnesses by the testator's conduct and actions, although there is no declaration in words to that effect."

See, also, Estate of Cullberg, 169 Cal. 365, 368, 146 P. 888.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed.

Criminal law §935(1)—Granting new trial to defendant, convicted of maintaining nuisance but acquitted of selling liquor, held not abuse of discretion (27 USCA § 33; St. 1921, p. 79).

After conviction of maintaining liquor nuisance under 27 USCA § 33, order granting new trial held not abuse of discretion, where jury had acquitted defendant on charge of selling liquor under St. 1921, p. 79.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Dan Costello was convicted of maintaining a nuisance, and, from an order granting him a new trial, the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

P. N. McCloskey and H. R. Griffin, both of San Bernardino, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged in an information containing two counts with the offenses of "selling intoxicating liquor" and with "maintaining a common nuisance, to wit: a certain building in the town of Victorville, in the County of San Bernardino, State of California, in which intoxicating liquors were wrongfully kept and unlawfully sold." The jury found the defendant not guilty of count 1, charging him with the sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), but did return a verdict of guilty of the offense of maintaining a nuisance. The lower court granted the defendant's motion for a new trial, and the people prosecute this appeal from that order.

The defendant operated a pool hall and soft drink stand in Victorville. The evidence shows that he carried and sold "Amargo Bitters," "Padre Wine Tonic," "Power Wine Tonic," and "Peptol Wine Tonic." The testimony of the prosecution was to the effect that the bitters were not only sold by the bottle but also by the glass. One witness testified that during November, 1928, or two months prior to the arrest of defendant, the sale of these bitters by the glass averaged in his judgment three bottles a day; that he had seen several people under the influence of this particular concoction and had been intoxicated therefrom himself. It is well to note that the witness to whom we have just referred had been arrested and convicted of a charge of burglary of defendant's place of business and had been granted probation. He also testified that he was instructed by his employer, the defendant, to sell bitters by the dose and not by the drink. Other witnesses stated that they had seen a number of persons under the influence of liquor in defendant's place of business, but it is not clear that they came under its influence by imbibing too freely of bitters. A witness who clerked for defendant during December, 1928, and January, 1929, testified that he sold bitters "probably twenty-four doses a day." The defendant, on the other hand, asserted his instruction to sell bitters by the dose and the bottle only, and that all persons under the influence of liquor, regardless of who they were, were to be refused service.

The prosecution called chemists to the stand for the purpose of proving the alcoholic content of the liquid sold and that it was fit for beverage purposes. They were unable to state the physiological effect of the bitters other than to testify concerning the effect it had upon them. They did recite that the alcoholic content of "Amargo Bitters" was 47 per cent. by volume. On the other hand, the defense introduced the testimony of a practicing physician and a graduate of Columbia University to the effect that the liquid was unfit for beverage purposes; that it contained pandomon, cloves, and ginger and extracts of that character, and senna, the active principle of which drug is called emodin. He gave it as his opinion that "the ordinary individual drinking that would get the action of those irritants, with either catharsis or their emetic effect before he could absorb enough alcohol to create intoxication"; that the preparation could not "be tolerated as a beverage by the ordinary individual" because "the physiological action would be such that the system would revolt and eliminate the drug in an abnormal way. I think it would create vomiting, and I think it would create distress." The evidence also discloses that the product known as "Amargo Bitters" is manufactured in Germany and imported to this country; that prior to its admission it is tested by federal prohibition authorities; that, when found by them to conform to a certain standard, it is classified as "unfit for beverage purposes." Testimony was not adduced disclosing what is deemed to be a proper or improper amount to be taken for medicinal purposes other than the statement that the medical profession uses bitters in very small quantities. There was testimony that whisky glasses were used when sales were made by the glass.

We must note the provisions under which the respondent was convicted, keeping in mind that he was acquitted of the charge of selling intoxicating liquors. The material part of the section of the National Prohibition Act (title 2, § 21 [27 USCA § 33]) under which the respondent was found guilty reads as follows: "Any room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure, or place where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, kept, or bartered in violation of this chapter, and all intoxicating liquor and property kept and used in maintaining the same, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance, and any person who maintains such a common nuisance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than one year, or both." For the purposes of the discussion, we may assume, in keeping with the authorities, that a person who sells medicated preparations, unfit for beverage purposes, to the ordinary person, but containing sufficient alcohol to produce intoxication, intending—or under circumstances from which it is fairly and reasonably inferable—that it is to be used for beverage rather than for medicinal purposes, may be guilty of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors. Goode v. State, 87 Miss. 495, 40 So. 12; Young v. State, 137 Miss. 188, 102 So. 161, 36 A. L. R. 717; Massei v. United States (C. O. A.) 295 F. 683. Inasmuch, however, as the jury acquitted the respondent of this charge, it must have found that the intent or the circumstances already mentioned did not exist. Undoubtedly the respondent could not have been prosecuted under the second count for merely possessing the medicated compounds carried by him. Young v. State, supra. A conviction, therefore, on the second count necessarily involves a finding of the sale of the preparation with intent or under circumstances from which it is reasonable to infer that it was to be used for beverage purposes. We do not find it necessary to determine, although it seems obvious, that the two verdicts are necessarily inconsistent, but an analysis of the situation must indicate that they were so at variance with each other as to at least give rise to a very serious doubt in the mind of the trial judge concerning the finding of the jury. Under such circumstances, taking into consideration the attack made upon the credibility of the witness who gave the most exact and damaging testimony, the statements of the physician, and the denials of the respondent, we do not find that clear and unmistakable abuse of discretion which would warrant us in reversing an order granting a new trial. Order affirmed.

WILSON v. MARDAKIS. (Civ. 6965.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 22, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(7)—Evidence supported implied finding that driver of taxicab, striking boy crossing street after leaving street car, was negligent.

In action against taxicab company for injury to boy, struck as he crossed street after leaving street car, evidence held sufficient to support implied finding that defendant's driver was negligent.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(55)—Evidence supported determination that boy, struck by taxicab while crossing street after leaving street car, was not contributorily negligent.

In action against taxicab company for injury to boy, struck as he crossed street after leaving street car, evidence that boy drew back after seeing taxicab, and then attempted to cross in front of it, because of narrow space between cab and car, held sufficient to support determination that he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

3. Automobiles ⇨246(51)—Instruction as to driver's duty to drive on right side of highway held not erroneous, under evidence in action for injury to boy leaving street car.

In action against taxicab company for injury to boy, struck as he crossed street after leaving street car, instruction relative to driver's duty to drive on right half of highway held not erroneous, under evidence, as against contention that it was not applicable to facts.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1066—Instruction respecting lawful speed for automobile at intersection held not harmful, though no intersection was involved (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. 2).

In action for injuries to boy struck by automobile, instruction as to lawful speed of automobile traversing intersection, under Motor Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. 2, held not harmful, even though no intersection was involved, and accident happened 46 feet from intersection.

5. Automobiles ⇨246(51)—Instruction stating ordinance confined to zones where traffic is congested held properly refused, under evidence in action for injury to boy struck after leaving street car.

In action against taxicab company for injury to boy, struck as he crossed street after leaving street car, refusal of instruction purporting to be statement contained in ordinance confined to zones where traffic is congested, held not error, where there was no evidence that place where accident happened was in such a zone.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Jesse Wilson, by his guardian ad litem, Mary La Baugh, against Chris Mardakis, doing business under the firm name and style of the Golden Gate Taxicab Company, to recover damages for injuries arising out of automobile accident. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

James F. Brennan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Shortly after 10 p. m. on the night of April 29, 1927, plaintiff, a boy 13 years of age, and a friend, Arthur Mahoney, of about the same age boarded a west-bound McAllister street car, with the purpose of transferring at Larkin street, to go to their homes on Ellis street. Upon reaching Larkin street, the Mahoney boy alighted from the rear end of the car, ran around the back and across to the southerly side of McAllister street, with the object, apparently, of taking a north-bound Larkin street car at the southeast corner of Larkin and McAllister streets. The plaintiff followed. After he had taken a few steps to the south, he was hit by a taxicab traveling easterly on McAllister street, driven by an employee of defendant.

[1] The defendant claims he was not negligent. There was evidence that the taxicab entered the intersection of the two streets traveling at a speed of 15 miles or more, and that it so continued to travel until the accident; that it was riding the southerly track in McAllister street; that it was lighted, and there were such other lights that the persons in the street could be seen; and that they were seen. There was evidence that the space between the southerly track and the curb was not occupied by parked vehicles for a distance of 100 or 125 feet east of Larkin street. There were facts introduced in evidence from which it may be argued that the taxicab was traveling at a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour. The plaintiff contends that the taxicab was operated negligently, because the driver did not drive as close to the right-hand curb as was practicable under the circumstances, because the taxicab was being driven at an excessive rate of speed, and because it was not being driven in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed that was reasonable and proper, having regard for traffic and the use of the highway. There was evidence which, if the jury believed it, would have justified the jury in placing its verdict on any one or all of the foregoing theories. The defendant attempts to justify the acts of his agent by claiming that no one of the theories mentioned is wholly sustained as a charge. But he is responsible for the combination of facts, as well as for the separate factors. This court is unable to say that the implied finding that defendant was negligent is not supported by the evidence.

[2] The defendant also asserts that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The facts are these: As he rounded the rear end of the street car, he looked west on McAllister street and saw the taxicab. It was riding both rails of the southerly track, or straddling the south rail. Plaintiff had taken a step out, but drew back until he was in danger of being brushed down by the street car, when it started to move. He saw the space he was standing in was only 4 feet wide, or less; that is, the space between the street car and the taxicab, if the latter continued forward in a straight line. He determined to try to get across ahead of it. He attempted to run. He took a couple of steps and was hit. The defendant concedes "that persons under the stress of a sudden emergency are not held strictly accountable for their acts," but he claims that principle is not applicable in this case. When it is considered that the person in question was a boy only 13 years of age, we think that the jury was within its rights when it reached the determination that the plaintiff, under all of the facts, was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[3] The plaintiff requested, and the trial court gave, an instruction: "I instruct you that the Motor Vehicle Act in effect at the time of the accident in question provided that on all occasions the driver of a vehicle shall drive the same on the right half of a public highway, and close to the right edge or curb of said highway, unless it is impracticable to travel on said side of the highway, and except when overtaking or passing other vehicles, in which latter case the vehicle may be driven on the left side of the highway, if said left side is clear and unobstructed for at least 100 yards ahead. If you find from the evidence in this case that defendant's driver was not driving his automobile upon the right half of the street, and close to the right-hand curb of said street, and that it was practicable to travel close to the right-hand curb of said street, then you are instructed that he was guilty of negligence as a matter of law." The defendant asserts it was not applicable to the facts. He points to the evidence that some cars were parked 100 or 125 feet easterly from the corner, and that it was not practicable to drive near the curb. This argument assumes facts. Just how far east these parked cars were from the point of the collision rests in argument. There was evidence to the effect that, as the taxicab proceeded east on McAllister street from the time that it approached the intersection, and from there to a point some distance east of the point of collision, the taxicab could have been driven next to the curb, because the street was otherwise unoccupied. It was only at a point some distance beyond and east of the point of collision that there were any parked cars next to the curb.

[4] The plaintiff requested, and the trial court gave, an instruction as to the lawful rate of speed when an automobile is traversing an intersection. Motor Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. 2. The defendant says in this case no intersection was involved; that where the accident happened was 46 feet east of the intersection. Conceding that to be the fact, the instruction was not harmful.

[5] The defendant requested, and the trial court refused to give, an instruction purporting to be a statement contained in Ordinance No. 4663 (N. S.). The court did not err. The ordinance is confined to zones "where the traffic is congested." There was no evidence that the place where the accident happened is a zone "where the traffic is congested."

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC BROADCASTING CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 7142.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 20, 1929.

1. Prohibition ☞17—One objecting to appointment of receiver should present objection to trial court in some proper form before applying for prohibition.

Where party objecting to appointment of receiver has opportunity to object thereto in trial court, objection should be brought to trial court's attention before application is made for writ of prohibition to prohibit trial court from proceeding in cause on jurisdictional grounds, since it is to be presumed that any valid objection properly brought to attention of court would generally prevail, and that all necessity for writ of prohibition would be obviated.

2. Prohibition ☞3(3)—Statute having provided for appeal from order appointing receiver and for undertaking pending appeal, prohibition will not lie, notwithstanding jurisdictional question (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 963).

Since under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 963, originally in St. 1897, pp. 55, 56, appeal may be taken from order appointing receiver and undertaking given to stay operation of order pending appeal, prohibition will not lie notwithstanding question of jurisdiction to make order may be involved.

3. Prohibition ☞3(3)—Facts showing remedy by appeal from order appointing receiver would be adequate, writ of prohibition was denied (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 963).

Facts showing trial court granted ex parte order appointing receiver who gave bond for faithful performance of duties and took possession of property, and court on petition of receiver ordered sale of property, and no motion was made to vacate order appointing receiver claimed to be void because defendants were not served with copies of summons and complaint in action, nor with copies of petition, nor order for sale of property precluding trial court from acquiring jurisdiction, held not to warrant granting of prohibition, since remedy by appeal afforded by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 963, would be adequate.

Application by the Pacific Broadcasting Company for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the city and county of San Francisco and James G. Conlan, Judge thereof, and another. Application denied.

Shortridge & McInerney and Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. An application for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the taking of any further proceedings under an order appointing a receiver, upon the ground that said order is void for want of jurisdiction to make it.

[1] It does not appear from the petition that any application has ever been made to the trial court to vacate the order now claimed to be void, and as held in Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 P. 121, 141, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192: "When a party has an opportunity of objecting in the lower court that it is proceeding, or is asked to proceed, in a matter without, or in a manner exceeding, its jurisdiction, he ought to make the objection there. It is only fair to the court that the objection should be brought to its attention in some proper form. If no objection is made, the party having every opportunity to object, the court may reasonably infer that no ground of objection exists; and not only is the court entitled to the advice and suggestions of the party with reference to objections apparent on the record,—there are many cases in which the ground of objection would not appear unless set forth by plea in some form, and it is to be presumed that any valid objection, properly brought to the attention of the court, would generally prevail, and that all necessity for a writ of prohibition would be obviated; therefore the interest of the public in preventing unnecessary litigation, as well as consideration for the judge of the lower court, demand that the objection should be made at the first opportunity."

[2] Furthermore, the following cases hold that since under the amendment to the Code in 1897 (St. 1897, pp. 55, 56) an appeal may be taken from an order appointing a receiver and an undertaking given to stay the operation of the order pending the appeal, the remedy of prohibition will not lie, notwithstanding the question of jurisdiction to make the order may be involved: Jacobs v. Superior Court, 133 Cal. 364, 65 P. 826, 827, 85 Am. St. Rep. 204; Campbell v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. App. 728, 228 P. 354; Lieberman v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 18, 236 P. 570. The decision in Jacobs v. Superior Court, supra, indicates, however, that there "might, perhaps, be exceptional facts in a case which would call for a writ of prohibition notwithstanding an appeal from an order appointing a receiver."

[3] No such exceptional facts are here pleaded. In substance they are as follows: Edward J. Cooke commenced an action against the Pacific Broadcasting Company, a corporation (the petitioner herein), station KYA, John Doe, Richard Roe and James Doe upon an assigned claim for the sale of merchandise, amounting to $1,034.91, alleging that said company was insolvent, and that an attachment by another creditor for $4,091.96 had been levied upon its property which would more than absorb all of the assets of said company; and upon those grounds Cooke asked for the appointment of a receiver and judgment for the amount of his claim. Thereupon, the petition alleges, the trial court granted an order, ex parte, appointing a receiver, who gave a bond in accordance with the order of court for $10,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, and took possession of said broadcasting station; that five days thereafter, to wit, on August 31, 1929, on petition of said receiver, the court granted another order directing the sale of the assets of said broadcasting station; that pursuant to said order, the sale was noticed for September 26, 1929, in response to which the receiver obtained one bid. The petition further alleges that defendants were never served with copies of the summons or complaint in the action, nor with copies of the petition or the order for the sale of the property; and it is claimed therefore that the court was without jurisdiction to make any of said orders. Upon the grounds mentioned the petitioner, Pacific Broadcasting Company, seeks this writ to prohibit any further proceedings being taken under said orders and to have the orders declared void.

It is evident from the foregoing that the remedy by appeal afforded by the Code sections (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 963), if it becomes necessary to invoke the same, will serve the full purpose of the writ which petitioner seeks, because upon taking such an appeal and giving an undertaking, all proceedings based upon the order appointing the receiver will be stayed pending the determination of the appeal, and the validity of said order appointing the receiver will be determined on the appeal.

For the reasons stated we are of the opinion that the application should be denied, and it is so ordered.

DOYLE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6744.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 20, 1929.

1. Depositions ⇨32—Application to perpetuate testimony stating applicant expected to be plaintiff, setting out adverse parties, witnesses, facts to be proved, and that proof was necessary to perfect title, held sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 2084).

Application to perpetuate testimony of witnesses, alleging that applicant expected to be party plaintiff, and stating names of persons expected to be adverse parties, and that determination of question of validity of assessments was necessary to perfect title to plaintiff's property, with designation of parties whose testimony was expected to be perpetuated with place of residence and a general outline of facts expected to be proved, held sufficient under Code Civ. Proc. § 2084, requiring verified petition stating names of persons who will be adverse parties or that proof of some fact is necessary to perfect title to property in which applicant is interested.

2. Depositions ⇨11—Proceedings to perpetuate testimony are available to prospective litigant, or to establish title or relationship (Code Civ. Proc. § 2084).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2084, all that is necessary to warrant proceedings for perpetuation of testimony is that applicant expects to become party to suit, or that proof of some fact is necessary to establish title to property, or relationship or some other matter which may be necessary to establish.

Certiorari to Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Marshall F. McComb, Judge.

Petition by M. F. Doyle and others for writ of certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, and Hon. Marshall F. McComb and others, Judges thereof. Writ discharged.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach (Lawrence Hall, of Long Beach, of counsel), for petitioners.

Chandler, Wright & Ward, of Los Angeles (H. C. Mabry, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

HOUSER, J. From the petition herein it appears that heretofore, to wit, on June 4, 1929, pursuant to an application filed by Turner Oil Company, a corporation, in the superior court in the county of Los Angeles, for an order to perpetuate the testimony of each of four persons named in such application, four several orders were issued by said court by which each of said persons was directed to appear at a designated time and place for the purpose of giving his deposition; that following service of such order upon each of such persons, each of them duly appeared as directed in the order, but refused to give any testimony. Thereafter, in due course and because of such refusal to give his testimony as directed, each of such persons was ordered by the said superior court to appear before it on a specified date to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of said court. Thereupon, the persons so cited for contempt, claiming that the application for the order to perpetuate their testimony was so lacking in essential allegations that it constituted no foundation for either or any of the several orders made by the superior court in the matter, applied to this court for a writ of review, to the end that such orders be annulled.

Without setting forth at length the application in question, it may suffice briefly to state that following its entitlement and address to the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, in effect the application contained the statements: That the applicant expected to be a party plaintiff in an action to be brought in said superior court; that said action would involve the determination of the validity of a certain agreement between the city of Long Beach and Charles Torson, by which agreement said Charles Torson was employed by the city of Long Beach to do certain construction work in connection with Pump sewer district No. 10, city of Long Beach; that by said action applicant proposed to furthermore determine the validity of all bonds issued in connection with the above work; that the names of the persons whom the applicant expected would be adverse parties in said action were the city of Long Beach, Charles Torson, Walter Horne, Long Beach Insurance Agency and/or its directors and/or certain of its stockholders; that applicant was the owner of about 50 acres of real property situate in Pump sewer district No. 10, Long Beach, Los Angeles county, Cal.; that said property had become subject to an alleged assessment of over $20,000 for the aforesaid work done under the above-mentioned contract; and that it was necessary to determine whether or not the assessments were valid in order to perfect title to the above property in which applicant was interested as owner as aforesaid. Then followed a designation of each of the persons whose testimony was expected to be perpetuated, his residence address, the statement that he was a necessary and material witness for the applicant on the trial of the expected action and that his testimony would be necessary and material in the prosecution thereof. The application also contained the statement that by the first of such named persons the applicant expected to prove that the Long Beach Insurance Agency was the agent for the Pacific Indemnity Company and/or Swett & Crawford, who issued various bonds on behalf of the contractor, Charles Torson, in connection with Pump sewer district No. 10, Long Beach, Cal.; that said person was general manager of the bond department of Swett & Crawford; that he was an officer or employee of the Pacific Indemnity Company and was familiar with the executing of said bonds. That by the second of said persons the applicant expected to prove that he was an officer and/or director of the Long Beach Insurance Agency; that the Long Beach Insurance Agency was the local agent for the Pacific Indemnity Company and/or Swett & Crawford in procuring the bond business from Charles Torson in connection with Pump sewer district No. 10, Long Beach; and that certain public officials of the city of Long Beach were materially interested in the Long Beach Insurance Agency as stockholders or directors. That by the third of such persons the applicant expected to prove that the Long Beach Insurance Agency was the local agent for the Pacific Indemnity Company and/or Swett & Crawford in procuring for said Charles Torson bonds in connection with the work done by him in Pump sewer district No. 10, Long Beach, Cal., and the amount of premiums paid for said bonds. And that by the last of such named persons the applicant expected to prove that the Long Beach Insurance Agency was the local agent for the Pacific Indemnity Company and/or Swett & Crawford in writing the bonds for Charles Torson in connection with the work done in Pump sewer district No. 10, Long Beach, Cal., and that certain public officials of the city of Long Beach were officers or substantial stockholders in the Long Beach Insurance Agency.

Specifically, the objections of petitioner herein to the application presented to the superior court are that said application does not set forth the nature of, or the issues to be tried in, the alleged anticipated controversy, nor the claims of the parties alleged to be adverse to applicant therein; and that such facts as are set forth are not alleged to be true, but merely that applicant "expects to prove" the same.

So far as concerns this proceeding, the effect of section 2084 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prescribes what shall be contained within an application for an order to perpetuate the testimony of a witness, is that the applicant must produce to a judge of the superior court his verified petition in which shall be stated the fact that the applicant expects to be a party to an action in this state; and in such case, the names of the persons whom he expects will be adverse parties; or, that the proof of some fact is necessary to perfect title to property in which he is interested. In either case in addition to the foregoing requirements, the applicant must state the name of the witness proposed to be examined, his place of residence, and a general outline of the facts expected to be proved.

[1] Tested by such statutory requirements, and referring to the application which was presented to the superior court, it will be noticed that in accordance with the demands of the statute the application does contain the positive statement that applicant expects to be a party plaintiff; and that the names of the persons whom the applicant expects will be adverse parties in said action are (naming them). Adverting to the statute, it will appear that beyond the naming of the witness proposed to be examined, the making of a statement as to his place of residence and "a general outline of the facts expected to be proved," no other preliminary demand is made of the applicant. In the instant case, however, so far as concerns what may be termed the foundational facts, the applicant has gone farther: In addition to the requirements set forth in the first subdivision of section 2084 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he has attempted to comply with the alternative requirements stated in the second subdivision of said section to the effect that in the absence of compliance by the applicant with the provisions contained in the first subdivision, the petition must contain a statement, "that the proof of some fact is necessary to perfect the title to property in which he is interested. * * *" In that regard, the application contains the statement that the applicant is the owner of "50 acres of real property * * *" which "has become subject to an alleged assessment of over $20,000.00, * * *" and "that it is necessary to determine whether or not the assessments are valid in order to perfect title to the above property in which applicant is interested as owner as aforesaid." Resuming the examination of the application, and as affecting either of the alternative provisions of the statute, it appears that the name and place of residence of each of the persons proposed to be examined are clearly and unmistakably set forth. In view of the fact that the application is direct and specific in its statement as to what material facts are expected to be established by each of the persons whose testimony is sought to be obtained, it is equally manifest that the applicant has strictly and literally complied with the final statutory requirement that the application must contain

"a general outline of the facts expected to be proved."

[2] Although the petitioner in this proceeding has made a showing that under strict equity practice many things, other than those to which reference has heretofore been had herein, must appear in an application for an order to perpetuate the testimony of a witness, from a reading of section 2084 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is apparent that its provisions offer a complete plan of procedure in the premises, and consequently that no occasion exists for ascertaining whether the application, as presented, complies either with the former equity practice or with the pertinent statutes, rules, or regulations concerning the subject which appertain to any jurisdiction outside this state. As is stated in 9 California Jurisprudence, 436: "Under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure all that is necessary to warrant the proceedings is that the applicant, or petitioner, expects to become a party to a suit in the courts of California, or, if no suit is anticipated, that the proof of some fact is necessary to perfect title to property in which he is interested, or to establish marriage, descent, heirship, or any other matter which may hereafter become material to establish."

In the case of San Francisco Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 30, 99 P. 350, 361, 17 Ann. Cas. 933, where the general question of the right of a party to take a deposition was given thorough and painstaking consideration, in part the court said: " * * * It very clearly appears that it was the intention of the legislature, not only to provide a simple statutory proceeding by which litigants, actual or expectant, could secure all the relief formerly afforded by courts of equity, but even ampler relief, and upon easier terms. Prof. Pomeroy states in the sections above cited that the same literal extension of the remedy has been made by act of Parliament in England. This disposition to amplify the remedy is plainly apparent in the provisions of our code, both with respect to the proceeding to perpetuate testimony and the right to take depositions de bene esse, and, in view of this tendency of legislation, it seems clear to us that in any case which falls at once within the principle upon which the jurisdiction in equity was founded, and the letter of the statute, the right to take a deposition must be upheld."

It is ordered that the writ heretofore issued herein be and it is discharged.

SECURITY-FIRST NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 6922.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨31—Appointment and qualification of general administrator held revocation of special administrator's authority (Code Civ. Proc. § 1416).

Appointment and qualification of general administrator held in legal effect revocation of special administrator's authority under Code Civ. Proc. § 1416, and his duty to render accounting and be discharged from further liability is not different than if court had by direct order revoked his letters.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨79—General administrator during pendency of appeal from order appointing him cannot enforce right to take charge of assets (Code Civ. Proc. § 966).

General administrator during pendency of appeal from judgment or order appointing him cannot, under Code Civ. Proc. § 966, enforce his right as administrator to take charge of assets of estate.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨31—Appeal from order appointing administrator held not to restore or continue official character or powers of special administrator.

Appeal taken from order appointing administrator held not effective to restore or continue official character or powers of special administrator, and therefore court did not exceed jurisdiction in appointing another special administrator to care for assets of estate during pendency of appeal.

Certiorari to Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Application for certiorari by the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, special administrator of the estate of John H. Coolman, deceased, to review and annul an order of the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles, and another. Writ denied.

Welburn Mayock and Alford P. Olmstead, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

CONREY, P. J. From the petition it appears that in the matter of the estate of John H. Coolman, deceased, certain contests were pending upon a petition for probate of will and for letters of administration. For the purpose of preserving the estate during time of contest, the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles was appointed special administrator and duly qualified in that office. On May 7, 1929, the court made its order denying probate of the will and appointed Walter Armel administrator of the estate. On June 12th Armel qualified as such administrator. On June 18th and 22d appeals were taken to the Supreme Court from the order of May

7th. On June 18th Armel petitioned for special letters of administration. The bank and the proponents of the will objected to the granting of special letters of administration to Armel, basing their objections on the ground that the bank was the duly appointed special administrator and that its appointment had never been revoked. Thereafter, on September 26, 1929, the court appointed Armel special administrator of the estate, and directed that the bank deliver to Armel all the property of the estate in its possession. In this proceeding the petitioner contends that in making its order of September 26th the court acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction.

[1] In the first place petitioner directs our attention to decisions of the Supreme Court which hold that a new administrator of a decedent's estate cannot be appointed while a former administrator is in office, and that before there can be jurisdiction to make such appointment the former letters must be revoked. Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 288; Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464; Barboza v. Pacific Portland Cement Co., 162 Cal. 36, 120 P. 767. The foregoing decisions relate to the ordinary general letters of administration, but it is claimed that in principle they apply to special administrators as well.

"When letters testamentary or of administration on the estate of the decedent have been granted, the powers of the special administrator cease, and he must forthwith deliver to the executor or administrator all the property and effects of the decedent in his hands; and the executor or administrator may prosecute to final judgment any suit commenced by the special administrator." Code Civ. Proc. § 1416. Petitioner contends that under the foregoing section the appointment of a general administrator has the effect of suspending the powers of the special administrator, but that his letters are not revoked, and that his status as special administrator continues until he has completed his accounting and obtained his discharge. We find ourselves unable to agree with this contention. We think that the appointment and qualification of the general administrator in legal effect is a revocation of the special administrator's authority, and that thereupon he ceases to be special administrator. His duty to render an accounting and to be discharged from further liability is in no respect different from the same duty which would devolve upon him if the court had by direct order revoked his letters of administration.

[2, 3] It is further contended, however, on behalf of petitioner, that the appeal taken from the order appointing Armel as administrator suspends the operation of the order appointing such administrator, and that until the determination of said appeal the powers of the special administrator are revived and continue in being. We are referred to Estate of Stough, 173 Cal. 638, 161 P. 1, wherein it was held that upon appeal taken from an order appointing an executor, the executor had no authority during the appeal to take any steps by virtue of his appointment, and that he was not authorized as executor to prosecute an action to quiet title to property of the estate. It should be noted, however, in that case the appointed executor had not qualified, and letters appointing him executor had not been issued when appeal was taken from the order appointing him.

Section 966 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "When the judgment or order appointing an executor, or administrator, or guardian, is reversed on appeal, for error, and not for want of jurisdiction of the court, all lawful acts in administration upon the estate performed by such executor, or administrator, or guardian, if he have qualified, are as valid as if such judgment or order had been affirmed." It seems to have been determined, however, that said section 966 does not entitle the executor, administrator, or guardian to enforce his rights of administration during the pendency of appeal from his order of appointment. In Coburn v. Hynes, 161 Cal. 685, 120 P. 26, the Supreme Court commented on section 966 as follows: "We do not see that this section fixes the right of a guardian to act during the pendency of such an appeal as the section designates. On the contrary, its language would indicate that, statutorily, he has no such right, but that if he exercise his functions of guardianship in a case where the order appointing him is not void for want of jurisdiction, his acts will not be invalid." It is conceded by counsel for petitioner in the present proceeding that the appeal from the order appointing Armel as administrator is upon grounds of error, not raising any question as to jurisdiction of the court in appointing such administrator. In Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v. Alden (Cal. Sup.) 275 P. 794, 801, the Supreme Court commented upon the decision in Coburn v. Hynes, supra, as follows: "That case involved an application for a writ of superseas to prevent a guardian who had been appointed by the court from taking charge of the property of the ward pending an appeal from the decree. The question of suspending the effect of the adjudication of incompetency was not involved in that case. The court merely held that, since the statute did not authorize a guardian to take charge of the estate pending an appeal, he had no such power." So it may be said, and it so appears to us, that according to the decision in Coburn v. Hynes, the general administrator, Armel, during the pendency of said appeal, would be unable to enforce his right as administrator to take charge of the assets of the estate. This being so, a situation is presented which makes necessary, or at least appropriate, the appointment of a special administrator to conserve the assets of the estate until the determination of the appeal. This condition is admitted by the petitioner here, except that petitioner itself claims to be an existing special administrator and contends that for that reason the court is without power to appoint another special administrator. In the case of Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v. Alden, supra, it appeared that in a proceeding instituted for that purpose one Bundy had been declared an incompetent person and a guardian of his person and estate had been appointed. Bundy appealed from said order. During the time when said appeal was pending, Bundy, who had in his possession a cashier's check which represented money belonging to him, indorsed and delivered the check to an indorsee who thereafter passed it on to the plaintiff bank. Subsequently, in an action concerning said cashier's check, it became necessary to determine whether Bundy had legal capacity to indorse and deliver the check. The Supreme Court held that the decision in Coburn v. Hynes did not support the contention of appellant that Bundy was restored to competency by virtue of the pending appeal.

Applying the principle indicated in the preceding paragraph, we are of the opinion that the appeal taken from the order appointing Armel administrator is not effective to restore or continue the official character or powers of the petitioner as special administrator. This being so, it seems clear that in appointing another special administrator to care for the assets of the estate during the pendency of the appeal, respondent court has not exceeded its jurisdiction.

The petition for writ of review is denied

SCOTT v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 6872.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 19, 1929.

1. Appeal and error §979(2)—Order granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence will not be disturbed, unless clearly abuse of discretion.

Insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict is ground for new trial peculiarly within province of trial court, and its orders granting new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, unless it clearly appears that there was abuse of discretion.

2. New trial §70—Order granting railroad new trial for insufficiency of evidence to support verdict for plaintiff, who overturned automobile attempting to avoid collision with train blocking crossing, held not abuse of discretion.

In action against railroad by one who overturned automobile in attempt to avoid collision with side of train blocking crossing, in which there was verdict for plaintiff, order granting new trial on ground that evidence was insufficient to justify such verdict held not abuse of discretion, in view of evidence, considered in light of legal rules relating to duty imposed on persons about to cross railroad tracks.

3. New trial ⇨71—Order granting new trial for insufficiency of evidence is not abuse of discretion, where evidence is conflicting.

Where there is substantial conflict in evidence, trial court will not be deemed to have abused discretion in determining that verdict or finding is against weight of evidence, and that there should be new trial.

4. New trial ⇨70—Rule that verdict will be sustained, if sustainable on any reasonable theories, is inapplicable to trial court, considering motion for new trial.

Rule that, where verdict may be sustained on any reasonable theory, it will not be disturbed, is one governing appellate courts in reviewing evidence on appeal, and has no application to trial court exercising its discretion in passing on motion for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by William Scott, a minor, by Myrtle Scott, his guardian ad litem, against the Southern Pacific Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial, after verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. F. Sylva and Hamilton A. Bauer, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Kincaid & Fitzpatrick, of Redwood City, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Acting P. J. An action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the defendant's negligence. The jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor, but the trial court granted a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, and from the order made in that behalf plaintiff has taken this appeal.

The evidence adduced at the trial is conflicting on some points, but in the main is without dispute. Briefly stated, it is as follows:

Shortly after 2 o'clock on the morning of May 7, 1927, one of the defendant's freight trains, consisting of an engine and 53 cars, traveling easterly between Redwood City and Newark over the Dumbarton cut-off, stopped a short distance easterly of Redwood City to take water from a tank standing just beyond the so-called Middlefield road crossing in San Mateo county, and in doing so blocked the crossing, about one-third of the train not yet having passed over it. Just as the train was coming to a standstill, appellant approached the crossing from the north in an automobile. He was driving alone, and did not see the train until within 10 feet of it, and then, in order to avoid colliding with the side of it, turned abruptly to the left, and by such manoeuver overturned his automobile and was injured. The train crew consisted of an engineer, a fireman, conductor, and three brakemen, and the train was made up of various kinds of cars, including tank and box cars. The "head" brakeman was stationed on the engine, the conductor and "swing" brakeman were riding about the middle of the train, and the "rear" brakeman was in the caboose. While crossing the highway the train traveled slowly, at a speed of about 2 miles an hour, and, as soon as it stopped the conductor and "swing" brakeman alighted, and the latter was instructed by the conductor "to go back and protect the crossing and cut the train, if necessary." He started back toward the crossing at once, but had gone not more than 50 feet when he heard a crash, and upon reaching the crossing found plaintiff's automobile overturned on the west-bound track within a few feet of the train. Appellant had already been extricated from the overturned automobile by friends, who had been following closely behind him in another automobile.

At the time of the accident appellant was 18 years of age and lived just off the Middlefield road, a short distance south of the railroad crossing. He had resided there for upwards of 7 years, and had traveled the road and over said crossing very frequently, going to and coming from Redwood City, and was therefore thoroughly familiar with the location of the crossing. Besides, there were railroad and other crossing signs erected along the side of the road about 365 feet from the crossing. On the night of the accident, appellant had been visiting friends near Redwood City and was returning home, and he testified that he knew when he was about to cross the tracks, and consequently slackened his speed to less than 15 miles an hour; that the headlights of his automobile were lighted and in good condition, but that it had been raining, and his vision was obscured by weather conditions and the moisture on the windshield of his car. He admitted, however, that because of the speed he was traveling when close to the crossing and the wet condition of the pavement a collision with the side of the train would have been inevitable, if he had not turned abruptly to the left. With reference to the question of visibility that night, the rear brakeman testified that as the train neared the crossing he looked ahead in the direction of the Middlefield road for a distance of a quarter of a mile and saw the headlights of an automobile approaching the crossing at a rapid rate of speed, and immediately after the train stopped he heard a crash; that, believing that the automobile had run into the train, he instantly "cut" the air control of the train, so that it could not be moved; that he then saw a freight train approaching from the opposite direction on the west-bound tracks; and that he ran forward to flag that train. It was also shown that there was an electric street light suspended from a pole about 62 feet south of the crossing; that the light was burning at the time of the accident, and could be seen on the Middlefield road on the northerly side of the crossing, over the top of the train, for a distance of 60 feet or more.

[1-4] "The well-settled and familiar rules governing courts of appeal are that insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict is a ground for new trial peculiarly within the province of the trial court, and its order granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that there was an abuse of discretion." Smart v. Spangler, 89 Cal. App. 351, 264 P. 806, 807. When the evidence in the present case is considered in the light of the legal rules established by the decisions of this state (Billig v. Southern Pac. Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992, and cases therein cited) relating to the duty imposed upon persons about to cross railroad tracks, it cannot be fairly held that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial. True, as appellant contends, the evidence is conflicting on some of the issues of fact the jury was called upon to determine; but such conflict did not preclude the trial court from granting a new trial, if it was satisfied that the verdict was not supported by, or was contrary to, the weight of the evidence. As stated in California Jurisprudence, volume 20, page 117: "While a motion for new trial on the ground of 'insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision' may be properly refused, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, it is settled that the trial court is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence, as is the appellate court. The trial court may, and indeed should, grant a motion for new trial, where one of the grounds of the motion therefor is insufficiency of the evidence, if it is satisfied that the verdict or decision is not supported by, or is contrary to, the weight of the evidence, although the evidence is conflicting on the point or points at issue, since in passing upon a motion for new trial, the trial court must weigh and consider the evidence of both parties, and determine for itself the just conclusion to be drawn."

Many of the authorities supporting the foregoing rule are reviewed, and the rule is restated, in Rosenberg v. Moore, 194 Cal. 392, 229 P. 34, 36, wherein the court says: "In Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 P. 288, it was said: 'This court has frequently commented upon the wide extent of the discretion of the trial court, in granting or denying a new trial for insufficiency of evidence. "Its action," as was said in Domico v. Cassassa, 101 Cal. 411, 35 P. 1024, "is conclusive upon this court, unless there has been an abuse of discretion." And, if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the trial court will not be deemed to have abused its discretion when it has determined that the verdict or the finding is against the weight of the evidence, and that there should be a new trial. "When the evidence is conflicting, the trial court is authorized to review it, and if, in its opinion, the verdict is against the weight of evidence, it is its duty to grant a new trial."' Merralls v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 19, 186 P. 778; Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892; Soto v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 55 Cal. App. 532, 203 P. 830. In considering the question of the correctness of the order the presumption on appeal is in favor of the order and against the verdict. Marr v. Whistler, 49 Cal. App. 364, 193 P. 600; Roberts v. Southern Pacific Co., 54 Cal. App. 315, 201 P. 958."

Appellant has attached to his brief as a supplement thereto a printed copy of the reporter's transcript of the evidence, but has made no attempt to point out by way of argument or transcript reference the portions of the evidence upon which he relies to show that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a new trial. He contents himself merely with the statement that the case cited by the trial court in its order granting the new trial "fails to show any reason in the case at bar why a new trial should have been granted, * * *" and in support of such statement he quotes from the case of Rocha v. Garcia, 203 Cal. 167, 263 P. 238, 240, as follows: "Where the verdict of the jury and the judgment based thereon may be sustained on any reasonable theory, it will not be disturbed by an appellate court." It is self-evident, however, that the rule just quoted is the one governing courts of the appellate jurisdiction in reviewing evidence on appeal, and has no application to the trial court in the exercise of its discretion in passing upon a motion for a new trial.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. STEELE et al. (Cr. 1546.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California, Sept. 19, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⚡355(8)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for failure to stop automobile after accident (St. 1923, p. 562).

In prosecution, under St. 1923, p. 562, for failure to stop automobile and render aid after accident, evidence held to sustain conviction of defendant, who had control of car, but was not driving, on theory that he had urged driver to flee after hitting pedestrian.

2. Automobiles ⚡323—One having control of car, by urging driver to flee after striking pedestrian, became equally guilty with driver of violating statute requiring driver to stop after accident (St. 1923, p. 562).

Where one who had control of car, which was being driven by another, urged driver to flee after striking pedestrian, he became equally guilty with driver of violation of St. 1923, p. 562, requiring driver to stop immediately and render aid after accident.

3. Automobiles ⚡323—Defendant, taking wheel of car four blocks from accident and speeding away from victim, became principal in violating statute (St. 1923, p. 562).

Where defendant, having control of car, but not driving, took wheel four blocks from accident and speeded in direction away from victim of collision, he became principal in violation of St. 1923, p. 562, relative to stopping car after accident.

4. Automobiles ⚡336—Failure to perform any of five acts required of automobile driver after accident is punishable as separate offense (St. 1923, p. 562).

St. 1923, p. 562, relative to stopping automobile and rendering aid after accident, requires five separate acts on part of driver, and failure to perform any one of them is punishable as separate offense.

5. Automobiles ⚡336—In statute requiring driver, after accident, to immediately stop and give name, and also render assistance, word "immediately" does not modify "render" (St. 1923, p. 562).

Under St. 1923, p. 562, requiring that driver of automobile, after accident, "shall immediately stop and give his name, * * * and shall also render to such person all necessary assistance," word "immediately" cannot be construed as modifying word "render."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Immediately.]

6. Automobiles ⚡356—What is required, under circumstances, by statute requiring automobile driver to stop after accident, is jury question (St. 1923, p. 562).

Whatever may be required, under circumstances, by St. 1923, p. 562, relative to stopping automobile after accident and rendering assistance, is question of fact for jury.

7. Automobiles ⚡356—Whether, when automobile stopped four blocks from scene of accident and defendant took wheel, there was still sufficient time to return and render assistance, held for jury (St. 1923, p. 562).

In prosecution for violating St. 1923, p. 562, requiring automobile driver to stop after accident and render assistance, evidence showing that car stopped four blocks from accident, where defendant took wheel, held to take to jury question whether there was then still sufficient time to return to point of collision and render necessary assistance, under statute.

8. Automobiles ⚡356—Whether defendant, taking wheel four blocks from accident, knew person had been struck, and aided and abetted previous driver in commission of offense, held for jury (St. 1923, p. 562).

In prosecution for violating St. 1923, p. 562, requiring automobile driver to stop and render assistance after accident, evidence held sufficient to take to jury question whether, when defendant took wheel four blocks from scene of accident, he knew that person had been struck, and whether, in driving away, he was guilty of aiding and abetting previous driver in commission of offense.

9. Automobiles ⚡357—In prosecution under statute respecting failure to stop automobile after accident, instruction requiring finding that defendant encouraged driver to leave to conceal identity held not error; "escape" (St. 1923, p. 562).

In prosecution for violating St. 1923, p. 562, requiring automobile driver to stop and render assistance after accident, instruction requiring finding that defendant encouraged driver to leave scene of accident to conceal identity of driver and vehicle held not error, as against contention that it added element of motive of flight, since there is distinction between escape to prevent apprehension for crime committed, and "escape" to conceal identity, which is itself commission of crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Escape.]

10. Criminal law ⚡1130(5)—Point on appeal need not be considered, where predicated on matters outside record.

On appeal in criminal case, point concerning attempt to impeach witness does not require consideration, where whole argument was predicated on matters outside record.

11. Criminal law ⚡706—In prosecution for failure to stop automobile after accident, cross-examination of character witnesses regarding defendant's previous violations of law held not misconduct (St. 1923, p. 562).

In prosecution, under St. 1923, p. 562, requiring automobile driver to stop and render assistance after accident, district attorney held not guilty of misconduct in cross-examination of character witnesses as to whether they had heard that defendant had previously run over child or man, or had frequently been charged with violations of traffic regulations, since rule is that character witness may be cross-examined as to his knowledge or reports of particular and specific charges of acts inconsistent with character he is called on to prove.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Francis Steele and another were accused of manslaughter and a violation of the Motor Vehicle Act, § 141. Defendant Steele was convicted on both charges, and defendant Roderick Kearney was convicted of violating the Motor Vehicle Act, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Frank M. Carr and Richard Liebman, both of Oakland, for appellant Kearney.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The two defendants were jointly tried on an information charging manslaughter and a violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562). The defendant Steele was convicted on both charges; the defendant Kearney was convicted on the latter charge, and, pursuant to an instruction of the trial court, was acquitted on the charge of manslaughter. Both defendants appealed from the judgments following the verdict and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial, but the defendant Steele has abandoned his appeal, and the judgment and order as to him are affirmed, without opinion.

The facts of the case, as presented on the Kearney appeal, are simple and without material dispute. Kearney and Steele, with two others, Roper and Graham, were out on a drinking "party," during which all but Graham had several drinks of gin and whisky. At Roper's home, where more drinks were served to the three mentioned, the four men got into an automobile owned by Kearney's employer, but over which Kearney had control. This was a Buick roadster, having what is called a "rumble seat." Steele took the wheel, with Kearney sitting beside him. Graham and Roper rode in the rumble seat. While traveling down Central avenue, in the city of Alameda, at an unlawful rate of speed, the machine struck a pedestrian, named Anne Murphy, at the intersection of Central avenue and Everett street, hurling her through the air about 3 feet from the ground, and causing her to roll some 10 feet after hitting the ground. As a result of these injuries, Mrs. Murphy died. The driver slowed momentarily, and then sped away, without rendering any aid to the victim of the collision. About four blocks from the point of collision, after turning two corners, Steele brought the car to a stop and exchanged seats with Kearney who then drove the car out of the city of Alameda and into the city of Oakland, where the four men were apprehended about an hour later.

Eyewitnesses testified to the high rate of speed at which the car was traveling at the time of the collision, and to the terrific sound of the impact of the machine with the body of the deceased. One witness testified that he was walking down Central avenue, and heard the noise of the automobile coming behind; that with the noise of the crash he turned and saw the deceased flying through the air; that the speed of the machine was slackened, and he heard some one in the car urge the driver to flee; that the gears were then shifted, and the car sped away without stopping, until it had turned a corner and was four blocks from the point of collision. This testimony was corroborated by that of the witness Graham, who testified that, immediately after the collision, he heard a conversation between Steele and Kearney, in which the former said, "If I don't stop, I will be a hit-and-run driver." The same witness testified that neither he nor Roper had said anything to Steele at the time, but that both he and Roper had had their heads down to avoid the wind, and had not seen the body struck by the machine.

[1, 2] The main point raised by the appellant Kearney on this appeal is that the evidence is not sufficient to support this theory of the state's case. The witness Higgins testified that he ran after the defendant's car, called upon the driver to stop, but that some one in the car urged the driver to keep on going. He also testified that, immediately after striking the body, the car was momentarily slowed down, and that all four occupants turned around and looked back, without getting up out of their seats. The witness Graham testified that he heard a conversation between Kearney and Steele, in which Steele said to Kearney, "If I don't stop, I will be a hit-and-run driver." This same witness testified that he had said nothing to Steele at this time, and that as to Roper, who sat beside him in the rumble seat, the witness did not know whether or not he had said anything to Steele. Later on in his testimony this witness, in answer to the direct question whether Roper had said anything to either of the defendants at the time of the collision, he answered, "I don't recall him saying anything—no." Upon cross-examination of this same witness he was asked if he had heard the defendant Kearney say anything to Steele, or any one else in the car, and he answered:

"I did not hear him say anything until after the bump; there was some conversation in the front seat, but I could not tell you what he said.

"Q. Did you hear him talking, or hear Steele talking? A. I heard Steele talking.

"Q. You did not hear this defendant Kearney say anything; isn't that a fact, Mr. Graham? A. It was, as I said before, some conversation in the front seat.

"Q. You heard Steele make some remark to Kearney, if he did not stop he would be a hit-and-run driver? A. Words to that effect—

"Q. You did not hear the defendant Kearney say anything in response to that? A. No, sir."

Later on in the course of his testimony the court addressed this witness as follows:

"I don't understand your testimony. I don't know whether you said you heard Kearney's voice after you felt the bump or not. A. Are you asking me?"

"Q. Yes. A. Why, of course, you understand—

"Q. I am just asking you the question: Did you hear Kearney's voice after you felt the bump, before the machine came to a stop? A. I said there was a conversation going on in the front seat.

"Q. Between whom? A. Kearney and Steele. They were sitting there.

"Q. As I understand, at no time did you understand what Kearney said? A. No.; I did not.

"Q. You could not distinguish what he said? A. No, sir."

The only apparent conflict in this evidence is in the testimony of Kearney to the effect that he was asleep at the time, and did not witness the collision or feel the impact, and he did not awaken until the car was stopped four blocks later and Steele called to him to take the wheel.

It is the theory of the respondent that, having proved that Kearney and Steele alone occupied the front seat, and that some one of the passengers had urged Steele to continue on, the testimony of the witness Graham that he overheard the conversation between Steele and Kearney was sufficient to show that Kearney was the one who urged Steele to flee. From our view of the evidence, we are satisfied that it is sufficient to support this theory and to sustain the verdict. It is immaterial that the witness Graham did not distinguish or understand what Kearney said to Steele. His testimony as to overhearing the conversation between Kearney and Steele, that he himself had said nothing to Steele, and that he did not recall Roper having said anything to Steele, is sufficient to overcome the direct denial of the defendant Kearney, based upon his statement that he was asleep at the time, particularly as this testimony was directly rebutted by the witness Higgins, who testified that immediately after the impact he saw all four occupants of the car turn around and look back, where the body was lying upon the street. All the circumstances found in the evidence pointed unmistakably to Kearney as the one who urged Steele to flee immediately after the collision, and these circumstances as well negatived the possibility that any one else had done so, notwithstanding the direct denial; and we must conclude from its verdict that the jury found that the appellant was the one who urged Steele to flee. Thus Kearney, having control of the car which Steele was merely driving with his permission becomes equally guilty with Steele of a violation of the section of the Motor Vehicle Act, within the rule of People v. Maggio (Cal. App.) 266 P. 813, a case arising under section 367c of the Penal Code, which contains provisions similar to those of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act.

[3-8] But the case against this appellant does not depend upon this theory alone. The conceded fact is that after the car had proceeded four blocks, which was a matter of seconds in time, this appellant took the wheel and speeded, at a rate faster than Steele had driven, in a direction away from the victim of the collision. By so doing the appellant became a principal in the violation of the section, as will hereafter appear.

The argument is made by this appellant that, as section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act requires the driver of a car to stop immediately and render aid, this appellant cannot be held as a principal or as an accessory before the fact, under the evidence recited. This section (Stats. 1923, p. 562) reads in part as follows: "The driver of any vehicle which strikes any person * * * shall immediately stop and give his name and address and the names and addresses of all passengers * * * and shall also render to such persons all necessary assistance, including the carrying of such persons to a physician or surgeon for medical or surgical treatment, if such treatment is required."

It will be seen that the section requires five separate acts on the part of the driver of a car in collision with a person, a failure to perform any one of which is punishable as a separate offense. People v. Scofield, 203 Cal. 703, 265 P. 914. Though the section requires the driver to stop immediately, no time is fixed within which he must render aid or carry the person injured to medical treatment, if this is necessary. This is manifest from an analysis of the section. It reads that the driver "shall immediately stop and give his name, * * * and shall also render to such persons all necessary assistance." By no process of interpretation can the word "immediately" be construed as limiting or modifying the word "render," appearing in the latter clause of the section. To so hold would make the section ridiculous and unenforceable. Collisions such as render the section applicable usually occur when the driver is going at a high rate of speed, and the victim of the collision is often rendered unconscious or injured in such a way that the assistance required could not be given immediately. The clear purpose of the section is to "prohibit, under pain of severe punishment, negligent or wanton drivers of motor cars from seeking to evade civil or criminal prosecution by escape before their identity could be established, and similarly to prohibit all drivers, whether negligent or not, from leaving persons injured in collisions with cars driven by them in distress and danger for want of proper medical or surgical treatment." People v. Kaufman, 49 Cal. App. 570, 573, 193 P. 953, 955. In People v. Scofield, 203 Cal. 703, 265 P. 914, the Supreme Court had occasion to comment on the provisions of this section of the Vehicle Act, pointing out that it required a reasonable interpretation, and did not require the driver to do an impossible or useless thing. That case involved a collision between two cars, in which the drivers of both were rendered unconscious. Scofield was tried upon a charge of having failed to give his name and address, or to render assistance to the driver of the other car. The Supreme Court pointed out that the statute cannot be literally applied in all cases of collision or accident, but that the driver is required to stop and give his name, if possible to do so, and to render such assistance as is necessary under the circumstances.

Thus, it is conceivable that a vehicle might be traveling at such a high rate of speed that it could not be stopped immediately after the collision, or that the highway is in such condition that the driver would be compelled to move on to a safe stopping place. Certainly it could not be argued that, because he is excused from stopping immediately, he is not required to perform any of the other acts specified in the section, because no one of them could have been performed immediately upon the collision. Then, again, the victim of the collision may have been pinned under his machine or thrown down an embankment, so that it would have been impossible for the driver to give his name immediately, or to have conveyed him to a place for medical treatment immediately; but he certainly would not be excused from rendering such necessary assistance as soon as it was possible or practicable to do so. Whatever may be required under the circumstances must therefore necessarily be a question of fact to be determined by the jury, and we cannot say as a matter of law that the failure to stop within four blocks, or four feet, is in all cases a violation of the section.

Here, the car having been stopped four blocks distant and this appellant having then taken the wheel, it was a question of fact for the jury to determine whether there was still sufficient time to return to the point of collision and render the assistance necessary under the requirements of the statute. Thus it was for the jury to determine whether, when this appellant took the wheel when the car was stopped, he knew that a person had been struck within the meaning of the statute, and whether, in driving away from the place of the collision, the appellant was guilty of aiding and abetting Steele in the commission of the offense, because at the time Kearney took the wheel the opportunity was still present with Steele to return and perform the duty required by the statute.

[9] This appellant complains of the instruction which advised the jury that, to convict him on this count, it was necessary to find, among other things, that he "by words and actions aided, encouraged, or assisted the defendant Steele to drive the vehicle away from the scene of the accident to the city of Oakland to conceal the identity of said Steele and said vehicle." The criticism is based upon the portion of the instruction which we have italicized, the argument being that there was no evidence to warrant it, and that it added the element of motive of flight and concealment as essential to make this appellant a principal. As to the evidence, the admitted fact that the car did not stop, but sped away at an increased speed and in a circuitous route, proved the charge that those in the car were seeking to conceal their identity. The argument upon the element of motive is really that this added a new and separate offense—the aiding of a criminal to escape after the commission of a crime—so that, if the jury believed that Kearney was an accessory after the fact, it could have found him guilty of the crime charged in the information.

But this is really a false issue raised for the first time on this appeal. During the trial before the jury there was no suggestion that the appellant Kearney might be guilty of the separate offense, as an accessory after the crime in aiding Steele to escape arrest for the crime he had committed. The theory of the state was that at the very time of the crime Kearney aided and abetted Steele in the commission of it. In an ordinary case the portion of the instruction complained of might be interpreted as including any act after the crime, aiding the criminal to escape arrest; but here the gist of the offense charged is "the failure to immediately stop, but instead to willfully drive the vehicle away from the scene of the accident to conceal the identity of the driver," as the trial judge had correctly instructed the jury in the instruction immediately preceding the one complained of. We cannot perceive how the jury could have been misled by the language of these instructions. It was the purpose of the trial judge to advise the jury, in line with the decisions heretofore cited, that the section of the Vehicle Act required more than the mere stopping of the vehicle; that its purpose was to prevent drivers of motor vehicles "from seeking to evade civil or criminal prosecution by escape before their identity could be established." People v. Kaufman, supra. There is a clear distinction between an escape to prevent apprehension for a crime already committed and an escape to conceal one's identity, which is itself the commission of the crime denounced by the statute. It was the latter situation which the trial judge submitted to the jury, and we find no error in the instructions.

[10] The next point concerns the attempt to impeach the witness Graham; but, as the whole argument is predicated upon matters outside the record, it does not require consideration.

[11] Finally, it is claimed that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his cross-examination of certain witnesses and in his argument to the jury. In the cross-examination of the character witnesses called by this appellant, they were asked if they had heard that this appellant had run over a child in San Jose, or a man in Alameda, or had frequently been charged with violations of traffic regulations. The questions were objected to and assigned as misconduct. The district attorney was then challenged to prove the facts embodied in the questions, and, to meet the charge of bad faith, attempted to do so, but was stopped on objection of this appellant. Thereafter this appellant was called to the stand, and, in answer to questions propounded by his counsel, denied that he had run over any person in San Jose. No questions were asked as to the other occurrences referred to by the district attorney.

The rule is that a character witness may be cross-examined as to his knowledge or reports of particular and specific charges of acts inconsistent with the character which he is called on to prove. People v. Fodera, 33 Cal. App. 8, 11, 164 P. 22; People v. Hightower, 65 Cal. App. 331, 340, 224 P. 110; People v. Sieber, 201 Cal. 341, 349, 257 P. 64; People v. Smith (Cal. App.) 279 P. 1022. Such method of examination is always to be viewed with caution, because of the prejudice which might result to the defendant, where the district attorney is not acting in good faith; but here the good faith of the district attorney is questioned only in the arguments of counsel, and, in absence of any showing in the record, we must hold that the questions were within the proper bounds of cross-examination.

The judgments and orders denying a new trial as to both defendants are affirmed.

MIDDELCAMP v. ZUMWALT. (Civ. 3791.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Sales $\S$ 477(1)—Vendor under conditional sales contract may waive right to declare forfeiture for failure to pay installment promptly.

Strict compliance with provisions of conditional sales contract providing for installment payments may be waived so as to prohibit vendor from declaring forfeiture on account of failure to pay installment promptly upon date fixed in contract.

2. Sales $\S$ 477(5)—Oral agreement of conditional vendor, unsupported by consideration, to extend time for payment of vendee's note, did not constitute waiver of right to declare forfeiture, where note was due in entirety (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550).

Oral agreement of conditional vendor to extend time for payment of promissory note given by vendee, where not supported by consideration, as required by Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550, did not constitute waiver by vendor of right under contract to take possession of property without notice and declare forfeiture where note was due in its entirety.

3. Sales $\S$ 477(5)—Oral agreement, unsupported by consideration, to extend time for payment of note over one year, held void (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550, 1698).

Oral agreement of vendor under conditional sales contract, extending time for payment of note given by vendee for more than one year without consideration, as required by Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550, held void and ineffective on account of want of consideration, violation of statute of frauds, and violation of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1698, providing that contract in writing may be altered only by another written contract or executed oral agreement.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 204(3)—Objection to testimony relative to oral agreement for extension of time for payment of note could be considered as matter of law, though testimony was introduced without objection (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550, 1698).

Where oral agreement for extension of time for payment of note was void for violation of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1550, requiring consideration for every contract, and Civ. Code, $\S$ 1698, providing that contract in writing may be altered only by another written contract or by executed oral agreement, objection to evidence of the oral agreement could be considered as matter of law, though such testimony was admitted below without objection.

5. Sales $\S$ 477(1)—Conditional seller's mere delay in collection of note short of limitation period held not waiver.

Mere delay of conditional vendor in proceeding to collect note from vendee after it became due held not waiver of right to take proceedings for collection authorized by conditional sales agreement, where statute of limitations had not yet run.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by D. A. Middlecamp against I. G. Zumwalt, doing business under the name of the Colusa Implement Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

U. W. Brown, of Colusa, for appellant.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff began this action to recover possession of a certain "Harris" harvester and 55 horse power motor together with certain appurtenances described in the complaint, constituting a harvesting outfit, and in the event possession could not be had, then for the recovery of $2,000 as damages. The complaint alleges that on the 21st day of March, 1928, the plaintiff was in the actual possession and entitled to the possession of said property. To this complaint the defendant made answer setting up conditional contracts showing that the property involved was sold by the defendant to the plaintiff upon a conditional note and contract containing the following provisions (it may be stated that the transcript shows a lease contract and a promissory note incorporated into a contract, but, as both agreements are identical in substance, we will treat the two instruments as one): Exhibit "B", being the contract containing the promissory note, we take the facts therefrom as follows: On May 1, 1925, the plaintiff executed and delivered to the defendant a promissory note, under the terms and conditions of which the plaintiff promised, one day after date, to pay to the defendant the sum of $4,250, together with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, interest payable at maturity and every six months thereafter, and, if not so paid, to be added to the principal and bear interest at the same rate. The note also contained provisions for attorney's fees in the event suit was instituted. It was also provided in the note that the maker and indorser waived presentment for payment, protest, notice, etc. The writings to which we have referred also provided as follows: That, if one-half of the gross earnings of the harvester and tractor in harvesting grain should be promptly paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, then and in that case the note might run until August, 1926. It was further provided in the agreements that any equipment, repairs, or accessories placed upon the personal property by the purchaser during the continuance of the agreements should become a component part thereof and the title thereto immediately vested in the vendor of the property heretofore referred to, and should be covered by, and included in, the terms of the agreements. The writings just mentioned provided that, if the purchaser should fail to make payment as provided therein, then and in that case the seller, at his option, without notice, might exercise either one of the following remedies: (a) He might declare the entire remaining unpaid purchase price and interest to be immediately due and payable and sue therefor; or (b) he might, without notice, retake possession of said personal property, and without notice, resell the same at public or private sale, and, after deducting all expenses, etc., credit the net proceeds thereof to the unpaid balance on the note herein mentioned, and that the purchaser agreed to pay the seller any deficiency remaining after such sale is completed and net proceeds applied; or "(c) that the seller might take immediate possession of the said personal property, equipment, repairs or accessories, wherever and whenever found, and without notice or demand, declare the purchaser in default, and in such event, all of the rights, titles and equities of the purchaser in and to said property should immediately cease and terminate, and said seller and his assigns released from all obligations to transfer or deliver said personal property to said purchaser, and all sums of money theretofore paid and then due and unpaid by the purchaser to said seller shall remain the sole property of said seller, * * * and be considered as compensation for the use, wear, tear and depreciation of said personal property by said purchaser, and said purchaser agrees to forthwith pay to said seller or his assigns, all payments of interest then due and unpaid, as part compensation for the use of said personal property, as aforesaid." The agreements made time the essence thereof. The plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $1,271.11, and from this judgment the defendant appeals. The instruments to which we have referred by credits entered thereon, and the testimony contained in the transcript show that the plaintiff paid upon said promissory note, on July 6, 1925, the sum of $500, on July 20, 1925, the sum of $1,100, on July 27, 1925, the sum of $600, and that on June 28, 1926, there was entered upon said note a credit of the amount of $323, being that much credited on the note out of a sum of $700 which was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on an open account. The payment made on June 28, 1926, apparently covered the interest on the note up to the date of June 28, 1926, the day that the credit for that amount was entered upon the note. It thus appears that all of the payments referred to were made prior to the 1st day of August, 1926, the date on which the note became due, according to the terms of the agreements entered into between the parties.

After finding the facts concerning the conditional sale of the property to which we have referred, the court found as follows: That "in the year 1926, the defendant extended the time of payment of said note to August 1, 1927, and prior to August 1, 1927, again extended the time for payment to August 1, 1928; that the plaintiff was in the actual possession of said harvester above described on the 21st day of March, 1928, on which date the defendant, without plaintiff's consent, wrongfully took said property from the possession of the plaintiff; that at no time prior to said 21st day of March, 1928, did the defendant exercise any right to retake possession of said property, nor did he notify plaintiff of his intention so to do at any time.

until he actually took possession of said harvester, nor did he, at any time, give any notice to the plaintiff requiring the payment to be made of the balance of said purchase price; that during the period intervening between August 1, 1926, and March 21, 1928, plaintiff expended money and labor in caring for said harvester and the appurtenances thereto, and housed the same on his ranch during a portion of said period of time, to his prejudice, and, by his failure to exercise his right to terminate the rights of the plaintiff in and to said harvester, and under said contract, until March 21, 1928, defendant waived his right so to do under said contract." The court further found that the plaintiff had performed all of the conditions of said contract with the defendant which were to be performed by the plaintiff, except those conditions which were waived by the defendant, and that the amount unpaid on said contract at the time of its taking by the defendant was the sum of $1,978.89.

The only support to the findings referred to found in the record is the oral testimony of the plaintiff that during the year 1926, the time of the maturity of the note was extended for one year, which would make the note payable on August 1, 1927. The testimony of the plaintiff upon this point is as follows: "In 1926 the crop was light and there was not much harvesting; the barley was cheap—I had quite a little barley of my own and I could see, before I got through harvesting, I was not going to be able to meet that note without selling my barley, and the barley was too cheap; I could not make anything out of it, so I asked Zumwalt for an extension of time, and he said he would give me another year's time on the harvester, so I did not pay off the note by August 1, 1926." As to the extension of time from August 1, 1927, to August 1, 1928, the testimony of the plaintiff is as follows: "I was in Zumwalt's office in the fore part of June, 1927, and the barley harvest was light the last year, and I had quite a lot of wheat in, too; I didn't make a deal where I could harvest it; I was in a little jam on it, so I asked Zumwalt if he would grant me an extension of time for another year on this, and he said he would, and I told him I could take it and harvest some other grain, but didn't want to take it out because about the time I would get to harvesting I was afraid the man that had a mortgage on the wheat crop would not advance me money enough to harvest it." The testimony further shows that during the year 1927 the plaintiff threshed a small quantity of corn and put some plates and chains on the machine with which to harvest his crop of corn; that the harvester and other machinery was kept housed on a place called the "Jameson" place. There is nothing in the testimony to show that the plaintiff did anything with relation to the machinery and property involved in this action, during the years 1926, 1927, and the portion of the year 1928, before it was taken possession of by the defendant, which was not covered by the terms of the agreement, in relation to repairs that might be made thereon, nor that it was housed or kept at any place by the plaintiff at the request of the defendant, or that any expenditures were made thereon by the plaintiff at the request of the defendant. The property simply remained in possession of the plaintiff during that period of time, as provided for in the conditional sales agreement. It specified that possession might be taken by the plaintiff, but that title thereto should remain vested in the defendant. The defendant denied the testimony of the plaintiff as to the conversation relating to the extension of time, stating that no such conversation took place. On the 21st day of March, 1928, the defendant took possession of the property covered by the conditional contract of sale, without giving notice to the plaintiff, and between that date and the 26th day of March, 1928, sold the same to a third party by the name of Steidlmayer. On a date not given, but prior to the 26th day of March, 1928, the plaintiff had a conversation with the defendant relative to the plaintiff paying up the balance due on the note referred to herein, and being replaced in possession of the property. It appears from the testimony of the defendant that the defendant agreed to see Mr. Steidlmayer and ascertain if he (Steidlmayer) would release the defendant from the sale of said property that had been made to him by the defendant, and that he, the defendant, would resell the property to the plaintiff, provided the plaintiff would agree to take care of an old note in the sum of something in excess of $1,200, which the plaintiff owed the defendant, and which note had apparently outlawed. According to the defendant the plaintiff refused to enter into any such agreement. Thereafter, and on the 26th day of March, 1928, after the property had been taken possession of by the defendant as herein stated, and after it had been sold by the defendant to Steidlmayer, the plaintiff tendered to the defendant a cashier's check covering the unpaid balance of the promissory note to which we have referred, acceptance of which was refused by the defendant. Thereafter the plaintiff began this action, as heretofore stated, and had judgment in his favor.

[1, 2] In support of the judgment the respondent cites a number of cases beginning with Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 P. 751, to the effect that, where a contract of conditional sale contains provisions for the payment of installments on certain dates, and the payments are not made on those dates, the acceptance of payment after the dates mentioned without objection may constitute a waiver of the right to declare the whole amount of the obligation due, and repossession sion of the property taken and forfeiture declared for failure to comply with the terms of the contract. There seems to be no question but what the law is well settled that a waiver of strict compliance with the terms and provisions of a conditional contract providing for installment payments may be made so as to prohibit the vendor from declaring a forfeiture on account of the failure to pay an installment promptly upon the date fixed in the contract. However, there seems to be no necessity to review the cases having to do with installment payments and the waiver of the right of the vendor to insist upon prompt payment, because the record in the instant case discloses nothing of that kind. Not a single payment appears to have been made upon the note after August 1, 1926. Upon that date the entire sum of the note was due. There were no installments remaining to be paid after that date. The note was due in its entirety, and, if there was no extension of time, then and in that case the defendant possessed the right, under the contracts to which we have referred, to take possession of the property without notice and sell the same without notice. The defendant in this case took possession of the property without notice, and as subdivision (c) of the contract provided that he might do, thereafter declared a forfeiture and proceeded to sell the same. The oral testimony relating to the extension of time upon which the court found that the time of payment of the note was extended, is relied upon by the respondent as a waiver of the right of the defendant to demand payment or insist upon a forfeiture or proceed to take possession of the property until after August 1, 1928. The testimony of course shows that it was in no sense a waiver. It was simply, if anything, an oral agreement for the extension of time of payment of a promissory note. In the first place, the testimony shows, and the record conclusively establishes, that there was no consideration of the promise to extend the time of payment of the promissory note in the event such promise was made. Section 1550 of the Civil Code provides that every contract must have a sufficient consideration. Whether the contract made in 1926, extending the time of payment of the promissory note until August 1, 1927, was or was not made as alleged by the plaintiff and found by the court falls within the category of an executed contract, is wholly immaterial from the fact that under the provisions of section 1550 of the Civil Code it never did rise to the dignity of an enforceable agreement and did not constitute, for lack of consideration, an extension of time.

[3] The court found that prior to August 1, 1927, the defendant extended the time of payment of the note until August 1, 1928. This finding is based upon the oral testimony to which we have referred. Likewise there is an absolute want of consideration for any such extension of time. This so-called extension of time, being oral and not to be performed within one year, is void, as contrary to the statute of frauds, and furthermore is violative of the terms of section 1698 of the Civil Code, which reads: "A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise." It is thus seen that the finding of the court as to the extension of time has no support in the testimony. While it does not seem necessary to cite authorities in addition to section 1550, Civil Code, with regard to the lack of consideration, we may call attention to the case of Lynch et al. v. Sable, etc., 122 Or. 597, 260 P. 222, 223, 55 A. L. R. 180, where an automobile was sold upon a conditional contract and the property repossessed by the vendor, and the buyer claimed that the seller had promised to hold it as security until the balance of the purchase price was paid. The court said: "Plaintiffs rely upon a claim that defendant promised to hold the automobile after it repossessed itself thereof as security for the unpaid purchase price. Plaintiffs claim that defendant so promised to hold said automobile for plaintiffs until the 10th day of September. They allege in their complaint that this promise was made for a valuable consideration. A careful reading of the testimony, however, fails to disclose any consideration for the alleged promise relied upon by plaintiffs. The sole testimony of this feature of the case is an interview between one of the plaintiffs and the president of defendant on a street in the city of Portland. There is no testimony of anything of value having passed between them at that time. Plaintiffs do not claim that they paid any amount as earnest money. If the alleged agreement was supported by any consideration, this court would be bound by the verdict of the jury. But, inasmuch as there was no consideration for the promise on the part of defendant to so hold the automobile, its promise cannot be enforced in law. The complaint shows on its face that the title thereto was vested in the defendant."

[4] The record here shows that the title to the property involved was vested in the defendant. Again, if the promise made in 1927 to extend the time of payment of the promissory note to August 1, 1928, had any consideration to support it, it would still be vulnerable from the fact that it was not an executed oral agreement. The time for it to become an executed agreement, if otherwise valid, would have been August 1, 1928. The record does not show that any objection was made to the introduction of the testimony of the plaintiff as to the conversation relating to the extension of time of the promissory note. However, under the following authorities it would seem that the objection may be considered as a matter of law. In the case of Dollar v. International Banking Co., 13 Cal. App. 331, 109

P. 499, 504, the court having before it the question as to whether a writing might be varied by parol evidence, held parol testimony introduced without objection, insufficient to change the terms of the writing, and in so doing, used the following language: "Whether or not a contract in writing may be varied by parol evidence is a question of substantive law, while the admission or rejection of secondary evidence is governed by the rules of evidence"—citing Greenleaf on Evidence. "Where a contract is reduced to writing, whether required by law to be written or not, the writing supersedes all other negotiations and stipulations concerning the matter made at the time or prior thereto." Again, in the case of Rottman v. Hevener, 54 Cal. App. 474, 202 P. 329, 331, where it was contended that the time of payment of a promissory note had been extended by an agent of the defendant, the court used the following language: "Equally unavailing as a defense is the fact, if it be a fact, that subsequently to the execution of the promissory note plaintiff's agent again told defendant that the instrument would not become payable until payment should be demanded. Under the statute of this state (Civil Code, § 1698) a contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement but not otherwise. Therefore, whatever may be the rule in jurisdictions where there is no such statutory provision, it is the established rule in this state that the time of payment as fixed by the written contract may not be suspended or extended by a subsequent unexecuted oral agreement"—citing a number of cases. In the case of Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 658, 60 P. 426, 427, the court points out the change of the statute, and says: "The section, as amended, lays down a valuable and salutary rule in regard to written instruments. It prevents the parties who have made a promissory note, after it has become due according to the time written therein, from making the defense that it is not due by reason of a parol promise to extend the time, which promise would depend upon the credibility of interested witnesses." To the same effect is the case of Estes v. Delphes, 73 Cal. App. 643, 238 P. 1085, as is also the case of Rathbun v. Security Mfg. Co., 82 Cal. App. 793, 256 P. 296, where such testimony was introduced for the purposes of explaining or excusing nonperformance, and also upon the claim that the other party was estopped to take advantage of the nonpayment of the note when due. It was held that such contention was without merit. The cases heretofore referred to are cited in the opinion in that case on page 795, 256 P. 297. See, also, Pacific, etc., Co. v. Steiner, 192 Cal. 376, 220 P. 304.

[5] No question of estoppel is raised or pleaded in this case; no question of fraud; no question of being misled is raised or tendered; but the simple fact of an extension of time of payment, which we think the authorities herein cited show to be without merit. The finding of the court that the plaintiff had performed all the conditions on his part to be performed is shown to have no support by any testimony contained in the record. Nor do we find anything in the record to support the following, contained in one of the findings: "And by his failure to exercise his right to terminate the rights of the plaintiff in and to said harvester under said contract, until March 21, 1928, defendant waived his right to do so under said contract." No authorities have been cited, and we think none can be cited, to the point that mere failure to proceed to collect a promissory note after it has become due is a waiver of the right to make collection. At least not until the statute of limitations has run would the right of the holder of a promissory note, under such circumstances, be barred or held to have waived the right to seek payment and enforce whatever rights were guaranteed to him by the terms and conditions of the agreements entered into at the time of the sale. Mere delay cannot be held a waiver of the right to collect the amount due and payable on a promissory note. The terms of the contract entered into between the parties provided for the defendant doing exactly what the record in this case shows that he did do. The only defense is that of the alleged oral promise to extend the time of payment on the promissory note after it had become due, without any consideration whatever therefor, which defense we think, under the authorities cited, must be held to be without merit.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed.

MOORE et al. v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 3735).★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 20, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 18, 1929.

1. Injunction $\S$ 252(4) — Value of grapes wrongfully converted by fruit company's receiver under temporary restraining order held recoverable as damages resulting from restraining order which prevented interference with receiver's marketing of crop.

Where receiver of fruit company, in suit to foreclose mortgage on grape crop, obtained temporary restraining order and gave bond, which provided for owners' recovery of damages by reason of the temporary restraining order, in case its issuance should be held improvident, owners of crop, on subsequent dismissal of action, held entitled to recover value of portion of grape crop seized and converted by the receiver, notwithstanding tortious nature of receiver's conduct, in view of language of restraining order enjoining owners from interfering with receiver in "supervising, controlling, packing, cleaning, shipping, disposing of, and selling the crop of grapes."

2. Injunction $\S$ 252(1)—Where language of injunction wrongfully issued is ambiguous, defendant may recover damages sustained in obedience to order as he reasonably construed it.

If an injunction which is wrongfully issued is framed in ambiguous terms, defendant therein is entitled to recover damages sustained in obeying it as he reasonably and in good faith construed it.

3. Injunction $\S$ 252(5)—Party wrongfully enjoined may recover damages sustained by reason of injunction within penalty of bond (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 529).

When injunction is wrongfully issued and subsequently dissolved, party enjoined, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 529, will be entitled to recover such damages, within limit of penalty of bond, as he may have sustained by reason of issuing of injunction.

4. Injunction $\S$ 235—Subsequent dismissal of action amounted to determination that plaintiff was not entitled to injunction.

Subsequent dismissal of action in which plaintiff obtained temporary restraining order was equivalent to determination that he was not entitled to injunction prayed for.

5. Injunction $\S$ 252(4)—Damage recoverable for wrongful issuance of injunction is that actually, necessarily, and proximately resulting, and damages should furnish compensation for loss sustained.

Damage recoverable for wrongful issuance of injunction is limited to such as appears with reasonable certainty to be actual, necessary, and proximate result of injunction; but allowance of damage is controlled by equitable principles, and should furnish just and reasonable compensation for loss sustained.

6. Injunction $\S$ 252(4)—Surety on plaintiff's bond is liable, if damage to defendant may be reasonably anticipated and attributed to injunction.

Where damage sustained by defendant in injunction suit is not remote, but may be reasonably anticipated, and attributed to the effect of the injunction, surety on bond covering damages resulting from restraining order is liable.

7. Injunction $\S$ 252(8)—Counsel fees, recoverable on dissolution of temporary restraining order, must be confined to compensation for services in vacating order.

Counsel fees, to be recoverable as damages on dissolution of temporary restraining order, must be confined to compensation for reasonable value of services actually performed in vacating order alone.

8. Injunction $\S$ 252(8)—Undertaking given by plaintiff to secure damages resulting from temporary restraining order, granted pending hearing, included defendant's attorney's fees, where merits of case were not considered.

Where, in suit to foreclose crop lien, temporary restraining order was granted pending hearing of order to show cause and petition for vacation of restraining order, and restraining order was denied without any consideration of merits, and plaintiff thereupon dismissed action, legal services procured by defendant were necessarily performed in procuring dissolution of temporary restraining order, and defendant's attorney's fees were recoverable as damages under bond giving defendant damages sustained by reason of temporary restraining order.

9. Injunction $\S$ 251—Expert testimony as to reasonable value of services of plaintiff's attorneys in procuring dissolution of temporary restraining order was unnecessary.

In suit on indemnity bond for damages resulting from temporary restraining order, in which plaintiff sought to recover as damages amount of counsel fees incurred in procuring dissolution of order, expert testimony as to reasonable value of counsel's services was unnecessary, where extent, duration, and nature of services was shown by record.

10. Injunction $\S$ 251—Finding as to reasonable value of grapes converted held sustained by evidence, in action on bond for damages resulting from order restraining plaintiffs from interfering with harvesting and marketing grape crop.

In action by owner of vineyard land on an indemnity bond for damages resulting from order temporarily restraining them from interfering with harvesting and marketing of grape crop, evidence held sufficient to sustain trial court's finding as to reasonable value of grapes converted by the plaintiff in the former suit.

11. Injunction $\S$ 251—Price which portion of same variety and crop of grapes actually brought in market at time of conversion sufficiently established market value.

In absence of contrary evidence, price which portion of same variety and crop of grapes actually brought on market at time of conversion furnished ample proof of reasonable market value of grapes converted, in action on bond for damages resulting from order which temporarily restrained plaintiffs from interfering with harvesting and marketing of grape crop.

12. Appeal and error ⚡931(5)—For purpose of supporting judgment, it may be assumed court disregarded statement of witness inconsistent with judgment.

For the purpose of supporting the judgment, it may be assumed that court disregarded statement of witness inconsistent with judgment, and accepted different statement of same witness with which judgment could be reconciled.

13. Injunction ⚡252(7)—Court costs in foreclosure proceeding, not shown to have been expended strictly on account of restraining order, should not be allowed as damages on bond accompanying restraining order.

In action on indemnity bond for damages resulting from temporary restraining order issued in suit to foreclose chattel mortgage, item incurred in payment of court costs in the foreclosure proceeding, not shown to have been expended strictly on account of restraining order, should be stricken.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by William Neil Moore and another against the Maryland Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

O. C. Parkinson, of Stockton, for respondents.

ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in an action on an indemnity bond for damages, resulting from an order temporarily restraining the owners from interfering with the harvesting and marketing of a grape crop.

Respondents are the owners of 11 acres of vineyard land in San Joaquin county, upon which there was growing, in 1926, a crop of grapes. E. G. Potter, as receiver of the Stewart Fruit Company, brought an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on said crop. A temporary restraining order was granted, prohibiting these respondents from interfering with the harvesting and marketing of the crop by Potter. Upon the granting of this restraining order, the appellant executed and filed in the former case an indemnity bond for $1,000, providing that "if the defendants, or either of them, recover judgment in said action, or if it be adjudged that said plaintiff is not entitled to said temporary restraining order, the said plaintiff will pay to said parties enjoined such damages not exceeding the sum of $1,000 and costs as said defendants may sustain by reason of said temporary restraining order, if the said superior court finally decides that the said plaintiff was not entitled thereto." Thereupon the said Potter picked and marketed a portion of said crop of grapes. Within about a week subsequent to the granting of said restraining order, these respondents employed counsel and moved the court in that action to vacate said restraining order, which motion was granted, and without further proceedings the action was subsequently dismissed by the said Potter. This action for damages for conversion of the crop of grapes, together with costs and counsel fees incurred in obtaining the release of the restraining order, was brought against this appellant. Judgment was rendered in favor of the respondents for the sum of $494.90. The court found that:

"By virtue of the restraining order issued in action No. 20273 in this superior court, E. G. Potter, of the Stewart Fruit Company, upon whose behalf defendant executed and delivered the bond referred to in the foregoing findings, was permitted to seize and convert and injure a portion of said crop of grapes, of the reasonable value of $365.90, and plaintiffs were restrained from interfering with said seizure, conversion, and injury, and by reason of the issuance of said restraining order plaintiffs herein were damaged in said sum of $365.90. By reason of the issuance of said restraining order, plaintiffs were obliged to incur and pay, and did incur and pay, reasonable costs of suit in the sum of $29 and reasonable attorney's fees in the sum of $100, and were damaged in said sums."

The appellant claims that the surety on the bond is not liable, for the reason that the damage resulting from the conversion of the grapes was not "by virtue of said restraining order"; that the record contains no evidence of the market value of the grapes which were taken; that the record fails to show that the $100 attorney's fee was incurred solely for services in dissolving the restraining order; and that the costs of suit were not incurred by reason of the restraining order.

[1, 2] It is argued that the restraining order was not the cause of the conversion of the grapes, but, upon the contrary, that the damage to the crop was the result of the tort of Potter, who alone became liable therefor. Potter, however, was the principal upon the indemnity bond which is the basis of this action. At his instance the owners of the grapes were wrongfully enjoined from interfering with his custody, or preventing Potter from "supervising, controlling, packing, cleaning, shipping, disposing of, and selling the crop of grapes." In effect, by means of this restraining order, Potter was authorized to retain and dispose of the grapes, and the respondents were prevented from exercising any right of ownership over them, which might enable them to protect, preserve, harvest, or market the crop. While the language of the order does not specifically restrain the picking of the grapes, it recognizes the authority of Potter to handle them, and this is clearly implied, for respondents were precluded from handling or marketing the crop. Little aid in preserving the crop would accrue from merely picking the fruit, to turn it over to Potter. It would be a strained and unreasonable construction of the foregoing language to hold that the order left any authority in the respondents to control or preserve the crop.

Even if the language were uncertain in this respect, the owners were justified in assuming that they were thereby deprived of the right to pick, preserve, or market the fruit. If such construction of the language was not unreasonable, the sureties would be liable for damages resulting from a wrongful procuring of the injunction. In 14 Ruling Case Law, 482, § 184, it is said: "In case an injunction, which is wrongfully issued, is framed in ambiguous terms, the defendant therein is entitled to recover such damages as he has sustained in obeying it as he reasonably and in good faith understood it." 1 Joyce on Inj. 317, § 192.

[3] It is well-settled law that, when an injunction is wrongfully issued and subsequently dissolved, the party enjoined will be entitled to such damages, within the limit of the penalty of the bond, as he may have sustained by reason of the issuing of the injunction. Section 529, Code Civ. Proc.; Asevado v. Orr, 100 Cal. 293, 299, 34 P. 777, 779; Rice v. Cook, 92 Cal. 144, 28 P. 219.

[4, 5] On motion of the respondents, the restraining order was vacated, and an injunction denied. The subsequent dismissal of the action was equivalent to a determination that the applicant was not entitled to an injunction. In the Asevado Case, supra, it is said: "The voluntary dismissal of the action by the [plaintiffs] had the same effect as a decision of the court that [they] were not entitled to the injunction." Frahm v. Walton, 130 Cal. 396, 62 P. 618; Dowling v. Polack, 18 Cal. 625. It is true that the damage which is recoverable for the wrongful issuing of an injunction is limited to such as appears with reasonable certainty and accuracy to be the actual, necessary, and proximate result of the injunction. San José Fruit Packing Co. v. Cutting, 133 Cal. 237, 65 P. 565; 32 C. J. 464, § 807; 2 High on Inj. (4th Ed.) 1613, § 1663; 1 Joyce on Inj., 312, § 190. The allowance of such damage is controlled by equitable principles, and should furnish just and reasonable compensation for the loss sustained.

It cannot be logically argued that, because the restraining order did not purport to actually transfer title to the grapes, but merely prevented the owners from harvesting and marketing them, therefore the appropriation of the fruit by Potter was a mere tort, for which the surety is not liable, because the wrongful act was not the direct result of the injunction. The restraining order was the direct cause of preventing the owners from picking, preserving, or disposing of their crop. It was the direct cause of preventing them from opposing the appropriation of the crop by Potter. Its effect was negative, rather than positive; but the result was the same. The crop was lost to the owners. It is immaterial whether the order resulted in the grapes rotting on the vines, or whether Potter appropriated them to his own use. In either event the result of the restraining order was the loss of the grapes to the owners, for the reason that the court had effectively enjoined the respondents from exercising any acts of ownership over the crop.

In High on Injunctions, 1624, § 1673, it is said: "In determining the amount of damages to be allowed upon the dissolution of an injunction restraining one from exercising acts of ownership, * * * damages for the crops which defendant was prevented by the injunction from harvesting may properly be allowed." The same section later illustrates the above declaration of law by saying: "Where a mortgagor obtains an injunction to prevent the mortgagee from selling the premises under a decree of foreclosure, and pending the injunction the mortgagor removes the emblements from the premises, the value of the emblements should be included in the damages awarded to the mortgagee upon dissolution."

The case of Barton v. Fisk, 30 N. Y. 166, is quite similar on principle to the case at bar. The plaintiff claimed title to certain timber, which was on defendants' land. A controversy over the title arose. Plaintiff brought suit to recover the timber, and procured a preliminary injunction prohibiting the defendants from exercising acts of ownership over the timber. The plaintiff was defeated in the action. Pending the trial the plaintiff appropriated the timber to his own use and disposed of it. Chief Justice Denio said:

"This seems to me a very plain case. * * * While the defendants' hands were tied, the plaintiff carried off the property, destroyed its identity, and disposed of and converted its proceeds to his own use. * * * The effect of the injunction manifestly was to allow the plaintiff to carry off and dispose of the property, while the defendants, who were, as the event has shown, its owners were precluded from doing anything whatever in court or out of court, to protect themselves in its possession. Prima facie, the value of the property which the defendants have lost, was the measure of the defendants' damages. * * * Under the existing facts it is the same thing as though it had been destroyed, while the owners were prevented from extending their hands for its preservation. The plaintiff's argument is, that the loss was not occasioned by the injunction, but by the tortious act of the plaintiff. * * * This is too narrow a view of the question."

In a concurring opinion Mr. Justice Hogeboom in the same case said:

"The damages in question are occasioned by the injunction. But for the injunction the defendants would not have lost their property. By the injunction the plaintiff was impliedly authorized to take it. * * * The loss which the defendants have sustained, was incurred by compliance with the order of the Court. * * * The liberal rule of damages declared * * * sustains the claim of the defendants in this case."

The author of Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) p. 1443, § 527, quotes with approval the foregoing language of the last-mentioned authority.

[6] We conclude that, where the damage is not remote, but may be reasonably anticipated and attributed to the effect of the injunction, as in the present case, the bond is liable. The cases relied upon by appellant may be readily distinguished from the present action.

In Cummings v. Mugge, 94 Ill. 186, the timber which was the subject of litigation was in the hands of the sheriff on a writ of replevin, at the time the injunction was issued. The owner therefore did not have the custody or right of possession while the injunction was in force. The language of the injunction does not appear. Pending the litigation, the complainant appropriated the timber. Upon dissolution of the injunction, the owner was allowed damages, but not for the full value of the timber which was taken. The value of the timber appropriated would be a proper subject of compensation in the replevin action. The court said: "The service of the writ of injunction in no way authorized or caused the wrongful act of appellee, in taking and converting the property." If the timber had remained in the hands of the sheriff, in the absence of the injunction, the owner would have had no power to exercise rights of ownership over it to prevent an appropriation thereof. In the present case the very restraining order, the construction of which is here involved, recognizes Potter's right to retain, control, and market the crop of grapes, and specifically enjoins the respondents from interfering therewith. There is a clear distinction between these cases in that regard.

In the case of Gobbi v. Dileo, 58 Or. 14, 111 P. 49, 113 P. 57, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 951, and the later case of Burley Tobacco Growers, etc., v. Pennebaker, etc., 221 Ky. 718, 299 S. W. 734, it is held that the surety on an injunction bond is not liable for the theft or appropriation of the property by strangers to the litigation. This principle seems sound and reasonable, for under such circumstances the loss cannot be anticipated, or attributed to the wrongful act of the complainant, who procured the injunction, unless it could be shown that his negligence in the lack of care of the property contributed to the loss or theft. But that feature was not involved in either cause. The court in these cases merely holds that the theft or appropriation of the property by a stranger to the litigation was not the proximate result of the granting of the injunction.

In the case of Wood v. Hollander, 84 Tex. 394, 19 S. W. 551, the recorded facts indicate that, subsequent to the issuing of an injunction, a receiver was appointed, and by order of the court the property involved in the litigation was intrusted to the receiver during which time the damage accrued. Upon dissolution of the injunction, damages were sought to be recovered against the surety. It was held that the injunction bond was not liable, for the reason that the responsibility had been transferred to the receiver, and the loss was therefore not by reason of the injunction, although the receiver would be liable on his bond, as such, for his mismanagement. 1 Joyce on Inj. 313, § 191.

[7] It is true that counsel fees, which are recoverable as damages upon dissolution of a temporary restraining order wrongfully procured, must be confined solely to compensation for the reasonable value of the services actually performed in vacating the order alone. Curtiss v. Bachman, 110 Cal. 433, 42 P. 910, 52 Am. St. Rep. 111; Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 P. 833; 1 Spelling on Inj. 821, § 969.

[8] In the present case the undertaking was given to secure damages which accrued by reason of a temporary restraining order, which was granted in a suit to foreclose a crop lien, pending the hearing of an order to show cause, which was set for a definite date. The order to show cause and the petition to vacate the temporary restraining order were necessarily heard together. The disposition of the temporary restraining order, and the order to show cause, necessarily determined the pending petition for injunction, which was merely incident to the chief issues of the case. The merits of the cause, which was primarily a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage upon the grape crop, were in no wise involved in this hearing for which counsel fees are claimed as an element of damages. The case was never tried upon its merits. When the restraining order was denied, the plaintiff dismissed his action. The record in the present case sufficiently supports the findings of the court and the pleadings, to the effect that the legal services were all necessarily performed in procuring a dissolution of the temporary restraining order.

[9] The plaintiff William Neil Moore testified that he hired two lawyers to represent him in the injunction proceeding, that they were engaged three days in the performance of that service, and that he paid them $100 therefor.

"Q. How many days were you engaged in the hearing of the injunction proceedings? A. Three days, I think.

"Q. Were these attorneys acting for you in court during those days? A. Yes.

"Q. Did they do any work for you other than in an appearance in regard to this injunction? * * * A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. Did they make any charge for their services in this matter? A. Yes.

"Q. What was that charge? A. One hundred dollars.

"Q. Did you pay that $100? A. Yes."

Expert testimony of the reasonable value of the services was unnecessary. The extent, duration, and nature of the services, as shown by the record, furnished the court with ample evidence upon which to determine the value of the services. Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49; Zimmer v. Kilborn, 165 Cal. 523, 132 P. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 368; Conner v. Blodgett, 18 Cal. App. 787, 124 P. 733; 2 R. C. L. 1059, §§ 145-147.

[10-12] The appellant contends that the evidence fails to support the finding that he "picked, destroyed, or converted to his own use" grapes of the reasonable value of $365.90. The evidence as to the quantity and value of the grapes which were appropriated might have been more definite and certain. However, we are of the opinion that the record sufficiently sustains the findings in this regard. The damage, which was allowed, was small compared with the usual production of the 11 acres of vines, and the evidence indicates that the major proportion of the crop was lost to respondents. While it is true that Mr. Burson, who was formerly the managing agent for the Stewart Fruit Company, and who directed the picking of the grapes in question for Potter, testified as a witness for respondents that they shipped only about 270 boxes, the shipping statements of the company which were introduced in evidence show that 198 crates of Tokay grapes were shipped from the Moore ranch in 1926, and brought a net market price of over 50 cents per box.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the price which a portion of the same variety and crop of grapes actually brought in that market at the time of the conversion furnishes ample proof of the reasonable market value thereof. 23 C. J. 57, § 1802. Mr. Burson further testified:

"The Stewart Fruit Company handled this property for several years. * * * Around 1,600 to 1,800 [boxes], maybe 2,000, Tokays were taken off the vineyard the year before, and I judge was something like that this year in question.

"Q. From 1,600 to 2,000? A. Something like that, I would say."

The plaintiff William Nell Moore testified that they had picked not more than 75 boxes of grapes from the vineyard that year before they were stopped by the restraining order; that no other persons picked grapes in that vineyard that season, except himself and men who were employed by the appellant, and that after the restraining order was dissolved there remained unpicked only "415 lugs, consisting of 245 Black Prince, 152 Tokays," etc.

For the purpose of supporting the judgment, it may be assumed, from the foregoing state of the record, that the court disregarded the statement that only 270 boxes were shipped, and accepted the same witness' statement that the vineyard that year produced 1,600 to 2,000 boxes of Tokay grapes, and that appellant was responsible for the destruction or conversion of the entire crop, except the 75 boxes which plaintiff testified were picked before the restraining order was issued, together with the 152 boxes of Tokay grapes, which were all that remained after the dissolution of the order. This would leave over 1,300 boxes of Tokay grapes, which were lost by the respondents. The actual sales of Tokay grapes from this crop that season netted over 50 cents a box. The record contains no other evidence of the value of the grapes. This is therefore prima facie evidence of their reasonable market value, amounting to a sum far in excess of the damages allowed on that account by the court.

Furthermore, there is some evidence that the grapes were picked prematurely, with the inference that the market price which was received was materially less on that account. There was also evidence of loss sustained in permitting the grapes to mold, and in upsetting and spilling a quantity of them. We are not apprised of the basis upon which the trial court computed the damages which were allowed, and merely suggest the foregoing as a plausible theory, which finds ample support in the record, sufficient upon which to warrant the upholding of judgment in that regard.

[13] The damages which were allowed by the court included an item of $29, which was incurred in the payment of court costs in the foreclosure proceeding. It does not appear what proportion of this sum, if any, was expended strictly on account of the issuing of the restraining order. Upon the authorities heretofore cited, this item was therefore improperly allowed, and the judgment should be modified to that extent.

Accordingly, the judgment is modified, by striking therefrom the sum of $29, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed, the respondents to recover their costs.

HENDERSON et al. v. GENERAL ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION. (Civ. 6638.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 21, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Nov. 18, 1929.

1. Sales ⇨467—Where retail dealer, given possession of automobile and authority to sell for cash, sold on credit under conditional sales contract, purchaser became equitable owner (Civ. Code, §§ 1142, 2026).

Where owner of automobile delivered it to retail dealer as factor, under Civ. Code, § 2026, with authority to sell for cash, one purchasing in good faith from retail dealer for credit under conditional sales contract obtained equitable title, under Civ. Code, § 1142, and legal title remained in former owner, with right of possession in purchaser so long as he kept up payments.

2. Appeal and error ⇨931(4)—Judgment for plaintiff must be regarded on appeal as involving finding against defense of estoppel.

Where judgment of trial court was entered in defendant's favor, case must be regarded on appeal as one in which court actually made finding against defense of estoppel, where evidence was received on that defense, although it was not pleaded in answer.

3. Estoppel ⇨116—One taking assignment of conditional sales contract from factor had burden to prove that owner of car sold was estopped.

In suit by owner of automobile sold by factor under conditional sales agreement, against one taking assignment of conditional sale contract from factor for prior indebtedness, burden of proving estoppel of plaintiff was on defendant.

4. Chattel mortgages ⇨138(1)—Sales ⇨473 (1)—Seller's title under conditional sales contract is superior to that of subsequent mortgagee or purchaser.

Title retained by seller under conditional sales contract is, until full payment, superior to that of subsequent mortgagee or purchaser of personal property from the conditional buyer, even if subsequent mortgage or purchase was made without knowledge or notice of reservation of title, and was for full value.

5. Factors ⇨51—Finding that owner of automobile, who transferred it to dealer for cash sale, was not estopped to assert title as against one to whom dealer assigned conditional sales contract, held justified (Civ. Code, § 2026).

In action by owner of automobile delivered to retail dealer as factor, under Civ. Code, § 2026, for sale for cash, against one to whom dealer assigned conditional sales contract for value after unauthorized sale on credit, evidence which indicated that defendant knew method of marketing automobiles, and often employed similar plan, and knew of dealer's untrustworthiness, justified trial court's finding that plaintiff was not estopped to assert title to automobile, subject to equitable rights of purchaser.

6. Estoppel ⇨75—Estoppel of owner to assert title as against one purchasing property from third party must be based on owner's act or omission.

Estoppel of owner to assert title as against subsequent purchaser of property from third party must be based on act or omission of true owner.

7. Factors ⇨51—Automobile dealer had no apparent authority to sell conditional sales contract because of mere possession thereof.

Dealer's possession of conditional sales contract entered into by him without authority from owner of automobile did not amount to apparent authority to sell, or clothe dealer with indicia of ownership of contract.

8. Factors ⇨51—Title to conditional sales contract transferred by agent did not pass, where owner did not transfer possession of contract to agent, together with power to dispose thereof (Civ. Code, § 1142).

Provisions of Civ. Code, § 1142, for transfer of title, where possession of personal property with power to dispose thereof is transferred by owner to another person, who sells for value in ordinary course of business, did not apply to transfer of conditional sales contract, where owner of contract did not transfer possession of contract to agent with power to dispose of it.

9. Factors ⇨66—Owner of automobile, suing assignee of dealer's conditional sales contract, entered into by dealer without authority, need not elect between action for quieting title to car and possession of contract (Civ. Code, § 2026).

Owner of automobile, who designated dealer factor under Civ. Code, § 2026, to sell automobile for cash, was not required, in suit against one to whom dealer assigned conditional sale contract after unauthorized sale of car for credit, to elect between causes of action for quieting title to automobile and for recovery of possession of sale contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Charles P. Henderson and others against the General Acceptance Corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Franklin T. Poore, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Henderson Securities Corporation, hereinafter called the respondent, purchased from Pacific Nash Motor Company a certain automobile, and delivered or caused it to be delivered to P. A. Hunter, who was a retail dealer of automobiles doing business as Vallejo Motor Sales Company. Respondent and Hunter entered into a written agreement which constituted Hunter a factor, under Civil Code, § 2026, and which authorized Hunter to sell the said automobile within 30 days for cash, the selling price to be and remain the property of the respondent. Hunter, in violation of the agreement with his principal, the respondent, sold said automobile to George A. Jewatt, a bona fide purchaser, upon terms of credit. Hunter took from Jewatt, in exchange for the said automobile, the old automobile of Jewatt, and executed with him a conditional sale installment contract by which Jewatt was permitted to pay in monthly installments, and by which title to the automobile was withheld from Jewatt pending final payment to be made by him. At the time this action was commenced, Jewatt had made some of the payments. At the time of the trial he had made most of them, and shortly after the trial he had made the last two payments into court, pursuant to stipulation.

Hunter had been doing business with appellant in substantially the same way as with respondent, and was indebted to appellant on that account. Appellant was pressing him for payments, and even contemplating criminal prosecution against him for having given it a bad check. Hunter, instead of assigning Jewatt's contract to the respondent, as he should have done (as a possible acceptable substitute for a cash sale price), assigned the contract to the appellant, and was credited by appellant for the value of the contract upon his prior indebtedness. Respondent soon heard of this and made demand on appellant for the contract, claiming to be the owner thereof and of the automobile, subject to the rights of Jewatt, who was in the position of a bona fide purchaser from a retail dealer. The demand being refused, this action was commenced. The complaint contained two causes of action. The first was in replevin for the contract, treating that document as specific personal property. The second was an action to quiet title to the automobile itself. Jewatt was not made a party, but the parties hereto fully concede his rights, and understand that any judgment in this action must necessarily adjudicate the rights of the parties hereto, subject to Jewatt's rights. The court gave judgment for the plaintiff upon both causes of action, and the defendant appeals.

[1] The respondent, in making Hunter its factor and delivering to him the automobile to sell for cash, did not part with the legal title to the automobile, but thereby gave Hunter the power to transfer the same to the purchaser on its behalf. The purchaser, Jewatt, obtained the equitable title when he purchased in good faith from the retail dealer, Hunter, under the provisions of Civil Code, § 1142, even though he did not buy for cash in accordance with Hunter's factor contract. Immediately after Hunter contracted the sale to Jewatt, therefore, the respondent still held the legal title of the automobile, and Jewatt, as purchaser under a conditional sale installment contract reserving title in seller, was the equitable owner in possession and entitled to possession so long as he kept up his payments. This condition of title existed at the time this action was commenced.

The complaint alleges no equitable matter. It alleges that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the contract and that it is "the absolute legal and equitable owner of the automobile * * * in the possession of Jewatt. * * *" The answer of the defendant does not plead equitable matter, does not plead an estoppel, but simply denies the allegations of the complaint. The findings follow the pleadings, and do not find upon equitable matter such as estoppel. The judgment is for respondent for the possession of the contract, or in the alternative for $158, the value thereof, that sum being the amount remaining unpaid by Jewatt at the time of trial, and for the further sum of $790 against appellant, the amount collected and received by appellant from Jewatt, since the contract was assigned to it by Hunter. The judgment further declared that respondent was entitled to collect the unpaid installments from Jewatt and it quieted respondent's title to said automobile as against appellant.

[2] Appellant claims upon this appeal that the respondent is estopped from asserting its ownership in the contract by the fact that it put Hunter in possession of the automobile with power to sell the same. Appellant claims to be a purchaser of the contract in good faith for value and without notice of respondent's ownership. This equitable estoppel should have been pleaded in the answer (10 Cal. Jur. 654); but, notwithstanding this omission, the cause was fully tried, evidence was received upon this defense and no point is here made of this defect in pleading. The judgment of the court being in favor of respondent, we must regard the case as one where the court has actually made a finding against the defense of estoppel.

[3,4] The evidence does not establish the defense of estoppel to the extent that a finding against that defense should be held on this appeal to be unsupported. The burden of proving this defense was, of course, upon the appellant, for without all the elements of an estoppel the following rule would apply as between respondent, Hunter, and appellant: "The owner of personal property has the right to make an agreement to sell the same and deliver possession thereof to the buyer, upon the condition that the title thereto shall, nevertheless, remain in the seller until the price agreed on has been fully paid, and the title so withheld by the owner will, until full payment, be superior to that of a subsequent mortgagee or purchaser of such personal property from the buyer, even if such subsequent mortgage or purchase was made without knowledge or notice of the reservation of title and paid full value for the property." Oakland Bank of Savings v. California P. B. Co., 183 Cal. 297, 191 P. 524, and cases cited.

See, also, Marker v. Williams, 39 Cal. App. 674, 179 P. 735, and 25 Cor. Jur. pp. 416 and 417, § 149.

[5] The evidence showed that appellant well knew the method of marketing automobiles. Appellant had often sold automobiles through Hunter's salesrooms upon substantially the same plan employed by respondent. Hunter's indebtedness to appellant grew out of such transactions. Appellant knew Hunter was untrustworthy. Its agent, Burke, expressed doubt about the title Hunter was giving. It examined the record of registrations of automobiles at Sacramento, but found none for this automobile. Hunter told said Burke that he had purchased the car outright from Pacific Nash Sales Company, but Burke did not inquire of the last-named company. As stated in Marker v. Williams, supra: "Was he justified in accepting, without further investigation, the statement of these people that they had paid for it, when he knew it had been installed under circumstances consistent with the retention of its character as personalty by a conditional vendor? In other words, if he had notice which suggested that this machinery was not what it appeared to be—an integral part of the real property—he was bound, in due caution, to consider all the contingencies which might apply to personal property so installed, and among these was the very likely circumstance of its having been purchased under a conditional contract of sale."

"The law of California very properly favors the conditional contract of sale. It has become very largely a factor in the purchase and sale of personal property, and, too, of that class of machinery and appliance commonly used in connection with real estate. It should be the policy of courts to afford every proper protection to upholding the conditions of such sales, both in the interest of the buying and selling classes."

[6, 7] Respondent acted promptly upon receiving information of the sale to Jewatt. The contract with Jewatt was assigned to appellant June 3, 1927. Respondent learned of the sale to Jewatt June 6, made a trip to Vallejo on the same day, and made demand upon appellant on June 8, 1927. An estoppel must be based upon some act or omission of the true owner. The true owner in this case did not give Hunter the right to enter into a conditional sale installment contract. It only gave him the right to sell for cash. Appellant cannot assert, therefore, that respondent clothed Hunter with the indicia of ownership of the contract with Jewatt which he had no right to make. Mere possession is not apparent authority to sell. Akron Cereal Co. v. First National Bank, 3 Cal. App. 198, 84 P. 778.

Herein lies the distinction between this case and Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Pacific Acceptance Corporation, 70 Cal. App. 41, 232 P. 489, 491, strongly relied on by appellant.

That case applies in favor of one situated substantially the same as appellant here, the principle of estoppel, following the analogy of Civil Code, § 1142, which is based on that principle. That section reads: "Where the possession of personal property, together with a power to dispose thereof, is transferred by its owner to another person, an executed sale by the latter, while in possession, to a buyer in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, for value, transfers to such buyer the title of the former owner, though he may be entitled to rescind, and does rescind the transfer made by him."

But we do not understand the decision last cited to hold the provisions of that section applicable to the paper resulting from a sale of personal property simply because the provisions of that section in a given case are applicable to the personal property sold. In the cited case, the true owner not only clothed the agent with possession and power of sale of the automobile, but expressly gave the agent power to make a conditional sale contract in his own name. It thus clothed him with apparent ownership not only of the automobile, but of the very contract of sale as well. It is there said: " * * * It appears without conflict that the true owner not only gave to its agent possession of the automobile, with power to dispose thereof, but by permitting him to make the contract for its sale in his own name clothed him with the apparent ownership of such contract, which was eventually transferred to the defendant, who paid full value for it without notice of the rights of the plaintiff therein. Under these circumstances the defendant is entitled to be protected."

[8] Of course, the provisions of Civil Code, § 1142, do not apply to a contract of sale, unless the owner thereof transfers the possession of that contract to the agent, together with the power to dispose of said contract. The case cited is therefore not based directly upon the section, but upon the principle of equitable estoppel. In that case the owner did not transfer to the agent possession of the contract together with "power to dispose thereof," but vested the agent with the possession and apparent power of sale of the contract. The section, of course, applies directly to the automobile itself in this case, and fully protects Jewatt, the buyer thereof.

The other authorities cited by appellant relate to an automobile itself and not to the contract of sale of an automobile. They would each be good authority in support of the title of Jewatt, even though he bought on credit when Hunter's real authority was only to sell for cash; but they are of no assistance to appellant, which did not buy the automobile that Hunter was authorized to sell, but the Jewatt contract, which Hunter was not authorized either to make or sell.

[9] There was no error in denying appellant's motion to compel respondent to elect between his two causes of action. They were not inconsistent with each other. Respondent, being the owner of the automobile subject to the contract, was entitled to have that title quieted. Being the real owner of the contract of sale and the money to be paid thereon, it was also entitled to the possession of it. Respondent was not put to an election between automobile and contract, unless Jewatt defaulted in his payments. Whether Jewatt would make all the payments, as he subsequently did, could not be determined at the time of the trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re SPRINGER'S ESTATE. (Civ. 3933.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

Executors and administrators ⇨ 17(3)—Daughter of intestate's predeceased wife by former marriage held entitled to administration over public administrator (Code Civ. Proc. § 1365; Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, and Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, where decedent died intestate leaving no issue, and his entire estate consisted of property which during lifetime of his predeceased wife was community property or separate property of his wife, daughter of said wife by a former marriage was entitled to letters of administration in preference to public administrator.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Application by Virena V. Russell for letters of administration in the estate of A. W. Springer, deceased. From an order denying petitioner's application and from an order granting the petition of R. S. Jay, Public Administrator of Madera County, for letters of administration, petitioner appeals. Reversed, with directions.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, Matthew Conley, and David E. Peckinpah, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Barcroft & Barcroft, of Madera, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The parties have stipulated to submit this appeal for decision upon the appellant's opening brief. The cause therefore may be decided on the statement of facts contained in such brief. Rule V of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal. The following facts are stated in such brief:

"This is an appeal by Virena V. Russell from the order of the court denying her application for letters of administration and from the order granting the petition of R. S. Jay, public administrator of the County of Madera * * * for letters of administration in the estate of A. W. Springer, deceased. * * * A. W. Springer died intestate, leaving no issue, and his entire estate" consists of property which, during the lifetime of his predeceased wife, Martha W. Springer, "was community property, or separate property" of his wife. The appellant is the daughter of Martha W. Springer by a former marriage.

It is clear that the appellant is entitled to letters of administration in preference to the public administrator. Code Civ. Proc. § 1365; Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8; 11 Cal. Jur. 320; In re Mercer's Estate (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1067; Estate of Hill, 179 Cal. 683, 178 P. 710.

The orders appealed from are reversed, and the trial court is directed to order the issuing of letters of administration to the appellant, Virena V. Russell, as prayed for in her petition.

HESSEL v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM, Inc., et al. (Civ. 6785.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 22, 1929.

1. Automobiles ⇨ 375—Lien for repairs on automobile in amount exceeding $100 was valid, subject to objection of legal owner not notified (Civ. Code, §§ 3051, 3051a).

Lien against automobile for repairs in amount exceeding $100 was valid to full amount, under Civ. Code, § 3051, giving lien to garage keeper, subject to objection of legal owner not notified before rendering services, under section 3051a, providing that portion of lien in excess of $100 for work rendered at request of one other than legal owner shall be invalid, unless legal owner was notified before services were rendered.

2. Automobiles ⇨ 375—Liens of claimants for towing, repairing, and storing automobile were each valid up to $100 without notice to legal owner, though total claims exceeded $100 (Civ. Code, §§ 3051, 3051a).

Where each of three claimants performed services in towing, repairing, and storing automobile at request of registered owner, and no notice was given to legal owner before such services were rendered, as required by Civ. Code, § 3051a, providing that without such notice lien shall be invalid as to portion in excess of $100, claim of each of defendants was valid to extent of $100 under section 3051, giving lien to garage keepers, though combined claims amounted to over $100.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by M. Hessel against the Pickwick Stages System, Inc., and others, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Edward J. Jose, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas M. Foley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action in claim and delivery. The defendant appeared and answered, and also filed a cross-complaint. The cross-complaint was answered, and later the parties entered into an agreed statement of facts, and on that statement the case was heard and determined in the trial court. The court ordered a judgment in favor of the defendants, and from that judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

It is admitted that on the 25th day of July, 1925, a certain automobile was in the possession of Elmette L. Nielson and William Nielson, and that they were the registered owners; that on that date West American Finance Company was the legal owner thereof; that between the said date and the 8th day of February, defendant S. N. Thames, at the request of Elmette L. Nielson, performed services in towing the automobile, and that said services were of the reasonable value of $61.50; that about the same time, and on a like request, defendant R. H. Wren performed services in repairing the automobile, and the services were of the reasonable value of $128.37; and that thereafter, on a like request, defendant Pickwick Stages System, Inc., performed services in storing said automobile, and that said services were of the reasonable value of $89.50. On February 15, 1926, the legal owner assigned his interest to the plaintiff, the plaintiff demanded possession of the automobile, and at the same time plaintiff tendered defendants $100 in full discharge of the claims of the defendants. Both the tender and demand for possession were refused. It was further stipulated that no notice was given to the West American Finance Company before said services were rendered.

[1, 2] The plaintiff contends that the evidence does not sustain the findings that the defendants held good and valid liens, and that the tender was not sufficient. He cites and relies on section 3051a of the Civil Code. If it were the fact that the sum of $247 was demanded by one and the same person for services done and performed on one and the same automobile, there would be much merit in plaintiff's contention. However, the agreed facts show that the defendant S. N. Thames rendered services in towing of the admitted value of $61.50; thereupon his lien became a perfect lien. There is nothing in the Code section to the contrary. Later the defendant Wren rendered services of the admitted value of $128.37. Before rendering those services the legal owner was not notified. Subject to the objection of the legal owner, Wren's claim was valid to the full amount. Civ. Code, § 3051.

As to the legal owner that statement must be qualified by virtue of the provisions of section 3051a of the Civil Code: "That portion of any lien, as provided for in the next preceding section, in excess of one hundred dollars, for any work, * * * rendered or performed at the request of any person other than the holder of the legal title, shall be invalid, unless," the legal owner is notified before the services rendered. It is therefore clear that Wren's claim under the facts should have been reduced, as against the legal owner, to a sum not exceeding $100. Still later the Pickwick Stages System, Inc., rendered services admitted to be of the value of $89.50. Its lien was not subject to any infirmity. It thus appears that the combined claims of all of the defendants were valid to the extent of $251; however, the amount of the judgment appealed from was $247; in other words, $4 less than it should have been.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHIPLEY CO. v. ROSEMEAD CO. et al.
(Civ. 5497.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 518(1)—Evidence did not support finding that discharge of mechanic's lien was only part of consideration for note.

In action on note, evidence held not to support finding that discharge of mechanic's lien was but part of consideration for execution of note for amount for which lien was filed.

2. Bills and notes $\S$ 97(1)—Where plaintiff agreed to discharge mechanic's lien in consideration for defendants' execution of note, plaintiff's obligation was to discharge lien at once (Civ. Code, § 1657).

Where plaintiff agreed to discharge mechanic's lien in consideration for execution of note by defendants, and there was no dispute as to amount for which lien had been filed, plaintiff's obligation was to pay off and discharge lien at once, under Civ. Code, § 1657, providing that, where no time is specified for performance of act and act is capable of being done instantly, it must be performed immediately upon the thing to be done being exactly ascertained.

3. Bills and notes ↔97(1)—Where plaintiff agreed to discharge lien in consideration for defendants' executing note, failure to discharge lien at once amounted to failure of consideration.

Where plaintiff agreed to discharge mechanic's lien in consideration for execution of note by defendants, failure to discharge lien at once amounted to failure of consideration for note.

4. Bills and notes ↔90—Promissory note is "contract," and essential element is sufficient cause or consideration (Civ. Code, § 1550).

A promissory note is a "contract," and, under Civ. Code, § 1550, one of its essential elements is a sufficient cause or consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Contract.]

5. Contracts ↔50—There can be no consideration where there is no benefit to promisor or detriment to promisee (Civ. Code, § 1605).

There can be no consideration, under Civ. Code, § 1605, where there is no benefit to promisor or detriment to promisee, but some advantage, no matter how slight, must accrue to promisor.

6. Bills and notes ↔539—Judgment for payee on note could not stand, where findings showed consideration for note was discharge of lien on payee's own property and there were no findings showing defendants were responsible for lien or would benefit by discharge (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Judgment for payee on note could not stand, where it appeared from findings that consideration for defendants' executing note was discharge of lien on payee's own property and there were no findings that defendant makers were in any way responsible for lien or that they would benefit by discharge of lien, since there was no consideration, under Civ. Code, § 1605.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Action upon a promissory note by the Shipley Company against the Rosemead Company and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

R. D. Wickham, of Alhambra, for appellants.

Edward Judson Brown and Minor Blythe, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. The complaint in this action is upon a promissory note in the ordinary and usual form, executed by the Rosemead Company, a common-law trust, and indorsed by the individual defendants. By way of answer, the defendants, appellants here, admitting nonpayment, set up as an affirmative defense that prior to the execution of the note a building contract had been entered into by one Jones and the defendants for the erection of certain improvements by Jones on a specified lot; that Jones procured a vault to be built in the building under construction at a cost of $945, of which sum the defendants paid $230, and that a mechanic's lien was filed against the premises for the unpaid balance of $715. It is further alleged that the consideration for the note in question was the agreement of the plaintiff to pay off and satisfy said lien, and that this agreement was not performed, and hence that there was a failure of the consideration for which the note was given. By a supplemental answer they allege the execution of an agreement between plaintiff and themselves subsequent to the filing of their original answer, which, they assert, operated to fully satisfy all claims of plaintiff against them and to terminate its cause of action. On the issues so framed the court found that prior to the execution of the note plaintiff was the record owner of the lot, and "that certain persons without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff caused a certain vault to be constructed in said building at a cost of $945, of which sum these defendants paid $230, leaving a balance of $715 due for the construction of said vault, for which a mechanic's lien was filed against the real property of the plaintiff, which lien was still unsatisfied at the time of the execution of said note." The court further found: "That at the request of plaintiff the defendants executed and delivered to it the note * * * to reimburse it to the extent of the balance of $715, for which said lien was upon said property;" and "that the said Shipley Company, as part consideration for said note, was to cause said lien to be discharged and cleared from its property, but that no specific time was agreed upon for so doing." The court also found: "That thereafter, and prior to the commencement of this action, the said Shipley Company caused the suit which was then pending to foreclose said lien to be dismissed, and that at the time of the filing of the complaint herein there was no longer any mechanic's lien upon said property for the cost and construction of said vault or any part thereof."

Upon the issue of the effect of the subsequent agreement as operating to satisfy respondent's claim and terminate its cause of action, the finding was adverse to appellants.

Appellants urge that certain of the findings are not supported by the evidence and that the findings in turn fail to support the judgment, and we are of the opinion that this contention must be sustained in the particulars to be pointed out herein.

[1] We can find no evidence in the record to support the finding that the agreement to discharge the lien was "part consideration" for the execution of the note. No testimony whatever was offered by respondent, which, after introducing the note into evidence, rested. Mr. Bentel, one of the defendants, testified that about 30 days prior to the execution of the note there was a conference between Mr. Jones (admittedly president and owner of 95 per cent. of the stock of the Shipley Company), Mr. Edeler, and himself, at which Mr. Jones "asked Mr. Edeler and I to give him a note that he could turn in to the Shipley Company, covering the amount of $715, which represented a lien that was on the building, * * * that if we gave this note they would—he could satisfy the Shipley Company that the transaction—in other words, the lien that was on the building would be paid by the Shipley Company. * * *" Again, the same witness testified: "At the time this note was given that was one of the representations, that they were to dismiss the lien."

Mr. Edeler testified as to this same conference: "We met concerning the disposition of the vault lien that had been filed and Mr. Jones said that he wanted us to give him a note, and when that was done, that he would discharge the lien, so the note was given."

This was all the testimony adduced at the trial with respect to the consideration for the execution of the note. It establishes the fact that the sole consideration for the execution of the note was the discharge of the lien, and does not support a finding that the same was but part consideration.

The question we have just decided is important in view of appellants' contention that there was a total failure of consideration and hence that judgment should have been in their favor. On this point it is their position that, at the time of the commencement of the action on February 24, 1925, and up to the time their answer was filed on March 17, 1925, the lien had not been discharged, and that it was not discharged until some eighteen months after execution of the note, or twelve months after the action thereon was commenced.

We have set forth the trial court's finding to the effect that the Shipley Company had procured the dismissal of the action to foreclose the lien and that at the time of commencing this action the lien no longer existed. This finding is not supported by any evidence at all. Strangely enough, neither party to the action saw fit to produce the best evidence of the date of discharge of the lien, namely, the official record thereof, but what meager testimony there is on this subject, together with the unchallenged statements of counsel at the trial, supports appellants' contention and is diametrically opposed to the finding. During Mr. Bentel's examination, the court asked him, "Well, did the Shipley Company discharge this lien?" to which the witness replied: "The Shipley Company did not discharge the lien, and that is a part of our answer. They never paid the lien. It stood there and stood there and stood there * * * the lien was not discharged. They still held the note and they brought suit on the note, this suit that is now pending." Later on in the examination of the same witness he was asked whether he had a conversation with Mr. Jones as to the discharge of the lien, but before he could answer one of respondent's counsel interpolated, "Now, if your Honor please, I understand there isn't any dispute about the fact that the suit to foreclose the lien was pending and that suit has been dismissed." To this statement the court replied, "Well, that ought to be a matter of record here. Can't counsel agree whether the suit has been dismissed?" to which one of appellants' counsel answered, "Yes, your Honor, since this suit was brought, since our answers were in." Again, Mr. Bentel testified: "The lien wasn't discharged for a year and a half after this transaction"—referring to the execution of the note. (Italics ours.) Again, the court said: "He says the lien was not discharged for a year and a half, and the other side admits that it wasn't discharged until at least the time the suit was dismissed, so why ask him any more about it? The fact is now established." During Mr. Edeler's examination he was asked about the discharge of the lien; before he could answer the question, the court said: "No, that fact has already been covered. It has been admitted that the lien was never discharged until the action was dismissed and that it is a matter of record." This is all there is in the record before us upon this subject.

[2-4] It being established by the uncontradicted evidence, despite the trial court's findings above discussed, that the sole consideration for the note was the agreement of respondent payee to discharge the lien and that this was not done until some eighteen months after the execution of the note and subsequent to the cause becoming at issue, we will next take up the question as to whether appellants' defense of failure of consideration should have been upheld. It is to be noted that there was at no time any dispute as to the amount for which the lien had been filed. The amount thereof was fixed, definite, and certain. No time was specified within which the lien was to be satisfied and discharged by respondent, and the court so found. Manifestly, then, respondent's obligation, the consideration for the note, was to pay off the sum of $715. The time within which such an obligation is to be performed is thus specified in section 1657 of the Civil Code: "If no time is specified for the performance of an act required to be performed, a reasonable time is allowed. If the act is in its nature capable of being done instantly—as, for example, if it consists in the payment of money only—it must be performed immediately upon the thing to be done being exactly ascertained."

On the authority of this Code provision, it was held in the following cases that the obligation was for immediate payment: Peters v. George, 1 Cal. App. 239, 81 P. 1117, where a widow and sole heir at law had sold property inherited by her from her husband's estate, for a down payment to her, the buyer agreeing to pay the balance to a creditor of the estate; Whittier v. Gormley, 3 Cal. App. 489, 86 P. 726, 727, where a memorandum evidencing a sale of land specified the purchase price as $5,500, "less commissions," without specifying a time for payment or the amount of commissions to be deducted. Quoting section 1657, Civil Code, the court said, "It follows, therefore, that the money was payable upon delivery of the deed. The amount of commissions is susceptible of ascertainment, and its certainty in amount is not disputed"; Clairmonte v. Napier Motor Company, 11 Cal. App. 265, 104 P. 712, holding commissions on sales of automobiles payable immediately on completion of each sale; and Price v. Smith Mfg. Co., 53 Cal. App. 303, 200 P. 53, holding that, under a contract whereby an inventor was to receive a royalty on each machine sold, with no provision as to time of payment, the agreed royalty became due immediately upon the sale of each machine.

In the case at bar we are constrained to hold that the obligation of respondent was to pay off and discharge the lien at once, and that its failure to do so amounted to a failure of consideration for the note in suit. A promissory note is, of course, a contract, and as such one of its essential elements is "a sufficient cause or consideration" (section 1550, Civ. Code), and "before any party to an obligation can require another party to perform any act under it, he must fulfill all conditions precedent thereto imposed upon himself" (section 1439, Civ. Code). If, therefore, respondent's promise to pay off the lien could be regarded as a good consideration for the execution of the note by appellants, that consideration had failed upon failure of respondent to perform.

[5, 6] There exists an additional reason why, in our opinion, the judgment cannot stand, namely, that the findings affirmatively show a lack of any consideration whatever moving from respondent to appellants.

The court found that at the time of the construction of the vault "the plaintiff was the record owner" of the lot on which it was installed. It was further found that the vault was constructed "by certain persons without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff" (there is no finding that defendants or any of them had anything whatsoever to do with the building of the vault, or were in any way obligated to pay for it), and that the mechanic's lien "was filed against the said real property of the plaintiff." It therefore appears from the findings that the "consideration" for appellants executing the note was the discharge of a lien on its own property by appellants, a lien for which the findings do not state or even intimate defendants were in any way responsible or from the discharge of which they, or anyone except respondent itself, could benefit. Consideration is thus defined in section 1605 of our Civil Code: "Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise." There can be no consideration where there is no benefit to the promisor or detriment to the promisee. Bernstein v. Downs, 112 Cal. 197, 44 P. 557; Visalia Gas, etc., Co. v. Sims, 104 Cal. 326, 37 P. 1042, 43 Am. St. Rep. 105; Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 589. Some advantage, no matter how slight, must accrue to the promisor. Heim v. Butin, 109 Cal. 500, 42 P. 138, 50 Am. St. Rep. 54; Jordan v. Scott, 38 Cal. App. 739, 177 P. 504.

The facts as found by the court below do not disclose, rather do they negative, the existence of a good consideration for the note, as consideration is above defined.

The situation disclosed by the findings is somewhat akin to that in Pacific Railways Advertising Co. v. Carr, 29 Cal. App. 722, 157 P. 529, 530, where an advertising contract with the plaintiff had been executed on behalf of a corporation by its secretary, without any authority to do so. Under the contract the plaintiff claimed a sum of money to be due to it. Thereafter the defendant acquired an interest in the corporation and agreed to assume the indebtedness claimed to be due on the contract, and as evidence thereof executed her note to the plaintiff, and at the maturity of this note she, in renewal thereof, executed the note which was the subject of the action, whereupon the plaintiff released the corporation from liability on the original contract. The court there used the following language: "The consideration for her note was the purported obligation of the company upon this contract; but there was no obligation, either express or implied. This being true, it cannot be said there was any consideration for the execution of the note sued upon. Clearly, if suit had been brought upon the contract against the Amritam Company, no recovery could have been had thereon upon a showing of the facts here presented; and, if there was nothing upon which to base an action against the Amritam Company, it must follow that plaintiff in releasing the company from liability which did not exist suffered no prejudice by reason thereof. A promise to perform a legal obligation is not a sufficient consideration for a contract based thereon. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 187, 33 P. 862. Neither is the release of a purported claim against one upon whom there rests no legal or moral obligation to pay the same a sufficient consideration for a third party's promise to pay such nonenforceable claim, unless it be upon the compromise of a doubtful or disputed claim. At the time of executing the note, there existed no dispute between plaintiff and the Amritam Company. * * *

We are not unmindful of the finding "that

It is not true that there was no consideration for the execution of said note," but we regard this finding as in the nature of a conclusion of law as to the legal effect of the specific facts found with regard to the transaction between the parties rather than as a finding as to a matter of fact. Kriess v. Faron, 118 Cal. 142, 50 P. 388. We hold, therefore, that the findings do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment based thereon, and that the judgment should have been in favor of the defendants.

With respect to the finding as to the effect of the subsequently executed agreement between the parties, we are satisfied that it is amply supported by the evidence, and that appellants' point with regard thereto is not well taken, but, as the case is disposed of by our ruling on the other points in controversy, it is unnecessary to further discuss the question.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendants, with costs.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

STREHLOW et al. v. MOTHORN.
(Civ. 6382.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 717—Judge's opinion, though no part of record, could be considered on appeal as incorporating into findings evidence presented by examining premises.

Where trial judge, at request of defendant, visited premises involved in action to enjoin interference with ditch and road, opinion of trial judge, though no part of record, could be considered on appeal to extent that judge necessarily incorporated into findings evidence presented to him through actual examination of physical conditions.

2. Waters and water courses $\S$ 158½(2)—Use of ditch on defendant's land to drain water from plaintiffs' land held not concealed, though water was conducted through underground pipes.

In action to enjoin interference with ditch and road, evidence that water was conducted from plaintiffs' land through underground pipe into ditch, but that entry into ditch was apparent, and evidence that there was large cement bulkhead erected, to prevent erosion of land where water came out of pipe, together with entire geography of site, did not show that use of ditch on defendant's land was concealed.

3. Waters and water courses $\S$ 154(2)—Right to discharge waters on plaintiffs' land through ditch on defendant's land held acquired by prescription by 40 years' exercise of right established by common owner.

Where common owner of plaintiffs' and defendant's land burdened defendant's land with easement on behalf of plaintiffs' land, and defendant took his land burdened with easement existing for more than 40 years, right to discharge accumulated waters on plaintiffs' land through ditch on defendant's land was acquired by prescription.

4. Waters and water courses $\S$ 158½(2)—Defendant, enjoined from interfering with ditch carrying drainage water, was required to refrain from interference, though flood waters might flow through ditch.

Where court properly enjoined defendant from interfering with ditch on defendant's land, carrying seepage or drainage waters from land of plaintiffs, defendant was required to refrain from interfering with ditch, though ditch, if kept open, might carry flood waters, which defendant might have prevented from encroaching by filling up ditch.

5. Highways $\S$ 86—Abutting owner has public right in highway, and private right, regardless whether owning fee of highway.

An abutting owner has public right in highway enjoyed in common with all other citizens, and certain private rights arising from ownership of property contiguous to highway, not common to public generally, regardless of whether fee of highway is in abutting owner or not.

6. Eminent domain $\S$ 85—Abutting landowner has special easement in highway for access purposes, which cannot be taken away without due compensation.

Abutting landowner on public highway has special right of easement and user in public road for access purposes, which is property right, and cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation.

7. Highways $\S$ 87—Injunction against defendant diverting water on road, or interfering with plaintiffs' use of road for travel, did not restrain defendant as far as general public might be concerned.

Decree enjoining defendant from diverting water on road dividing plaintiffs' and defendant's property, or in any wise interfering with plaintiffs in use of road as means of travel, did not place restraint on defendant as far as general public might be concerned, where plaintiffs' right as easement appurtenant to land was established.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by William Strehlow and others against Pressley Mothorn. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. F. Cowan and A. W. Hollingsworth, both of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiffs sought injunctive relief against defendant's interference with their right to use a certain ditch and road. The court below granted the relief prayed for, and defendant appeals.

The record comes before us by means of a bill of exceptions. The facts may be briefly summarized:

Plaintiffs are the owners of a certain tract of land lying in the county of Sonoma, which said land is used for general farming and the raising of fruit. A description of plaintiffs' lands, by metes and bounds, would serve no useful purpose. It is sufficient to note that the eastern boundary of these lands is the center of a certain stream or waterway known as Dry creek. The general contour of the land is sloping, and throughout are many depressions and likely places for the settling and accumulation of both drainage and flood waters. The defendant owns a tract of land immediately adjoining the lands of plaintiffs on the south. Some 20 or more years ago the lands of both plaintiffs and defendant were in a common ownership and farmed as one tract. At or about the boundary line common to the south line of plaintiffs' land and defendant's land is a road, which said road lies partly on the land of plaintiffs and partly on the land of defendant. On the land of defendant, and south of the road, lies the ditch in question here, which said ditch has its entire length upon the land of defendant. Up to this point there is no controversy.

Proceeding, we detail not the conflicting facts as claimed by the respective parties, but we confine ourselves to those facts supported by competent and sufficient evidence in support of the judgment. As indicated, the ground lies in such a position that the drainage from plaintiffs' holding would, to a great extent, flow off onto and across the land of defendant. Many years ago, concededly sufficient in point of time, and while the lands were still under a common single ownership, conduits were built and pipes laid, which carried the collected waters and such of the flood waters as at times came from the creek, through and under the roadway, and into the ditch located on the land which subsequently came into the ownership of defendant, from which point these waters were carried into the creek and away from the land entirely. The road involved is a public road, used since 1880, and even before. It was a generally used road at a time before the railroad entered Sonoma county, and has since been maintained as such by the county, though the travel thereover has much lessened. It is one of that class of country roads, apart and separate from the main highways, which serve the needs of a back country, and have not yet attained the dignity of concrete.

In 1918, long after the rights claimed had attached, the defendant and his predecessors conceived the plan and idea of cultivating the land through which the ditch ran. Accordingly, and in pursuance of this plan, defendant commenced filling up the ditch, and cutting down the trees and growth on the banks thereof, which growth had become an integral part of the bank and necessary thereto, and for the protection of the land adjacent to the ditch. This caused and causes the water coming from plaintiffs' land to back up on the said lands, and to destroy and wash out the road and roadbed between the ditch and plaintiffs' lands. To enjoin these acts on the part of defendant this action was instituted.

The findings of the trial court are as follows, in epitome:

That the road in question is laid out, opened, abandoned, and dedicated to the public by prescription and user, and is 30 feet, more or less, in width, and partly upon the land of plaintiffs and partly upon the land of defendant; that for more than 40 years last past the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have so used this road as to acquire a prescriptive right in and to the use thereof for the purpose of ingress and egress to and from their land; that said road abuts upon the land of plaintiffs, where it traverses the land of defendant, and that said road and the right to use the same was and is an easement appurtenant to the lands of plaintiffs, and the right to travel and use the road is necessary for the complete enjoyment by plaintiffs of their land and the easement attached thereto, and any obstruction thereof or interference therewith will work great and irreparable damage to plaintiffs and their lands; that along and upon the southerly side of said road, and commencing at a point 200 yards from the westerly boundary of the plaintiffs' land, there is a ditch and waterway, which extends easterly and along the southerly side of said road for a distance of 75 yards, and the ditch is an average depth of 6 feet and of an average width of 3 feet at the bottom, with an average width of 12 feet at the top; that said ditch was constructed, and has ever since on or before the year 1870 been continuously maintained, by plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest and the predecessors in interest of defendant, until the obstructions by defendant herein complained of; that during all of the time the said ditch and waterway has been maintained for the purposes of carrying away surface water and drainage water from the lands of plaintiff, and in time of freshets has also served to carry away waters overflowing from Dry creek onto the lands of plaintiffs, and during all of said time the said plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest have openly, notoriously, continuously, and uninterruptedly, and under a claim of right, so used the said ditch for the purpose above stated against the said defendant and his predecessors in interest and all other persons; that originally the western portion of said ditch was a natural gully formed by the flow of surface waters, and was a natural way meandering along the line and course where the said ditch is now constructed, and thereafter and more than 20 years before the commencement of this action the said last-mentioned natural ditch was enlarged and straightened, and has been maintained continuously since said time at the place described. The findings then go on to detail the claim of defendant to obstruct the said waterway and road and to find these claims without right. Continuing, it is found that irreparable damage will follow to plaintiffs and their land unless defendant is enjoined.

The decree of the court, from which this appeal is taken, orders in substance as follows: That the road, 30 feet wide, more or less, is appurtenant to the land of plaintiffs, and that plaintiffs have the lawful right to travel the same, and that said right is an easement appurtenant to the lands of plaintiffs. That the ditch is an easement appurtenant to and with the lands of plaintiff, for the purpose of collecting therein seepage, drainage, surface, and overflow waters, and discharging the same through said ditch. The decree then enjoins, perpetually and forever, the defendant from in any manner digging up the soil in the road, or removing the same, or permitting or causing water to flow thereon from the said ditch, and is also likewise enjoined from in any manner interfering with the flow of seepage, drainage, surface, or overflow waters in said ditch, and from diverting the said waters onto the said road, or onto the lands of the plaintiffs, and from removing or cutting down trees or vines growing on the embankments, and is enjoined from doing any act that will in any manner obstruct or interfere with plaintiffs in the use of said road as a way for travel, or in the use of said ditch as a conduit for carrying said water. The decree, however, provides that the defendant may extend the said ditch across his own land, as long as the extension will in no way interfere with the rights adjudged in plaintiffs.

The foregoing will sufficiently present the case as it appears for review.

[1] The bill of exceptions contains some 47 specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence. None of these are especially urged in the briefs of appellant. Nevertheless, after a careful study of the entire record, we find that these specifications have no convincing force. Though in some instances there appear conflicts in the testimony, there was sufficient competent evidence to support the findings made and the decree following. In addition to the transcript of evidence taken, it appears that at the end of the trial the defendant invited and urged the trial judge to visit the premises and the territory referred to in the testimony, and view for himself the exact situation. The learned judge adopted this suggestion, and, while the opinion of the trial judge is no part of the record, yet it may be considered here to that extent, as he did incorporate into his findings, necessarily, the evidence thus presented to him through an actual examination of the physical conditions existing.

[2] Appellant attacks the judgment upon two main grounds: First, as to the adjudication of plaintiffs' right to the use of the ditch; and, second, as to their right to maintain the action with regard to the road. Appellant contends that the alleged easement as to the use of the ditch on defendant's land was not only nonapparent and noncontinuous, but practically concealed or hidden underground, and the ditch was located wholly on the defendant's land. We find no merit in this contention, as a matter of fact. It is true that the water was conducted from plaintiffs' land through an underground pipe, but its entry into the ditch was most apparent. Likewise there was a large cement bulkhead erected to prevent erosion of the land where the water comes out of the pipe, and the entire geography of the site made the user most plain. No one contended at the trial that the use was a hidden use, or that there was not ample evidence thereof. The entire argument of the defendant is that, under the conditions, the actual flowing of the water through the underground pipes could not be determined without digging to the pipes. In the face of the court's finding, supported by the evidence, that the user was actually open and notorious, we deem this point worthy of no further note.

[3, 4] It is next claimed by appellant that plaintiffs were without right to discharge, into the ditch on the defendant's land, waters gathered or accumulated by them upon their own land. As a strict matter of right, in the abstract, and in the absence of grant or prescription, it might be conceded that an upper owner has not the absolute right to divert flood or accumulated waters upon the land of a lower owner. But the question here presented is not one of asserted absolute right, merely by reason of the ownership of the upper land. The record supports the conclusion that the owner of both parcels did burden this lower land with the easement created for the enjoyment and cultivation of the upper portion; that the defendant and his predecessors in interest took the lower land thus burdened; and that for more than 40 years the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest exercised and claimed the right openly and continuously, and in all respects as required by law to acquire the right equally as though conferred upon them by express grant. No authority is cited to the effect that a right to discharge flood or accumulated waters upon the land of a lower owner cannot be acquired by prescription.

Further than this, the discharge of the accumulated water is merely occasional, and only at such times as the same becomes commingled with the usual drain or seepage waters naturally flowing off the land of plaintiffs. In any event, the question of flood or storm waters is not primarily involved in the action. The decree of the court enjoins defendant from interfering with the ditch carrying the seepage or drainage waters. The court found that defendant and his predecessors filled up and threatens to fill up the natural channel, where waters were wont to flow, and, even if such filling were permissible to prevent the encroachment of flood waters, yet the defendant must refrain from interference with the ditch or channel, and it is clear that, if the ditch were filled, neither surface nor flood waters could flow through it, and it is quite immaterial that, if the ditch be open and kept open, on occasions it might carry flood water. The gist of appellant's attack on the judgment concerns the question of the road. In fact, he makes the question of the road appear the main issue in the case, rather than as merely incidental to the right the plaintiffs seek to have protected. It seems apparent that the character of the roadway, whether private or public, is of little importance here.

[5, 6] Plaintiffs pleaded both a public road and an easement appurtenant to their lands. The court found in their favor on both grounds. An abutting owner has two kinds of rights in a highway, a public right, which he enjoys in common with all other citizens, and certain private rights, which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the highway and which are not common to the public generally; and this regardless of whether the fee of the highway is in him or not. An abutting landowner on a public highway has a special right of easement and user in the public road for access purposes, and this is a property right, which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation. 29 C. J. 547; Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore R. Co., 176 Cal. 629, 169 P. 388; Cushing, etc., Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 123, 92 P. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; Smith v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 146 Cal. 164, 79 P. 868, 106 Am. St. Rep. 17. This right of an adjoining landowner has been expressly recognized and announced by the Supreme Court as recently as the past month in the case of Lane v. San Diego Electric Railway Co. (Cal. Sup.) 280 P. 109, in which case are cited the authorities hereinbefore noted and many others to the same effect.

All of the contentions of the appellant in respect to the road are based upon a negative of this proposition. It is therefore needless to pursue the inquiry. However, it may be noted that the question, as to this defendant, is more or less academic. The main purpose of the action was to prevent interference with the ditch or the run-off of the water from plaintiffs' lands. The plaintiffs, in addition to other allegations found to be true, and of themselves sufficient to support the judgment, alleged further that the acts of the defendant interfered with their easement in and to the public road. The proof showed this easement to the road, irrespective of whether the right existed as an abutting owner on a public highway, or whether it was a right existing in plaintiffs without regard to the public.

[7] The decree of the court enjoined the defendant from diverting the water upon the road, or in any wise interfering with plaintiffs in the use of the said road as a means of travel. There was no restraint placed upon defendant, as far as the general public might be concerned, and in view of the court's determination of plaintiffs' right as an easement appurtenant to their land, sufficiently supported as hereinbefore detailed, the point has already received more consideration than the record warrants.

The judgment is affirmed.

In broker's action against another broker to recover real estate commission, where negotiations were begun while defendant was working out of plaintiff's office, and sale was completed by defendant within week after leaving plaintiff's office, evidence held to establish prima facie case for plaintiff as procuring cause of sale.

In deciding motion for nonsuit, evidence must be viewed most favorably to plaintiff, and, if when so construed case has been made out, motion should be denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Thornton, Turner & McCurdy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

CRAIG, J. The parties to this cause were realty brokers, and, while it was stipulated that they were not copartners, it appears that they had an understanding whereby one should receive a portion of any commissions involved in any escrow which he might assist the other in closing. It is admitted that respondent "worked in and out of" appellant's office during the month of December, 1924, and a part of February, 1925. Prior to December, 1924, Mrs. J. R. Butler and her husband listed with appellant's office certain real property, which appellant and respondent sold to H. E. Wells and wife, and the latter entered into possession thereof. The agreement for sale was escrowed with a Los Angeles bank, $1,000 of a total consideration of $15,500 being deposited with the escrow as commission, $775 of which was paid to said brokers. Said bank was then negotiating for a loan upon certain property belonging to Wells, and it was testified that the sale above mentioned was for cash, contingent upon the consummation of the loan. At the same time other brokers held an exclusive agency to sell the Wells property. The bank failed to make a loan, and the parties to the escrow transferred their escrow agreement to a Glendale bank, designated by respondent as "a friend of Mrs. Wells." Thereafter the Butlers purchased the Wells property, and appellant instituted proceedings for a portion of the commissions paid by the Butlers to respondent for effecting the second sale, or conveyance, from Wells to Butler. After a trial before the court, without a jury, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was granted, upon the asserted ground that the so-called first transaction terminated when the Los Angeles bank declined to make a loan to Wells, and that the sale by the latter to the Butlers was a subsequent, separate, and distinct transaction, consummated by respondent, without the aid of appellant.

[1] We are not assisted upon this appeal by a brief on behalf of the respondent, but from a careful examination of the record we are convinced that the plaintiff succeeded in establishing a sufficient prima facie case to entitle her to a judgment. She testified in her own behalf, and the defendant was called by her counsel as a witness. No other witnesses were examined or evidence offered. The plaintiff testified that respondent was absent from her office during the greater part of the month of January, 1925, but that she occasionally inquired as to the progress of the Butler-Wells sale, and was assured by Page that he was taking care of it, and that "it would come all right"; that she suggested, "if anything comes up in any manner, anything comes up, let me know." She also swore that, when she later inquired at the bank regarding the matter, she was informed that the sale had been converted into an exchange; that she had not previously known of a proposed Wells sale to Butler. From the respondent's own testimony it appears that, although out of the office much of the time during January, 1925, he was in touch with the Butlers. He testified that Mrs. Butler "kept after me why she didn't get her money"; that he did not finally sever his connection with Mrs. Tight's office until January 31, 1925, and that on February 4th, or five days later, he "figured she (Mrs. Butler) was in a bad position; so, on February 4th, after the expiration of the Frank Meline Company's exclusive listing, why, I suggested to Mrs. Butler, I said, 'Why don't you buy this South Brand [Wells] property?'" He admitted that after negotiations with Wells he succeeded in reducing the price of their property to $40,000, persuaded them to "take back the $22,500 paper" which they had escrowed toward the purchase of the Butler property, and "then $14,500 which she had coming in cash was to apply on that." It was also admitted by respondent that he did not relinquish the key to appellant's office until two days before he initiated the Wells sale, or February 2d—two days after having ostensibly abandoned his real estate brokerage vocation. Within a period of less than one week Page vacated the office of his partner in the transaction, noted the expiration of the Meline Company's agency, interested Mrs. Butler in the Wells property, and consummated the original sale through a conveyance in lieu of cash. By such change merely in form of the consideration the escrow was closed. However, but for the sale initiated by the appellant, the Wells property would not have been conveyed. Mrs. Tight was therefore the procuring cause of a transaction which through an unbroken chain of events entitled her to compensation, and she is entitled to the agreed proportionate share of the commission earned. Sessions v. Pacific Improvement Co., 57 Cal. App. 1, 206 P. 653.

[2] The foregoing statement of facts is of course made from the evidence construed favorably to the appellant. It is possible that, had the trial been completed, this same evidence might have been viewed in a different light by the court when it came to a final determination of the issue presented. But it is elementary that in deciding a motion for nonsuit the evidence must be viewed most favorably to the plaintiff, and that, if as so construed a case has been made out, the motion should be denied.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Edith Frida Mensing, for and on behalf of her minor son, David Mensing Croter, against Jacob Croter. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Raymond Benjamin, of San Francisco, and Myron Harris and Leo A. Sullivan, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Thornton Wilson, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to compel him to support her illegitimate son, and alleged that the defendant was the father. He appeared and answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict against the defendant, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed, under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] The defendant claims the trial court should have allowed him to introduce, for a limited purpose, evidence of previous acts of sexual intercourse with other men. The plaintiff replies that he was not denied that right. That in this class of cases the defendant will be allowed to prove that, at about the date of the conception of the child, the plaintiff had sexual intercourse with other men, is admitted by both parties. Kelly v.

State, 133 Ala. 195, 32 So. 56, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25; Maynard v. People, 135 Ill. 416, 25 N. E. 740; State v. Gereke, 74 Kan. 196, 86 P. 160, 87 P. 759; Burris v. Court, 34 Neb. 187, 51 N. W. 745; Humphrey v. State, 78 Wis. 569, 47 N. W. 836; State v. Ginger, 80 Iowa, 574, 46 N. W. 657; Nimmo v. Simms (Ark.) 13 S.W. (2d) 304; In re Gird's Estate, 157 Cal. 534, 108 P. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. Furthermore, both agree that ordinarily other acts with other men are collateral matters, which are not admissible. But the defendant claims that there is an exception to the proposition last stated. The plaintiff admits there is, but states that the limits of the exception are not as claimed by the defendant.

The defendant argues that, if it is first shown that the plaintiff, at about the date of the conception, had an association and an opportunity to have sexual intercourse with another man, then, but not until then, will the defendant be allowed to show that at some date prior thereto the plaintiff actually did have intercourse with such other man. Odewald v. Woodsum, 142 Mass. 512, 8 N. E. 347; Walker v. State, 165 Ind. 94, 74 N. E. 614; State v. Woodworth, 65 Iowa, 141, 21 N. W. 490; State v. Borie, 79 Iowa, 605, 44 N. W. 824; Guy v. State, 20 Ala. App. 374, 102 So. 243. The plaintiff admits the rule, but claims that in the instant case there was no showing of "association and opportunity," within the meaning of the rule.

In this contention we think the plaintiff fails to take into consideration all of the facts that had been proved. Whether the jury may draw a certain inference depends in the first place on "the facts legally proved." Code Civ. Proc., § 1960, subd. 1. Now, in this case the witness Smith had deposed that the plaintiff, while with child, called on him as an assistant probation officer and discussed her case. Among other statements she told him that about the date of conception she had intercourse with a man other than the defendant, but she knew such other man was not the father of her child; she "could tell by her woman's intuition." Prior to the date of conception, the plaintiff, Raiche, and Millam had been acquainted in Sacramento. About the 1st of September, 1923, Raiche and Millam went to Los Angeles and took bachelor quarters in an apartment, and at that time other men were members of the same household. Raiche was a married man, whose wife had obtained a divorce, but no final decree had been entered. The men had no woman to cook for them, but one of them did the cooking.

In the latter part of September, 1923 (date of conception), the plaintiff, a young stenographer, went to Los Angeles to obtain employment. She was not married; she was unescorted, and had no kith or kin at that place. She knew this defendant, who resided there.

She also knew Raiche and Millam. The plaintiff testified that she had had intercourse with the defendant at Sacramento in April, 1923. She arrived in Los Angeles on September 26, 1923, and on that day called at the defendant's place of business. He was out, but they met the next day and had intercourse. There was evidence that, while the plaintiff was living at the Y. W. C. A. in Los Angeles, she went with Raiche to his apartments, and that at other times she went there with him. She testified that she lived at the Y. W. C. A. September 26, 27, 28, and 29, 1923. At least some of the calls she made to the bachelor quarters were made after night. We think the foregoing facts show an "association," within the rule. We think they also show an "opportunity," within the rule. True, there were contradictory statements, but the conflicts were for the jury to unravel. Now, at one time the defendant, through Mr. Benjamin, said: "I offer to prove, on the basis of the testimony in the record at the present time, together with such other testimony as may be admitted, that in 1922 Miss Mensing was the mistress of one Alfred L. Raiche in Sacramento, * * *" etc. The offer was refused. Later, when all of the evidence which we have recited above had been introduced, the defendant renewed his offer. The offer was refused. That last ruling, we think, was error, and that it was prejudicial.

The plaintiff contends that the ruling was correct, because the defendant had not shown that, during their association in Los Angeles, the plaintiff and Raiche were seen in any compromising position. That was not necessary. If the defendant could have shown an act of sexual intercourse between the plaintiff and Raiche at Los Angeles in September, 1923, such act, both parties admit, would have been admissible, and it would be wholly unnecessary for us to conduct this specific inquiry regarding acts committed at Sacramento in 1922. An association together in Los Angeles in September, 1923, was admitted. Moreover, the uncontradicted evidence was that at that time the two were not restrained by family ties or physical obstacles, and that they were strangers in the large city of Los Angeles, and free to claim that they were man and wife, and were free to be by themselves and indulge their passions. Therefore they had "an opportunity," within the meaning of the rule.

In the following cases the evidence of "opportunity" consisted of various combinations of facts which were held to constitute a sufficient foundation to introduce evidence of other acts as showing or tending to show such acts also took place about the date of conception: In State v. Woodworth, 65 Iowa, 141, 21 N. W. 490, it was shown that the pair resided in the same house. In Walker v. State, 165 Ind. 94, 74 N. E. 614, it was shown that the pair were alone together for a time on that evening. In State v. Borie, 79 Iowa, 605, 44 N. W. 824, it was shown that the pair took a 20-mile ride together, and the plaintiff stayed at his house two nights, sleeping with the man's mother. In no one of those cases were additional facts shown than those we have cited. Counsel have not cited, and we have searched the books, but cannot find, any cases at variance with these authorities.

[3] There is yet another angle from which we may view the specific question before us. It is settled law that circumstantial evidence of acts of sexual intercourse with other men at about the date the child was begotten is admissible. Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 547, 108 P. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. When following that rule, the courts have allowed to go to the jury a set of facts no more convincing than the offer made by this defendant. State v. Creager, 97 Kan. 334, 155 P. 29, 30, 32; De Mund v. State, 167 Wis. 40, 166 N. W. 328, 329; Anderson v. State, 65 Utah, 512, 238 P. 557, 559; State v. Gereke, 74 Kan. 196, 86 P. 160, 87 P. 759, 761; Maynard v. People, 135 Ill. 416, 25 N. E. 740, 744; Burris v. Court, 34 Neb. 187, 51 N. W. 745, 746; Kelly v. State, 133 Ala. 195, 32 So. 56, 57, 91 Am. St. Rep. 25. If, in connection with the evidence which was admitted, there had been admitted also the testimony of witnesses that in Sacramento, about one year prior to the conception of the child, the plaintiff lived as the mistress of Raiche, there is no doubt but what the jury might have drawn the inference that at Los Angeles, about the date of the conception, the plaintiff had sexual intercourse with Raiche, and that the jury might have concluded that the plaintiff had failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, and not Raiche, was the father of her child.

The judgment is reversed, and the action is remanded for a new trial.

ARMSTEAD v. JACKSON et al. (Civ. 3828.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 24, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨616(1)—Papers used at trial, but not included in record on appeal, and brought to appellate court under statute, must be authenticated (Code Civ. Proc. § 953).

Papers used in trial court, but not included in record on appeal, and brought to appellate court under provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 953, must be authenticated as having been used on hearing below, since only papers used at trial constitute record on appeal, and papers not properly authenticated cannot be considered on appeal.

2. New trial ⇨165—Proper proceeding to set aside order granting new trial for insufficient notice is on affidavits to set aside order as improvidently made (Code Civ. Proc. § 1005).

If notice of time of hearing of motion for new trial, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1005, was not given, proper proceeding is to move on affidavits showing facts to have order set aside as improvidently made for lack of sufficient notice.

3. Appeal and error ⇨933(1)—Where record on appeal was insufficient, appellate court could not assume absence of sufficient notice to present defense on motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 670, 952, 953).

Where appellants, appealing from order granting new trial, did not make up any record in case, under provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 670, 952, 953, which appellate court was authorized to consider, appellate court could not assume that appellants did not have sufficient notice to present defense they had, or show reasons to trial court, if any existed, why motion for new trial should not be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Action by Kathryn H. Armstead, as administratrix of the estate of A. H. Armstead, deceased, against Fred C. Jackson and another. From an order granting a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, and Len H. Honey, of Stockton, for appellants.

Rich & Weis, of Marysville, and Downey, Brand, Seymour & Dunn, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon the defendants' appeal from an order of the trial court granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict.

The action is based upon the alleged negligence of the defendant Fred C. Jackson, in driving an automobile in such a manner as to result in the death of A. H. Armstead, the husband of the plaintiff. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff, sustaining the allegations of the complaint as to the negligence of the defendant Fred C. Jackson, but rendered damages in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of only $663.40.

Upon this appeal no question is tendered, no argument is made, and the court's attention is not called to anything in the record which would tend to show that the order of the court granting a new trial for the grounds stated is erroneous. The only question tendered for consideration upon this appeal is the alleged want of notice to the defendants of the time of hearing the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The clerk's record in this case shows the following papers: Affidavit of mailing of notice of appeal; affidavit of mailing notice that transcript be prepared; amended answer; amended complaint; certificate to judgment roll; clerk's certificate to transcript; clerk's certificate; notice of appeal and affidavit of mailing; judgment; minutes on motion for new trial; minute order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial; notice of appeal; notice of intention to move for new trial; notice that transcript be prepared and notice of appeal; verdict. Nothing in the judgment roll, nor in any papers just referred to, shows that the defendants did not have notice of the time and place of hearing of plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The minute order of the trial court relating to the hearing and submission of plaintiff's motion for a new trial does recite that counsel for the defendants were not present.

[1] The reporter's transcript, as requested by the appellant, contains simply the testimony introduced upon the trial of the action, and was certified to as correct on the 25th day of March, 1929. So far as the record was made in the court below, there is not a word or syllable indicating that notice of the hearing of the motion for new trial was not given. In fact, appellants, in their briefs, do not claim that notice was not given, but only that notice, as required by section 1005 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not given. Be this as it may, there is nothing in the record to support the contention of appellants in this particular. Whether the motion for a new trial was or was not heard by the trial court after due notice thereof, or whether the order granting the motion for new trial was improvidently made, on the ground that no sufficient notice of the hearing of the motion for new trial was ever presented to the trial court for determination. No motion was ever made in the trial court to set aside the order granting the motion for a new trial on the ground that it was improvidently made, or upon the ground that no notice or sufficient notice of the time of hearing the motion was ever given to the appellants; the appeal is simply from the order granting a new trial. And the record, so far as made up and considered by the trial court, is a blank as to the subject of notice of the time of hearing of the motion for a new trial.

A novel proceeding appears to have been adopted in this case. Attached to the reporter's transcript is an affidavit, made by one of the attorneys for the plaintiff and respondent, setting forth copies of a correspondence, consisting of a number of letters passing between the attorneys for plaintiff and the attorneys for the defendants relative to the hearing of the motion for a new trial. Following the affidavit of counsel and the letters referred to is an order of the trial court directing that copies of the affidavit and letters be made and attached to the reporter's transcript, to be used and considered by the District Court of Appeal. This order, if it could be considered for any purpose whatever, would show upon its face that the affidavit referred to and the copies of the letters attached thereto were never presented to the trial court for its consideration, or upon any motion seeking to have the order granting the new trial vacated, as having been made without sufficient notice of the time of hearing being given to the appellants.

Section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure specifies what papers shall constitute the judgment roll. Notice of motion for a new trial is not included in the list. Section 952 of the Code of Civil Procedure sets forth the duty of an appellant in relation to presenting a bill of exceptions in appealing from a motion granting a new trial. This section refers to section 650 of the same Code as to what shall be included in the bill of exceptions or statement showing that all matters which were considered by the trial court which the appellant desires to have considered upon appeal shall be set forth. Section 953 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a method of bringing to the Appellate Court all papers used in the trial court which are not included in the record on appeal.

As stated in section 233, volume 2, California Jurisprudence, at page 486: "These papers must be authenticated as having been used on the hearing below, for only the papers used below constitute the record on appeal and not the papers on file." And as further set forth on page 601 of the same volume, section 325: "It is axiomatic that papers not properly authenticated as having been used in a hearing resulting in a judgment or order or decree cannot be considered on appeal. Where the record does not authenticate the papers used at the hearing below in the manner required by law, the appeal, if taken, whether under the old method or under the alternative method, is ineffectual." Further: "The obvious purpose of authentication is to show upon what evidence or papers the court below made its order, and thus enable the reviewing court to determine whether, upon the record as made before it, the court below was legally authorized to make the order complained of."

[2, 3] If, as contended for by appellants, notice was not given of the time of hearing the plaintiff's motion for a new trial as required by section 1005 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then, as stated in Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, volume 1, page 859, section 164: "The proper proceeding is to move upon affidavits showing the facts, to have the order set aside as improvidently made." After referring to the fact that the record made up on the motion for new trial would not show the error complained of, it is then said: "But the fact that the party was deprived of a hearing can be shown by affidavits upon a motion to set aside the order. That such is the proper practice appears from the cases of Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331, and De Gage v. Lynch, 42 Cal. 362."

The cases referred to show that in this instance the defendants should have moved the court to set aside the order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground that it was improvidently made for lack of sufficient notice, if such were the fact. Not having made any record in this case which we are authorized to consider, we are not at liberty to assume that the appellants did not have sufficient notice to present any defense they had or show any reasons to the trial court, if any existed, why plaintiff's motion for a new trial should not be granted.

It necessarily follows that the order of the trial court granting a new trial must be, and the same is, hereby affirmed.

APPLING v. MINARETS & WESTERN RY. CO. (Civ. 6686.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 14, 1929.

I. Evidence ☞75—Failure of purchaser of bankrupt's estate to produce inventory and schedule raised presumption that they contained no reference to claim against defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 6; Bankr. Act § 70b, 11 USCA § 110b).

In action by assignee of purchaser of bankrupt's estate against defendant for breach of contract with bankrupt, where neither schedule of assets required to be filed by bankrupt nor inventory of bankrupt's estate required by Bankruptcy Act § 70b, 11 USCA § 110b, were offered in evidence, reviewing court would presume that such schedule and inventory did not contain any reference to claim against defendant, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 6, creating disputable presumption that higher evidence would be adverse from inferior evidence being produced.

2. Bankruptcy $\hookrightarrow$ 265—Statement that account of sale was intended to convey all assets of bankrupt estate held insufficient to convey chose in action (Bankr. Act § 30, 11 USCA § 53; § 47, 11 USCA § 75; § 70a, 11 USCA § 110(a)).

Under general orders in bankruptcy, made in pursuance to Bankruptcy Act § 30, 11 USCA § 53, where bankrupt's estate is sold through private sale to show conveyance of chose in action, belonging to bankrupt's estate, such chose must be listed in account of sale filed with referee in bankruptcy together with purchase price and to whom sold, and statement that it was intended to convey all assets of estate is not sufficient under Bankruptcy Act § 70a, 11 USCA § 110(a), and Bankruptcy Act § 47, 11 USCA § 75.

3. Bankruptcy $\hookrightarrow$ 268—In action by holder of claims of bankrupt's estate for breach of contract which defendant had with bankrupt, holder must prove his title.

In action by assignee of purchaser of bankrupt's estate against defendant for breach of contract claimed to be part of property assigned, plaintiff must prove his title to such claim, it having been denied.

4. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 158(12)—Parol evidence as to what property of bankrupt's estate was sold at private sale by trustee was properly excluded; proceedings being matters of record (Code Civ. Proc. § 1905).

In action by assignee of purchaser of bankrupt's estate against defendant for breach of contract claimed to be part of property assigned, court properly excluded parol testimony offered for purpose of showing what transpired at bankruptcy sale, since such proceedings were matters of record and should be proved by certified copies thereof, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1905.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by D. F. Appling against the Minarets & Western Railway Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cosgrave & Barstow, of Fresno, for appellant.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes and Lee A. Dayton, all of Los Angeles, and Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and Dan F. Conway, all of Fresno, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment of nonsuit.

The complaint states a cause of action for damage. At the opening of the trial, the court directed the plaintiff to proceed with proof of his title to the claim sued upon. At the close of such evidence the court granted the motion for a nonsuit.

The evidence discloses: That the A. Meister Sons Company was, on January 20, 1923, a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing rolling stock and equipment for railroads and also machinery of a general character. That on the day mentioned the said corporation proposed to the Minarets & Western Railway Company, a corporation, the defendant herein, that it would manufacture for the defendant two certain type gasoline rail cars for a total consideration of $12,340 each. This offer was accepted January 29, 1923. It was for an alleged violation of this agreement that the plaintiff brought this action. The evidence further disclosed that on June 26, 1924, the A. Meister Sons Company was adjudicated a bankrupt in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California and J. O. Boyd was appointed trustee. There was also received in evidence a certified copy of an order of sale of the assets of said bankrupt, directing the trustee to sell the personal property belonging to said estate at private sale, subject to the confirmation of the court. The next document received in evidence was the order confirming the trustee's sale, which recited: "Application having been made by the trustee herein for the sale of stock in trade, fixtures, accounts receivable and other personal property mentioned and described in the inventory on file herein, and belonging to the above estate * * * and said stock in trade, fixtures, accounts receivable and other personal property having been sold to Feigenberg Bros., for the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, * * * it being the intention of said sale that said Feigenberg Bros. shall receive all of the assets of the estate for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) as is and subject to liens of encumbrances. * * * It is hereby ordered that said sale be and the same is hereby confirmed as hereinbefore set forth. * * *" Then follows in evidence an assignment dated November 18, 1924, by Feigenberg Bros. to the plaintiff, D. F. Appling, by which the former sold and assigned to the latter "all the property, real and personal, conveyed to first parties by sale made by J. O. Boyd, trustee of the estate of The A. Meister Sons Company, a corporation, bankrupt, * * * and being all the property of the said bankrupt, including leasehold interests, machinery, equipment, stock in trade, supplies, material, office equipment, notes, bills and accounts receivable, patent rights, good will of business, including all items set forth and described on four separate inventories describing property of said bankrupt estate, located at Sacramento, Fresno and Woodland, in California. * * * It is the object and purpose of this instrument to convey to and vest in second party above named all right, title and interest in and to the property of the said The A. Meister Sons Company, bankrupt, conveyed to or acquired by first parties or either of them at such bankrupt sale." There was then introduced in evidence the report of J. O. Boyd, the trustee of the estate, who reported to the court that upon his appointment he immediately took possession of the property of the bankrupt and had filed an inventory of the same. That thereafter "all of said property mentioned in said inventory and all the personal property of the estate was offered for sale." It then recited the numerous endeavors made to sell the same and it was finally sold to Feigenberg Bros. Plaintiff then offered proof that at the sale mentioned in the foregoing evidence, the claim against the defendant was discussed as a probable source of income to the purchaser. An objection to the offer was sustained. Plaintiff also sought to prove his alleged cause of action for damage, objection to which was sustained on the ground that plaintiff had not proved ownership of the cause of action. The plaintiff then rested, and the court granted a judgment of nonsuit.

It appears that the nonsuit was granted upon the ground that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors ever acquired title to the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint for the following reasons: That the cause of action was never listed as an asset of the bankrupt estate, nor in the proceedings leading up to the sale of property of the estate to the predecessor in interest of the plaintiff herein was there ever any attempt made by the trustee to sell the same nor any attempt made to confirm such a sale. The evidence introduced by plaintiff does not disclose any reference to a claim owned by the A. Meister Sons Company, the bankrupt, against defendant. The verified schedule of assets required to be filed by the bankrupt was not offered in evidence. Neither was there offered in evidence by plaintiff the inventory in said estate, although the court suggested that it be introduced. The law requires that such inventory be made by the trustee and filed in the proceedings in bankruptcy. Section 70b of the Bankruptcy Act (11 USCA § 110(b)). Such an inventory was made and filed in said estate and at several places in the trustee's report reference was made to the inventory.

[1] We believe that we may proceed upon the theory that such schedule and inventory does not contain any reference to the claim upon which the plaintiff brings this action. Among the disputable presumptions, section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 6 thereof, provides: "That higher evidence would be adverse from inferior being produced." It has been held that the foregoing presumption is very strong when documentary evidence is not produced. 10 Cal. Jur. 780; Del Campo v. Camarillo, 154 Cal. 647, 98 P. 1049; 10 Cal. Jur. 850.

[2] The Bankruptcy Act provides that the Supreme Court of the United States shall prescribe all necessary rules, forms, and orders as to procedure and for carrying said act into effect. U. S. Compiled Stats. § 9614, 30 Stats. at Large, c. 541, § 30 (11 USCA § 53). In conformity with this statute said court has prescribed the general orders in bankruptcy. Rule 18 of said orders (see 11 USCA § 53) provides that sales shall be made by public auction unless otherwise ordered by the court and, further, that upon application to the court, and for good cause shown, the trustee may be authorized to sell any specified portion of the bankrupt's estate at private sale; in which case he shall keep an accurate account of each article sold and the price received therefor and to whom sold, which account he shall file at once with the referee. The sale here made of the property of the estate was made at a private sale. The order confirming the sale recites that "application having been made by the trustee herein for the sale of the stock in trade, fixtures, accounts receivable, and other personal property mentioned and described in the inventory on file herein and belonging to the above estate * * * and the same having taken place and said stock in trade, fixtures, accounts receivable, and other personal property having been sold, * * * it is hereby ordered that said sale be and the same is hereby confirmed as hereinbefore set forth." At no place does the record of this action disclose any claim to the cause of action upon which this suit is based. Neither has the schedule of assets made and filed by the bankrupt in the bankruptcy proceeding nor the inventory of the property of the trustee filed in the action been offered in evidence, and, as heretofore stated, the presumption is that they would be adverse to appellant. There is therefore no mention made in any of the proceedings in bankruptcy of this claim of the plaintiff. In the assignment from Feigenberg Bros. to appellant it is recited that the assignment is of "all the property, real and personal, conveyed to first parties by sale made by J. O. Boyd, as Trustee of the estate of The A. Meister Sons Company, a corporation, bankrupt, on or about October 15th, 1924, and confirmed by the United States District Court of the Northern District of California, on or about said date and being all the property of the said bankrupt, including leasehold interests, machinery, equipment, stock in trade, supplies, material, office equipment, notes, bills and accounts receivable, patent rights, good will of business, including all items set forth and described on four separate inventories describing property of said bankrupt estate. * * *" There is no mention made in said bill of sale of the cause of action here sued upon. In the opening brief, appellant claims that, because the trustee of the bankrupt is vested by operation of law with the title of the property of the bankrupt (Bankruptcy Act § 70a, 11 USCA § 110(a)), and, further, that because it is the duty of the trustee to collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and further to close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interest of the parties in interest (Bankruptcy Act § 47 [11 USCA § 75]), and that under section 2 of said act, courts of bankruptcy are invested with such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and these being the only directions in the act respecting sales, sales are entirely informal, and the trustee may sell without order of the court and on such terms as he chooses.

We are of the opinion that, the sale having been made at private sale, it was necessary under rule 18 that an accurate account of the sale of the chose in action, here sued upon, together with the price and to whom it was sold, be filed with the referee in bankruptcy. Under the record here made, the claim sued upon is nowhere mentioned in the bankruptcy proceeding. A general statement to the effect that it was intended to convey all of the assets of the estate as heretofore set forth, is relied upon by appellant to establish a sale of this alleged cause of action. We believe the record is not sufficient to show a conveyance of title to this plaintiff.

In Ellis v. Feeney & Sheehan Bldg. Co., 187 App. Div. 481, 176 N. Y. S. 61, it was held that, as certain property was not inventoried as an asset of the bankrupt estate, nor as property to which the trustee claimed to have any right or title, nor mentioned in the appraisal nor in any transfer from the trustee to plaintiff's assignor, there was no assignment of the cause of action proved. It is true that in this case it was held that an unauthorized sale could be ratified by the court, but we are of the opinion that, to ratify such a sale, the record must show that the court knew it was so doing. In the case at bar, the claim there sued upon is nowhere mentioned.

In Shesler v. Patton, 114 App. Div. 846, 109 N. Y. S. 286, at page 287, it is said: " * * * The first question requiring consideration is whether or not such purchase vested in him a cause of action against defendant. This question must be answered in the negative. The schedules of the bankrupt contained no claim against the defendant. No claim against her was attempted to be sold by the trustee."

In Re Butler Candy Co., Inc. (D. C.) 8 F.(2d) 311, it was held that a sale of a bankrupt's assets at private sale, on petition of the trustee, describing the property, and on which the offer was based, did not include life insurance policies, which were not scheduled, mentioned in the petition, nor known to the trustee or creditors, and which, if known, were not such property as would have been sold.

In Segen v. Fabacher, 136 La. 568, 67 So. 369, it was held that a sale of a bankrupt's assets must be made in accordance with the Bankruptcy Act and title to any of said assets cannot pass from the estate of the bankrupt to a purchaser except by a sale in accordance with the provisions of said statute.

In Cook v. Teitelman, 102 Conn. 574, 129 A. 546, 6 A. B. R. (N. S.) 256, a lease had not been inventoried as a part of the bankrupt's estate. Under an order authorizing the trustee to sell all goods, wares, and merchandise and fixtures of said bankrupt, a sale was made to defendant. Notwithstanding that defendant at the time of the sale understood he was buying the interest of the bankrupt in the lease and the trustee assented thereto, and the lease was assigned and transferred to him as the purchaser, the court held the sale was void because the referee never authorized the sale nor approved of it after it was made.

Among the cases cited by appellant is In re Levinson, etc., 1 F.(2d) 851, which he claims is directly in point. This case was before the Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. The opinion and decree of the District Court in the same case is reported at 297 F. 490, said decree being affirmed. It was held in the opinion of the District Court that one Clinton, a trustee, who resigned as such trustee to become a bidder at a sale of the assets of his bankrupt, and who purchased the assets of the estate, was held not to have acquired title at said sale to notes which he knew belonged to the estate, but which were not scheduled nor mentioned in the inventory on which the sale was based, nor known to his successor to be in existence, though the bill of sale executed to him purported to convey all the assets. But Clinton, having color of title, could file proof of such claim with the trustee of the estate against whom the claim was a charge, within the time allowed by law and it could be amended after the expiration of the said time by substituting the real owners as the claimants. In re Levinson (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 851, is the same case upon appeal. The question there presented and decided was that Clinton, the former trustee, who presented the claim as his own, had a color of title which permitted the filing of the amended claim by the real owner. No question of the real ownership of the claim was decided by the court of appeal. It was merely held that Clinton had "color of title," and the claim presented by him was sufficient to allow the real owners to be substituted in the claim and thereby defeat the time limit for the presentation of claims. "'Color of title' is defined to be that 'which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title.'" Words and Phrases (1st Ed.) vol. 2, p. 1264, and cases there cited. In our opinion the case is not in point.

[3] It is also claimed by appellant that sales of the character in question are not subject to collateral attack. In the case at bar plaintiff is seeking to recover upon a chose in action, and alleges in his amended complaint that on June 26, 1924, the A. Meister Sons Company was adjudicated a bankrupt, and, by proceedings duly and regularly had, all of the assets of the said corporation were sold by the trustee in bankruptcy and the plaintiff has succeeded to and now owns all the assets of the A. Meister Sons Company, bankrupt. This allegation is denied by the answer of defendant. Having alleged his title and it having been denied, it was incumbent upon him to prove it. Bovard v. Dickenson, 131 Cal. 162, 63 P. 162; Gilbert v. Miller, 68 Cal. App. 40, 228 P. 662.

[4] Appellant further contends that the court erred in excluding parol testimony to show what transpired at the sale. But we are of the opinion that such evidence was properly excluded, the sale in bankruptcy being a judicial sale, the proceedings held in the matter of the estate of the bankrupt were all matters of official record and should be proved by certified copies thereof (section 1905, Code Civ. Proc.), as they contain the legitimate evidence of the sale.

We are of the opinion that the plaintiff, having failed to prove his ownership of the cause of action, the court was right in granting the motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1929.

Habeas corpus ⇨ 120—Order discharging habeas corpus writ held "final adjudication," requiring discharge of writ in subsequent proceedings between same parties on identical facts.

Order discharging writ of habeas corpus to secure custody of minor child constitutes a "final adjudication," requiring discharge of subsequent writ by same petitioner on behalf of same minor child on identical state of facts and against same parties.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by Donald B. Beers to be directed to Paul McMillan and another to secure custody of petitioner's minor child. Writ discharged.

Nelson & Burns, of Santa Ana, for petitioner.

Head, Wellington & Jacobs, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. Through the medium of a writ of habeas corpus issued by order of this court, the father of a minor child (petitioner herein) seeks its custody.

By the answer and return to the writ it appears that in a former habeas corpus proceeding instituted in the superior court by the petitioner herein in behalf of the same minor child, on the identical state of facts as are alleged in this proceeding, and against the same persons who are respondents herein, the writ was discharged. That such order constitutes a final adjudication as to the parties in this proceeding is squarely decided in each of the cases entitled In re Holt, 34 Cal. App. 290, 167 P. 184; In re Frazier, 50 Cal. App. 45, 194 P. 510; and In re Gille, 65 Cal. App. 617, 224 P. 784.

MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. v. HOLLMAN et al. (Civ. 6859.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 18, 1929.

1. Trover and conversion ⇨17—Equitable owner should possess automobile or be registered owner, to sue for conversion (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45; St. 1923, pp. 517, 524; St. 1925, pp. 398, 402, § 7).

Equitable owner of automobile should either have actual possession thereof or be registered owner, under Motor Vehicle Act, § 45 (St. 1923, pp. 517, 524; St. 1925, pp. 398, 402, § 7), to maintain action for possession or conversion thereof.

2. Execution ⇨179—Creditor, levying on automobile under judgment against registered owner, could not recover against sheriff or successful third party claimant, who was equitable owner and possessed car at time of seizure (Motor Vehicle Act, § 45; St. 1923, pp. 517, 524; St. 1925, pp. 398, 402, § 7; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 710, 710½).

Where judgment debtor's wife, interposing third party claim to automobile after levy thereon by execution, was equitable owner by purchase and by virtue of having made payments thereon, and was in actual possession of automobile at time of seizure, and was unaware that her husband, who acted as her agent in purchasing it, had registered automobile in his name, husband's judgment creditor was not entitled to recover in action against sheriff and his surety, and such third party claimant, to whom sheriff delivered the automobile, notwithstanding want of registration in third party claimant's name, as required by Motor Vehicle Act, § 45 (St. 1923, pp. 517, 524; St. 1925, pp. 398, 402, § 7); undertaking of third party claimant being required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 710, 710½, to provide for payment of value of property claimed, if property is finally adjudged to belong to judgment debtor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Maryland Casualty Company against Eleanore Hollman and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman, Alexander & Bacon, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff first obtained a money judgment against John E. Hamilton and others. An execution upon said judgment was issued against the property of said Hamilton and levied upon an automobile, which was registered in Hamilton's name. Defendant Eleanore Hollman, who is now Hamilton's wife, filed a third party claim with the sheriff, and a bond under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 710 and 710½. The sheriff released and delivered the car to her. Plaintiff then brought this action against the sheriff, joining Mrs. Hollman and the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company, the surety on the bond. Judgment was for the defendants. Plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment and for a judgment in its favor upon the findings was denied. Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll alone, claiming to be entitled to judgment upon the findings.

The findings, so far as necessary to a consideration of the points on appeal, are as follows:

"That at the time of the levy of said execution on said automobile the said automobile was in the actual possession and custody of defendant Eleanore Hollman. That at said time the said automobile was registered with the state of California in the name of John E. Hamilton, and the name of the legal owner registered with the state of California was H. O. Harrison Company. That the said John E. Hamilton had no right, title, or interest of any kind whatsoever in said automobile. That the said car had been purchased from the said H. O. Harrison Company by the said Eleanore Hollman on March 8, 1924. That on said date said John E. Hamilton was acting as the business agent of said Eleanore Hollman. That on said date said Hamilton purchased said Cadillac automobile from said H. O. Harrison Company for said Eleanore Hollman. That said Hamilton used the funds and moneys and property of said Eleanore Hollman to so purchase said Cadillac automobile. That said John E. Hamilton signed the contract of conditional purchase with the H. O. Harrison Company for said Cadillac car, but said signature to and execution of said document was for and on behalf of and as agent of Eleanore Hollman, and said John E. Hamilton did, without right and without authority, register said car with the state of California in his own name as registered owner. That subsequently to March 8, 1924, said Eleanore Hollman did pay each and every of the monthly payments due under the conditional contract of sale to the said H. O. Harrison Company and said John E. Hamilton paid none of them. That said Cadillac automobile was, subsequently to March 8, 1924, and to and including the 10th day of November, 1924, and at the time of the said levy of execution, in the possession of and was owned by Eleanore Hollman. That she in good faith believed that the said Cadillac automobile was registered in her name as owner, and she was in fact the actual owner of said automobile on said November 10, 1924, and said John E. Hamilton had no right, title, or interest of any kind in or to said automobile on said date, save and except only that it was improperly registered with the state of California in his name as registered owner."

"That the levy of the execution of said automobile on said date was the first actual notice to Eleanore Hollman that the said Cadillac car was not registered in her name, and that on November 12, 1924, the registry of said car was transferred to her name, and upon November 19, 1924, said Eleanore Hollman did reclaim said Cadillac automobile from Thomas F. Finn, sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and did give to said sheriff a bond. * * *

Appellant contends that, because the automobile was not registered in the name of Mrs. Hollman, as required by section 45 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517, at page 524; Stats. 1925, p. 398, at page 402, § 7), she had no title, and hence appellant should have prevailed in this action. The section referred to requires the parties to a transfer of a motor vehicle to report such transfer to the division of motor vehicles, and subdivision (e) of the section reads:

"Until said division shall have issued said new certificate of registration and certificate of ownership as hereinbefore in subdivision (d) provided, delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose."

Appellant relies upon the following authorities: General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Dallas, 198 Cal. 365, 245 P. 184, Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435, and Crandall v. Shay, 61 Cal. App. 56, 214 P. 450. The first case cited deals with section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 199). It holds that the plaintiff, who had purchased a motor vehicle from the registered legal owner, Modesto Motor Company (subject to conditional sale contract with a motorist in possession), but who had not caused the registration to be changed to its name, could not maintain an action in conversion against the sheriff for having attached the vehicle as for the debt of the Modesto Motor Company. The plaintiff was the equitable owner, but not the registered owner. The decision emphasizes the fact that the plaintiff was not in possession. The second case above listed holds that, under section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act of 1919, a purchaser and transferee who has neglected to register is estopped from maintaining a possessory action against a subsequent purchaser, who has purchased for value and in good faith from the registered owner. The third case, which, appellant asserts, is direct authority for its position here, holds that a purchaser of an automobile who has not yet had the transfer registered in his name may not maintain an action for possession and for damages for detention against a sheriff for seizing under a writ of attachment issued against the property of the seller, who was in possession and still the registered owner at the time of the attachment. The purchaser in that case was not in possession, however, as was Mrs. Hollman in this case.

[1] Respondents contend that the foregoing cases are distinguishable from the instant case, in that they are either based upon estoppel, or hold that the equitable owner who is not in possession cannot maintain an action for possession or conversion, if he has neglected to make himself also the registered owner, by complying with section 45 of the Motor Vehicle Act. In other words, an equitable owner must either have actual possession or be registered. This may not be the true and only distinction between the several cases cited herein, but it at least reconciles them with others cited by respondent, particularly Pendell v. Thomas (Cal. App.) 272 P. 306. There it is held that plaintiff, who was the purchaser, equitable owner, and in possession of an automobile, could maintain an action in conversion against a defendant who took it from his possession under a writ of attachment issued against the property of the one who still remained the bare registered owner and not in possession. We quote from the decision: "It will be observed that the plaintiff not only had possession of the property, but that he had a right to its possession; also that he was the equitable owner of it. To enable one to recover for the conversion of personal property it is not necessary to have legal title. A person in the actual and rightful possession is entitled to maintain such an action, even though upon a transfer to him there was a failure to comply with section 45 of the Motor Vehicle Act. Moody v. Goodwin, 53 Cal. App. 693, 200 P. 733."

It is not contended by appellant that the findings in the instant case contain any facts which would operate as an estoppel. The facts as found by the court show that Mrs. Hollman, the third party claimant, was both the equitable owner and in actual possession at the time of the seizure by the sheriff, and that she was unaware that her husband had not registered the automobile in her name. For these reasons she could have maintained an action for conversion under the authority of Pendell v. Thomas, supra, notwithstanding she was not the registered owner.

Appellant contends this point is immaterial, because Mrs. Hollman, by her third party claim and bond, claimed ownership of the automobile levied upon by the defendant sheriff; that she is not the owner, because not registered, and that plaintiff should, therefore, have judgment against the sheriff, and upon the bond which Mrs. Hollman gave the sheriff. The bond given the sheriff by Mrs. Hollman was given pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure, § 710 (appearing second in Deering's Code of Civil Procedure) and 710½. The said section 710 reads as follows:

"Where property levied upon under execution to satisfy a judgment for the payment of money is claimed, in whole or in part, by a person, corporation, partnership or association, other than the judgment debtor, such claimant may give an undertaking as herein provided, which undertaking shall release the property in the undertaking described from the lien and levy of such execution."

Section 710½ requires that "such undertaking * * * shall be executed by the person * * * claiming in whole or in part, the property upon which execution is levied; * * * and said undertaking shall be conditioned that if the property claimed by the person, * * * is finally adjudged to be the property of the judgment debtor, said person, * * * will pay of said judgment upon which execution has issued a sum equal to the value, as estimated in said undertaking, of said property claimed. * * *"

[2] The bond given was executed by Mrs. Hollman as principal, and respondent the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company. It ran to the sheriff, and in terms indemnified him against all damages which he might suffer in consequence of the release of the property, and guaranteed that Mrs. Hollman would pay the judgment upon which the execution was issued, if the automobile be finally adjudged to be the property of the judgment debtor, Hamilton.

We cannot see that the wording of these sections and of the bond make the instant action essentially different from an action in conversion, even conceding that the action is properly brought against the claimant and her surety in addition to the sheriff. The complaint alleged the judgment and the levy upon the automobile, "* * * which property was then in the possession of said judgment [debtor] John E. Hamilton, who had an interest therein and right to the possession thereof. * * *" It alleged the filing of the third party claim by Mrs. Hollman, the giving of the bond, and the release from the levy by the sheriff. It alleged that Mrs. Hollman had no interest in and no right to the possession of the automobile. The prayer was that it be adjudged that at the time of the levy the automobile was the property of the judgment debtor, Hamilton, that he was entitled to the possession thereof prior to the levy, that Mrs. Hollman was not at that time entitled to the possession thereof, and that she and her surety be required to pay the judgment.

If there is a distinction between this action and an action in conversion against the sheriff alone, it is one which is of no materiality, when we consider the simple and outstanding fact that the question to be determined in the action was whether the judgment creditor had the right to collect its judgment against Hamilton out of an automobile not in his possession at the time of the levy, and in which he had no right of possession and no interest, but of which he was the bare registered owner. It would be an anomalous condition if Mrs. Hollman could maintain conversion against the sheriff, as she could under the authority of Pendell v. Thomas, supra, but could not prevail in an action brought against her after she had taken the property from the sheriff under a third party claim and bond.
